But, if these attractions rivet the traveller to this haunted region of the Rhine, how deep will be the enthusiasm and ecstacy of the antiquary and the architect when this vast cathedral shall be completed! Then will Cologne hold within its crescent-walls one of the noblest monuments of the architectural triumphs of Germany, and the most magnificent monument of Gothic architecture in Europe. Still, the merit of the design must be awarded to other times—that of its execution alone to our own. It was designed by Archbishop Engleberg, of Berg, and was begun, in 1284, by Archbishop Conrad, of Hochstedten, called the Solomon of his age. The only part which was finished is shown in the second engraving. Strange to say, the drawings of the incomplete work were lost for ages, and have only by a romantic chance been recovered in our own century. This incident, and the history of the cathedral, have been so accurately and pleasantly related by a living architect (Mr. George Godwin, jun., F.R.S., &c.), that we shall quote his narrative:

"They dreamt not of a perishable home,
Who thus could build."

The cathedral of Cologne, if completed as proposed by the powerful mind which designed it, would probably be one of the most wonderful and beautiful monuments of the skill of man in the whole world;—its enormous size, the elegance of the details, its completeness a a whole, would alike strike the beholder as unequalled and surprising. Cologne may be termed the Rome of this side the Alps, containing more objects of interest to the architectural antiquary than any city in this position. Foremost amongst them all, however, is the cathedral, even unfinished as it is. No one who has seen it will easily forget the effect produced by it, or cease to desire that it should be worthily completed, knowing, as nearly all do know, that, by a series of lucky accidents, some of the original drawings are preserved to us. The designs for the principal front, which it seems were formerly kept, one with the archives of the cathedral, and the other in the masons' lodge, were lost when the French occupied the city in 1794. In 1814 one of the drawings, namely, that which represents the north tower, was accidentally discovered in a corn-loft at Darmstadt, by a decorative painter, who was about to occupy the loft as a studio. Being drawn on parchment, it had been used for many years as the bottom of a sort of tray in which to dry beans, but, with the exception of the marks left by the nails which fastened it to the wooden rim, and a fracture in the lower part of it, was little injured. It fortunately came into the possession of Dr. Moller, the distinguished architect, of Darmstadt, who published a fac-simile of it in 1818. At the time of the discovery of this drawing M. Willemin was publishing his work, "Monuments Français inédits," and Dr. Moller was struck by the analogy which appeared between the style of a large window represented in the twelfth number of that work, and that of the details of the tower at Cologne. He mentioned the circumstance to M. Boisserée, who was then occupied on his large work, on the cathedral of Cologne; inquiries were made of M. Willemin, and it was learnt that the window in question formed part of a very large drawing of a church on parchment, and then in the possession of M. Imbart, an architect, at Paris, who had obtained it from M. Fourcroy. M. Fourcroy, it seems, had found it in Belgium. M. Boisserée contrived to purchase the drawing, and it was at once recognised as representing a part of the façade of Cologne cathedral.* It was afterwards sold to the King of Prussia, and his Majesty presented it to the city of Cologne. United with the drawing discovered at Darmstadt, it represents the whole of the principal front. The size of the drawings, together, is about 6 ft. 6 in. wide, and 15 ft. long.

* It is supposed that the plan had been carried from Cologne about the middle of the 15th century, to serve as a model for the numerous churches which were then built in the Low Countries.

COLOGNE CATHEDRAL.

The longevity, it may almost be said the immortality, of an idea hardly needs illustration; if it did, the design of this cathedral might in part serve the purpose. Recorded centuries ago by the mind which conceived it, the intention is but now about to be fulfilled; and what its realisation at this moment may further lead to yet remains to be seen. Another and an analogous instance is now before us. Two hundred years ago Sir Christopher Wren proposed to rebuild London with the Exchange in the centre, and the main streets radiating from this building on all sides. Circumstances were opposed to it, and the intention has lain dormant. In our day, however, one of our countrymen, called in to advise on the rebuilding of Hamburg, has re-urged this idea, and, if I am rightly informed, so successfully, that the senate is about to adopt it in the new city. The emanations of the mind, like the mind itself, may be said to endure for ever—they continue to operate through the world, and to influence the future long after their origin has been lost sight of.

To return, however, to Cologne cathedral. Thanks to the power of steam, and the situation of the city on the Rhine, this structure has been viewed by most of us, and it would be impertinent to make remarks upon that with which you are as well or better acquainted than myself. A short time ago, however, M. Daly, the editor of the "Revue Générale de l'Architecture," of Paris, kindly forwarded to me some information on the late repairs and decoration of the building, and an account of the enthusiastic efforts which are being made, not merely in Germany, but in other countries, to ensure the completion of the building. It is the substance of this information, which seems to be sufficiently interesting to be worthy your attention, that I propose briefly to bring before you.

The first stone of the present building was laid on the 14th of August, 1248, and the choir was consecrated September 27th, 1322, or seventy-four years afterwards. It was more than a hundred years after this date before the south tower was taken up to its present altitude, hardly half its proposed height; the north tower is even now not more than twenty feet, perhaps, above the ground.

When the soldiers of the French republic had possession of the city at the end of the eighteenth century, the cathedral was used by them as a stable, and was considerably injured. Moreover, iron cramps, which had been extensively used in the construction, caused great ravages in the stonework, and there being no funds with which to repair the evil as it became apparent, the destruction of the building seemed more than probable. After the peace, endeavours were made to restore the damage, but it was not till 1821, when the King of Prussia interfered zealously, that the matter was taken up in earnest.

In 1829 the complete restoration of the choir was commenced (including the rebuilding of the flying buttresses, galleries, and windows), which most desirable work is now achieved, and as it would seem most satisfactorily. A very hard and durable stone has been employed in the restoration, and the architect has studiously avoided the use of iron in the masonry, so far as was practicable, either dovetailing the stones together where additional solidity was required, or, when this was deemed insufficient, employing clamps of bronze. The outlay since 1829 alone has been more than £40,000, partly furnished by the Prussian Government. The immense scaffolding which still fills the choir of the cathedral is about to be taken down, so as to expose the decorations that have been applied.

Beneath the whitewash with which the interior of the choir was disfigured in the last century, they discovered the painted decorations that originally adorned it, and in which the colours were applied with a sobriety and wisdom rarely met with in the works of the middle ages. All the principal parts of the construction, such as the columns and ribs, have been re-covered with a yellowish plaster, to remove the cold tint of the stones, the joints of the masonry being nevertheless left visible. The smooth surfaces of the roof are painted in imitation of the pierre de tuf, of which indeed the roof is constructed. Some red bands or fillets separate the light colour of the plain parts from the deeper tone of the ribs, and serve to give the latter more relief. The leaves and ornaments of the key-stones, the capitals, indeed all the sculptured portions, are gilt with a backing of bright red.

PRESENT STATE OF COLOGNE CATHEDRAL—SIDE VIEW.

In the heads of the pointed arches above the triforium, angels are painted on a ground of sculptured ornaments, gilt. The wall of the cloister, even, is covered with paintings of the fourteenth century. On the interior surface they represent processions, upon a gold ground; on the exterior figures of saints, on a blue ground, powdered with stars. The mouldings of the pointed arches which enclose the figures, are also very richly painted.

Fourteen colossal statues, representing our Saviour, the Virgin Mary, and the apostles, are placed against the pillars of the choir, and are said to be models of monumental sculpture and polychromatic decoration. The draperies are painted to imitate rich damask stuffs, adorned with embroideries, coloured and gilt, representing animals and birds, executed with skill. It was much feared, in consequence of the thick coating of dirt with which time had covered these figures, that the removal of the painting would have injured the effect of the sculpture; so far from this, however, the success is most complete.

This magnificent assemblage of architecture, sculpture, and painting, is made perfect by a series of stained-glass windows, of the commencement of the fourteenth century, which, instead of injuring the effect of the mural paintings, by the coloured light which flows through them into the beautiful structure, harmonize the whole, and produce an effect which I can well conceive to be very striking.

The choir, with its side aisles and chapels, is, as already mentioned, the only part of the cathedral which is complete, the towers and nave remaining in an unfinished state—a splendid promise only, an outline of a magnificent intention, which yet remains to be filled up and made perfect. It seems possible, however, that it may not remain so much longer. Fired by the successful restoration of the ancient works, and anxious to realize the original idea in all its integrity and unity, the inhabitants of Cologne have determined on continuing the works vigorously. On the 15th of February, 1842, a society was organized for that purpose, and the day was set apart for religious intercession and rejoicing. The enthusiasm displayed on this occasion is said to have been extraordinary; a procession of more than 5000 persons took part in the ceremonies of the day; Protestants and Roman Catholics, Liberals and Conservatives, joined on one common ground, and outvied each other in generous efforts to ensure the completion of this fine monument bequeathed by the middle ages to modern times.

This outburst of feeling on the part of the inhabitants of Cologne has been responded to, not merely throughout Germany, but in the neighbouring countries; branch societies have been formed for the purpose, literary men and artists have associated to publish magazines, the profit of which is to be devoted to the cathedral, a committee to receive subscriptions has been organized in France, and another in Rome; the King of Prussia has made himself responsible for £800 per annum, and has further suggested that each of his provinces should defray the cost of one of the flying buttresses. The King of Bavaria, as in most similar instances, is not behindhand in the good work, but has formed committees in all the towns of his kingdom, and moreover has commissioned the manufactory of stained glass at Munich to produce three fine windows for the cathedral, at the cost of £3200. In Germany all classes of society, all professions, all faiths, have spontaneously united in favour of the projected work, not merely, as M. Daly suggests, under the influence of a lively interest in the welfare of the arts and for their sublime creations, or even from a sentiment of piety, but from a new-born feeling of the re-establishment of moral unity in Germany, and a desire to retrieve its ancient grandeur. Piety, art, and patriotism—love of God, love of the beautiful, love of country—unite in favour of the completion of a building in which modern Germany will give her hand to the Germany of the middle ages, across three centuries of discord. Architecture has been too often called on to embellish the triumphs of brute force; in it is case it may record the willingness of a nation to be united. From the Bible we learn, continues M. Daly, that the first great monument with which architecture ornamented the world was the Tower of Babel—that is to say, of confusion, of discord. It is worthy of the architecture of our day to complete a noble edifice, high upraised, which may be at once a temple of God and a record of union.

Another account relates that, in the year 1815, in a family of the village of Armsbach, in the Odenwald, a district of the Grand Duchy of Hesse, a large piece of old parchment had been used for a number of years to dry fruit upon, till a son of the family on repairing to some distant school, took the parchment to nail round his trunk for protection from wet; and, on his arrival in Darmstadt, left it in a hotel there, where it was thrown aside as rubbish. A short time afterwards, an artist, who was painting some decorations for a military festival to be given in the hotel, had occasion for some parchment, when the piece left by the young traveller was sought and given to him.

The larger of the annexed engravings represents the front view of the cathedral, with its two majestic steeples, rich in tracery, and the elaborateness of middle-age art, almost beyond parallel, and a specimen of the unrestrained loftiness characteristic of this luxuriant style; the entire design presenting a matchless triumph of its "lancet-arched" perfection. Of the steeple on the left, the foundation-stone was laid last autumn by his majesty the present King of Prussia; of the steeple on the right two stories have been raised for centuries. The choir is finished, as seen in the side view (the second engraving), which contains the best view of the structure as far as completed.

The whole of Germany are anxiously looking to the completion of this great work as a national undertaking. Committees have been formed in all the towns for raising the requisite funds; and the munificence and taste of the sovereign have inspired the humblest of his subjects. The Germans resident in foreign countries have formed auxiliary societies for the same purpose, and have already forwarded considerable sums to the central committee at Cologne. We learn, too, with pleasure, that the Germans resident in England—and their number and means are far from inconsiderable—are about to subscribe to this noble work; let us hope that they will be guided by British wealth, seeing that the vast work at Cologne will be in style a lasting monument of the best period of our own national architecture. The dominion of tasteful art should be co-extensive with civilization itself.

The completion of Cologne cathedral is at this moment exciting considerable interest among the élite of the fashionable world; and the Chevalier Bunsen is giving a series of soirees, at which a large copy of the original design, by M. Reuch, is exhibited to the company; and the annexed engravings have been drawn by the same artist.

THOMAS MOORE.

"The poet of all circles, the delight of his own."

We this week have much gratification in introducing to our readers the Bard of Erin. His right to a niche in our gallery cannot be questioned; his poetry has been more extensively read than that of any living author. Those who have not sought it otherwise have become familiar with it through the medium of the charming music to which it is wedded; and it would be difficult to find an educated individual in Great Britain unable to repeat some of his verses. No writer, living or dead, has enjoyed a popularity more universal. "The Melodies," the fadeless laurels of his fame, have been translated into Irish, Latin, Italian, French, Russian, and Polish.

Mr. Moore is the son of a respectable citizen of Dublin, where the poet was born on the 28th May, 1780. His infantine days seem to have left the most agreeable impressions on his memory; his home was essentially a home of love; his tastes and his friendships, formed almost in boyhood, have tinged his principles and feelings throughout life; and from the earliest there seems to have been a prophetic anticipation, by all who knew him, of his subsequent celebrity. At the age of fourteen he entered the university. While resident there he was distinguished by the most devoted attachment to fatherland, his classical attainments, and the sociability of his disposition.

Towards the close of 1799 he was enrolled a member of the Middle Temple, in London; and the year following he published "The Odes of Anacreon," and at once "became famous." Assuming the name of "Little," our author published, in 1801, a volume of poems, chiefly amatory. In the autumn of 1803 he embarked for Bermuda, where he had obtained the appointment or Registrar to the Admiralty. This was a patent place, the duties of which were of a nature so unsuited to his temper of mind, that he found it necessary to fulfil them by means of a deputy, by whose subsequent misconduct he suffered severe pecuniary loss, from which he relieved himself by that most brilliant production of his pen, "Lalla Rookh." In 1804 he resigned his appointment; and two years after he published his remarks on the manners and society of America in his "Odes and Epistles."

The fate of Addison with his countess dowager holding out no encouragement for the ambitious love of Mr. Moore, he wisely and happily allowed his good taste to regulate his choice in a wife, and married Miss Dyke, a lady of great personal beauty, most amiable disposition, and accomplished manners; with whom and his children he enjoys a life of enviable happiness.

Mr. Moore found the music of his country comparatively lost to the world, and time was rapidly diminishing that which memory alone preserved; the attempt to combine it with appropriate words was commenced in 1807. Its success is almost without parallel in the history of literature—the music of Ireland is now known and appreciated all over the civilized world.

"Lalla Rookh" appeared in 1817: for the copyright of this, the greatest and most elaborate of his works, Mr. Moore received two thousand guineas! In 1823 was published "The Loves of the Angels." While composing this poem, Mr. Moore's friend, Lord Byron, was writing another, entitled "Heaven and Earth," both authors taking the subject from the second verse of the sixth chapter of Genesis. Subsequent to this period appeared "Memoirs of Captain Rock" 1824; "The Life of Sheridan," 1825; "The Epicurean," 1827; "Life of Lord Edward Fitzgerald," 1831; "Life of Lord Byron," 1831; "History of Ireland," vol. I., 1835; "Alciphron," 1840. The enumeration of these, a portion only of his literary performances, suggests at once the scholarship and varied talents of the writer as an historian, a biographer, and a poet; in the latter capacity he is best known, and of his poetry we would now speak.

By the general consent of the ablest critics our author's place has been assigned among the first masters of the art; and though living in an age unusually prolific of poetry, he has manfully outstripped all his competitors in the race of popularity—rather a sure proof of extraordinary merit. However great the fame he may have acquired as the author of "Lalla Rookh," it is probable that as the author of "The Irish Melodies" he will descend to posterity unrivalled and alone. Lord Byron prophetically observes "that they will be perpetuated with the music, and both will last as long as music and poetry." Mr. Moore's own opinion is, "that it is the only work of his pen whose fame may boast a chance of prolonging its existence to a day much beyond our own."

In reviewing "Lalla Rookh," one of our ablest critics has said that the poetry is, as it were, "a thornless rose; its touch is velvet, its hue vermilion, and its graceful form is cast in beauty's mould."

The satirical verse of Moore is, in wit, learning, and misdescribable careless beauty, absolutely unrivalled. He doth but satirize in jest, his arrows fly in every direction beautifully feathered and unerringly directed, but they have neither barb nor venom.

With regard to our author personally, Sir Walter Scott in his diary observes that "there is a manly frankness with perfect ease and good-breeding about him which is delightful. He is a little, a very little man; his countenance is plain, but the expression so very animated, especially in speaking or singing, that it is far more interesting than the finest features could have rendered it." Lord Byron says that "Moore has a peculiarity of talents—poetry, music, voice—all his own, and that there is nothing he may not do if he will but seriously set about it. In society he is gentlemanly, gentle, and altogether more pleasing than any individual with whom he was acquainted." The kindness of his heart, the goodness of his nature, and the benevolence of his disposition are appreciated by all who have the privilege of his acquaintance.

Mr. Moore resides at Sloperton-cottage, Devizes, in Wiltshire, in the vicinity of his friend Lord Lansdowne, where he has preferred retirement to celebrity, except that which the Muses have so lavishly bestowed upon him, and resists all attempts to lure him into the arena of public life. As a scholar his learning is not only extensive but sound, and he is pre-eminent for those qualities which attract and charm in society. An engraving of Sloperton-cottage has appeared in our journal, No. 51.

ILLUSTRATED LITERATURE.

THE ENVIRONS OF READING. Edited by J. G. ROBERTSON. Vol. I.

This is an elegantly-illustrated guide through the picturesque neighbourhood of Reading, a locality alike favoured by nature and enriched with interesting antiquities and modern mansions, villas, and cottages—thus blending the attractiveness of the past and the present. The work is neither a piece of dry antiquarianism nor tedious topography, but the leading details of these branches of information are sufficiently minute for the rational tourist; and they have the somewhat rare merit of having been gathered on the spot. The author modestly presents his volume as the means of gratifying

"that spirit of inquiry and curiosity that is every day increasingly manifesting itself regarding scenes and objects, beautiful in themselves, or rendered interesting from the historical and traditionary associations connected with them. A spirit also of travelling has in these latter days become almost universal, and is by no means confined to the man of business, or the man of leisure; for those who have hitherto been accustomed to spend their holidays in idleness and dissipation are observed now to crowd the several railways, for the purpose of recreating amidst woods and fields, far away from their homes, gratifying their tastes with the beauties of nature, and improving their minds by visiting scenes of historic or poetic interest."

The work is arranged into four trips or excursions, taking Reading and its railway station as the common centre. As the tourist or the reader proceeds he cannot fail to be struck with the very attractive neighbourhood; and the country and the volume are alike stored with romance and legendary lore, as in the annexed extract:—

THE BERKSHIRE LADY.

There is a very curious and well-known ballad connected with this manor, called "The Berkshire Lady," which relates the singular and romantic circumstances that led to the marriage of Benjamin Child, Esq. (an attorney), with Miss Kendrick, the daughter of Sir William Kendrick, Bart. She resided at Calcot, and is reported to have possessed great "store of wealth and beauty," with "a noble disposition." The incidents related in the ballad are known to have taken place, having been communicated through persons of unquestionable authority. The old poem is quaintly written, and describes the first meeting of the parties to have been at a wedding, where the lady was much struck with the "sweet behaviour" and "courteous carriage" of Mr. Child, who was a remarkably handsome man. Finding her peace of mind affected by the passion she entertained for him, she resolved, after several days' consideration, on sending him a challenge, appointing, as a place of meeting, a wood near Calcot. He went there with a friend, and met the lady armed, masked, and otherwise disguised. She at once accosted him, confessed herself the author of the challenge, and gave him one hour to determine whether he would fight or marry her; with this condition, however, that he should not see her face until the marriage ceremony was completed. Overcome with astonishment at so unexpected a rencontre, he consulted with his friend, who urged him to accept the lady's offer, and they immediately repaired to church in her carriage, which she had kept waiting at a short distance. The friend was dismissed after the marriage (which, it is supposed, took place at St. Mary's Church in Reading), and the bewildered bridegroom accompanied the lady to her house at Calcot. He was led into a stately apartment, richly furnished, where he was left to ruminate on the extraordinary events of the morning. Meanwhile the lady gratified her humour, by watching from an adjoining room the confusion and embarrassment he laboured under, when the steward entered, who had received orders to affect surprise on finding him there, at the same time expressing suspicion as to his designs. He strenuously asserted his innocence, and assured him that he had been brought there by a lady. The steward retired, and at last the lady entered, as the ballad relates—

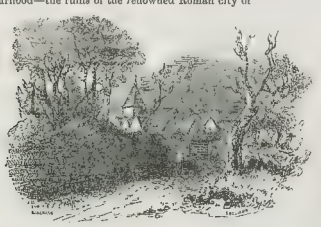
> In rich robes, to be admired
> Like a moving angel bright.

Pleased with the jest, and happy in the completion of her wishes, she questioned him on her part, and inquired whom he had ever known in her house. Satisfied, however, with the cruel state of suspense she had kept him in, he had scarcely time to stammer out an apology ere she confessed herself his bride, and the ballad concludes with—

> Now he's clothed in rich attire,
> Not inferior to a squire;
> Beauty, honour, riches, store!
> What can man desire more?

We are next induced by its general accuracy to quote the author's description of what may be considered one of the lions of the neighbourhood—the ruins of the renowned Roman city of



SILCHESTER.

It is difficult to describe the varying sensations with which a lover of the picturesque and an admirer of the mouldering evidences of by-gone greatness views a scene like the one we are describing. The tourist's first glance cannot fail to make a strong impression, more especially as he has been for miles traversing close plantations of fir, ascending and toiling up steep and fatiguing hills, rarely catching a glimpse of anything like open country, when, suddenly quitting one of these woods, he finds himself treading the soil so long held and oppressed by the masters of the world; monuments of whose vast undertakings meet the eye at every turn. Here Constantine issued his edicts to a subdued but unconquered people: here, in fierce retaliation, the armed chariots of the warlike Britons swept the plains, spreading death and destruction far and wide; and here the barbarous Saxon invaded and despoiled the conquerors, and, with fire and sword, reduced Silchester to what it now is—a heap of ruins.

Silchester, the Vindonum of the Romans, and the Caer Segont of the Britons, is thought by many to have been the ancient Calleva, respecting the site of which so many opinions have been advanced. The Roman tile Vindonum intimates it as having been the first spot in Britain where vines were planted. The tribe of Britons who were more immediately concerned in wresting this stronghold from their invaders were the Segontiaci, who dwelt in the south of Berks, west of the river Loddon, and about the banks of the Kennet, and the adjoining north of Hampshire. They called their new conquest the Caer Segont, the city of the Segontiens. Its present name of Silchester would appear to be derived from the Saxon Sel, great or high, and Ceaster, a city.

The walls are about two miles in circumference, and are in the form of an irregular octagon. The space within is stated by some to be exactly one hundred acres, being about the same extent as old London. The defence consisted of the wall, a deep fosse, and the usual external vallum, or breastwork of earth. The ruins of the wall are from twenty to twenty-five feet thick in their present state. The facing is entirely gone, and the fosse mostly filled up with the rubbish. The vallum, beyond the ditch, although ploughed yearly, is still very apparent, and can be traced almost at all points. The top of the wall is now the bed of a continuous grove of trees, of such fine growth and size, that upwards of two thousand pounds' worth of timber has been felled, we understand, within the last three years.

The city had four gates, placed exactly north, south, east, and west. From each of these gates commenced a wide street, extending entirely across the city to the corresponding gate opposite: other streets made up the spaces. At the intersection of the two main streets was a spacious square, in the centre of which were discovered the foundations of a large structure of freestone, supposed to have been a temple, as near and within it were the remains of a small ornamental building of Roman bricks, conjectured, from the great quantity of wood, coal, and ashes lying near, to have been the altar. There were also discovered, while ploughing, a large column of freestone, and other antiquities.

The area of the city presents a curious appearance in the autumn, most of the arrangements mentioned above being easily traced, by the difference in the quality of the corn which grows on the foundations of buildings to that within the squares, streets, &c.

We must take a peep at Miss Mitford's rural retreat at

THREE-MILE-CROSS.

No one can mistake for a moment the identity of this place with "Our Village"—the very first glance satisfies us that we are within the precincts of a spot with the beauties of which we would not, for an instant, suppose any of our fellow-countrymen to be unacquainted. The first building that greets our eyes is the forge, so often mentioned in the delightful pages of Miss Mitford. Then comes Master Keep's, the shoemaker, just beyond the "genteel red brick house with the only sashes in the village"—the "shop, with its snug porch," and the "cottage consisting of a series of closets, which the landlord has the assurance to call rooms." Of the inhabitants of this said cottage Miss Mitford has, with that modesty which is characteristic of genius, forborne to make any mention—but the visitor, almost instinctively, discovers that they can be none dearer than the highly-gifted authoress herself and her venerable father. Proud indeed ought Three-mile-cross and all the surrounding country to be of one who has laboured so much and so successfully to draw their beauties from obscurity, and make them known to the world at large: and they are proud of Miss Mitford—from the humble peasant who, with reverential awe, points out her abode to the inquiring traveller, to the high-born visitor who plucks a flower from her garden, or begs a slip from her geranium, to be cherished with the same veneration as the relics of those of old "who ruled the masterspirits of the day." Long may she live to wear the laurels she has won so well, and to adorn a neighbourhood that owes to her its niche in the temple of fame!

The work is very neatly printed and liberally embellished with several wood-engravings of tasteful execution; and among them Strathfieldsaye will not fail to attract the reader; together with the seat of Sir John Cope, Bart.; the centre of this noble mansion was built as a portion of a palace for Prince Henry, son of James I.; and it is an interesting specimen of the domestic architecture of that period.

BRAMSHILL HOUSE,

LITERATURE.

CELEBRATED CRIMES. By ALEXANDER DUMAS. In Two Parts. Part I. Chapman and Hall.

The records of human crime are unfortunately too fruitful, yet not perhaps more so than those of human virtue and greatness. We are no believers in the predominancy of evil over good elements in the mingled web of which man's nature is woven; and although inspiration enjoins us to believe that the human heart is "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," yet the same Providence which perceived the corruption supplied the remedy, and furnished, in the ministrations of religion, the medicines of philosophy, the authority and example of good men, and the thousand influences of society which tend to good, the means of correction, and the sources of amelioration. Yet it is not unprofitable to study the dark places of the mind, and see the excesses of which bad passions and depraved principles have been productive, in men over whom neither the dictates of religion nor the stings of conscience, neither the sanctions of morality nor the restraints of social opinion, have had sufficient power to control the workings of temptation. We would not be thought to recommend our readers to consult the police reports, or the records of the criminal courts. Too close an acquaintance with the features of the every-day vice and crime of the wretched beings who crowd the hulks and penitentiaries, or expiate their crimes on the gallows, produces only disgust, if it be free from danger. It is a mistake, however, to suppose that there is no danger, to some classes of minds, in becoming familiar with the details of atrocity and crime. To morbid and ill-regulated passions, these supply food for excitement, and stimulus for imitation; "deep calls to deep," and one crime leads to another perhaps more horrible. But the evil stops not here. You cannot touch pitch, and not be defiled. Even of the innocent and the pure the sensibilities may be blunted, and the tone of thought vulgarized, by suffering the mind to dwell on such nauseous themes. With many persons, ignorance is not the worst guardian of rectitude. The strong-minded man may, no doubt, conjoin the wisdom of the serpent with the innocence of the dove—illi robur et æs triplex; but the majority of men will most surely sustain their integrity and virtue by repelling the assaults, and shrinking from the contiguity of pollution, in whatever form, or from whatever quarter it may present itself.

Such objections do not, however, apply to a perusal of the criminal annals of other times and countries, of which distance has softened the repulsive features. What was once merely hideous or revolting, becomes terrible after an interval of centuries, when read by the native of another land, who sees the case from a different point of view, and under the influences of different feelings and circumstances. We no longer dwell on mere vulgar and commonplace horrors; remoteness of place and time gives the effect of magnitude, with a certain illusion, and the idea of imitation is rendered impossible. The crimes of Phalaris, Nero, or Domitian, the excesses of the Sforzas or the Orsini, of a doge of Venice, a Duke of Milan, or a Roman prince, owed their existence to a peculiar state of society, and can never be repeated in the modern world. The feudalism of France, of Germany, even of Britain, and in more recent days of Spain, Naples, and Sicily, in like manner, gave birth to appalling tragedies, which have vanished before the mild radiance of religion and civilization, but which will for ever remain monuments of the intolerable abuses that spring from arbitrary power, wielded by ignorance, fanaticism, or depravity, directed by a perverted will, and an unprincipled, over-mastering selfishness. The actors in such scenes were men of proud station and lofty birth, who, to the common eye, appeared the spoiled children of Fortune, surrounded by every luxury which could make life enviable, their paths strewed with flowers, and beset with flatterers; possessed of all the means of greatness, and the appliances of power which shed lustre on

> The high imperial type of this earth's glory.

Yet, amid their marble palaces, their gorgeous banquets, their gardens of Armida, their trains of servants, their throngs of suitors, in the camp and in the city, in the festal hall, in the glittering court, in the crowded cathedral, they were not safe from the stings of remorse, from the tortures of their own bad passions, from the gnawings of the worm that never dies. The history of such men is pregnant with lessons of awful import. It is interesting to trace the progress of crime, with its slow but certain retribution, to see the ingredients of their poisoned chalice commended to their own lips, to know that they were not often scarce from the Até of human vengeance, while doomed to the awful certainties of death and an after-coming judgment.

For the reasons we have assigned, we approve the plan on which the present collection is formed. The subjects selected for narration are of historical importance or of general celebrity. Part I. includes four narratives: the "Borgias," the "Countess of Saint Geran," "Joan of Naples," the famous Queen, and "Nisida," a relation of a tragical story of deep interest, which occurred at Naples so recently as 1825. Dumas has as many sins against decency and good taste to answer for as any author of his time, but he is sparing of these offences in the present work; and in the translation (which is well done, although bearing marks of haste) care has been taken to exclude objectionable passages. In two of the tales, in which the personages and their actions are inseparably interwoven with the annals of their times, too much prominence is perhaps given to details belonging properly to history, which distract the reader's attention; this, however, from the nature of the thing, was not entirely to be avoided, and it has the advantage of diversifying the narrative, and giving it greater scope and variety. The story which possesses most individual interest, and therefore takes greatest hold on the mind, is "Nisida," the heroine of which, a fisherman's daughter, was exposed to the seductions of the Prince of Brancaleone. In an attempt on the virtue of Nisida, the Prince fell by the hand of her brother, who was tried and condemned to death by the Neapolitan judges. Every exertion was made to save him, but in vain: appearances were strongly against him. Solomon, the father of Nisida, whose character is drawn with great truth and power, had an interview with his son on the day appointed for his execution; both were equally determined that the shame and disgrace of a capital punishment should not rest on their innocent relations, and the father, wrought up to frenzied excitement by the sufferings they had undergone, prevents the hand of the executioner by an act of the same character as that by which Virginius is said to have rescued from disgrace his outraged daughter. "The details of this story," says the author, "are kept in the archives of the Corte Criminale, at Naples. We have altered neither the age nor the positions of the persons who appear in the story. One of the most celebrated advocates at the Neapolitan bar pronounced the acquittal of the old man." The "Countess of Saint Geran" is one of the singular stories in which the "Causes Célèbres" of France abound, and which furnish not the weakest argument against the ancient institutions of that country. The interest turns on the abduction of the Countess's heir at his birth; and the incidents of the crime, with the interminable litigation which it produced, are wrought up with much dramatic effect. "Joan of Naples" details the eventful life of that singular woman and famous sovereign. Every one has heard of the "Borgias," and that horrid catalogue of crimes which has rendered their names for ever infamous, and furnished so many subjects to the dramatists of various countries. If we look at the number of their atrocities, and the magnitude of their consequences, we may award to this family the horrid distinction of the most abandoned villainy which the world has seen. Their history is written in a curious, though frightful, chapter of human nature.

THE ARTIZAN. A Monthly Journal of the Operative Arts. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4.

This is a new work, which it gives us much pleasure to welcome to the broad field of scientific inquiry. Its object is defined by its title; and its execution is at once sound and likely to become popular—a rare combination of worth and attractiveness. We are glad to perceive, both in profession and practice, that the editors are independent of any extrinsic aid, "and that they do not invite correspondence, so that their pages will not offer any allurement to that class of writers whose highest ambition is to see their names in print." This system must be especially advantageous in the conduct of a practical work like the present, in which authenticity is a cardinal merit. The numbers before us exhibit circumspection and consequent trustworthiness. The subjects treated of include the most important novelties in the operative arts, among which a series of papers on the anatomy and physiology of the steam-engine, illustrated with the engines of the Don Juan, is prominent in merit. In the number (4) for the present month is an unsparing exposure of one of the grand fallacies of the day, appropriately termed "The Aërial Project's Requiem."

COOPER'S NOVELS. People's Edition. Clark, Warwick-lane.

This is a remarkably well-got-up edition of the great American novelist's popular productions. The whole of "The Pilot," originally published in 3 vols., is here stowed away in about 100 octavo pages; the type is small but clear, and easily read; and it abounds with characteristic and sparkling illustrations. Nothing but a large sale can repay the expense of its production, seeing that the charge is but one shilling; and assuredly an extensive sale it well deserves.

SIR GEORGE HAYTER'S GREAT PICTURE.

This very extraordinary picture, with some other historical pictures by the same artist, Sir George Hayter, historical painter in ordinary to her Majesty, forms the exhibition now open to the public in the great room at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly. The picture is so remarkable in everything connected with it and in everything it represents that we shall be excused by our readers for giving them a more than mere general description of it, and for going into a more detailed criticism than is generally devoted to the more common works of art. The picture was undertaken by Sir George Hayter, at the earnest request of several of his intimate friends, and of several members of Parliament, high in influence, office, and authority, by whom, after some hesitation on his part, he was induced to commence the work; and it is but fair to say, that these friends never ceased, during the whole time he was employed upon it, to assist him by their advice, and cheer by their declarations of the certainty of his achieving a masterly work, and of his reaping the benefits of his unwearied industry. It is fortunate both for the public and for Sir George Hayter himself, that he had such friends about him; for so incessant was the labour, that without continual encouragement, no perseverance, however intense, and no enthusiasm, however ardent, could have surmounted the obstacles encountered by the artist in the task; and which, as the work progressed, appeared every moment to increase, from causes which originally had never been contemplated. Thus, hundreds of letters were to be written to the noblemen and gentlemen who were members of either the house of Lords or Commons at the time represented in the picture, to solicit sittings, to make appointments as to time, to ascertain where their particular places in the House of Commons were at the precise moment described in the picture. The difficulty to obtain sittings was made greater by the continual interposition of political events, by which those who had made appointments, and of course meant to keep them, with the painter, were, by preferring public business, compelled to break them. Obstacles also arose from the difficulty of ascertaining many facts connected with the scene of the picture, which could only be obtained from information which persons difficult of access could impart; and when all these obstacles were surmounted, the difficulty for the composition of the picture was very great, and the forming of a correct scale for reducing the many figures to be represented from the size of life to a size commensurate with pictorial representation was a labour which can scarcely be estimated but by those who have undertaken something of a similar task. Then came the great work of carrying out the innumerable studies for the picture to the formation of the picture itself, and painting into the picture from the studies the features and forms of four hundred portraits. There was a task beyond this of considerable difficulty, and one that required at the same time delicacy of feeling, tact of manner, and firmness of decision. All these Sir G. Hayter proved himself to be in possession of in a very eminent degree, and he brought them conjointly into operation in insisting that the whole arrangement of the picture should be his own, and that on no occasion would he diverge from the rule laid down not to sacrifice general effect and fidelity of representation for the purpose of making any individual represented, however exalted his rank or great his influence, more palpably conspicuous, or as the occupier of a particular place in the picture, when he had not in point of fact occupied such a particular position in the House of Commons at the time. When all this was overcome, there remained much more, viz., to give pictorial effect to a subject matter possessing but little that is properly called picturesque, and yet a subject that the times and the public feeling called upon to be transmitted to posterity by the pencil of the artist. This was to be conquered by the genius of a painter disciplined by long practice in his art, subdued in its enthusiasm by rigid training and yet sufficiently enthusiastic to exalt what was to be represented without idealizing matter of fact into matter of imagination. Sir George Hayter had to contend against the unpictorial effects, as may be seen in the illustration to which our notice is attached, of long lines of heads diverging almost from a point like the radii of a circle, for the purpose of giving the true effects of perspective. He had also to contend against the perpetual repetition of similar costumes—angular-cut coats, and garments untractable to the painter's art. He had, as from the illustration may very plainly be conceived, to contend with rows of straight lines, formed by the peculiar style of the unpictorial apartment in which the Parliament was assembled; and when, by a felicitous treatment of his business, he had got over these impediments to a successful result, and made the composition of the picture at once faithful to the truth, and yet compatible with such effects as art requires, he had to encounter the obstacles to brilliancy of tone, which arise from the dull and dingy colour of the room and its galleries, and the uncompromising sameness of colour, and that sameness heavy and dusky, of the clothes in which his figures were habited. But all this has been got over by the talents of the painter, and a picture produced which will not only exalt his present reputation, but transmit to future generations his name with honour, and secure to his memory the grateful tribute of many who will read in this great picture all that the illustrations of art can impart to narrative, and all that painting can do for contemporary history.

FIRST ASSEMBLING OF THE FIRST REFORMED PARLIAMENT, 1833.

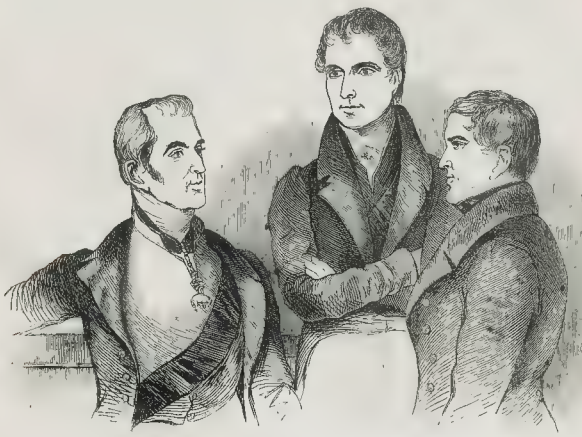
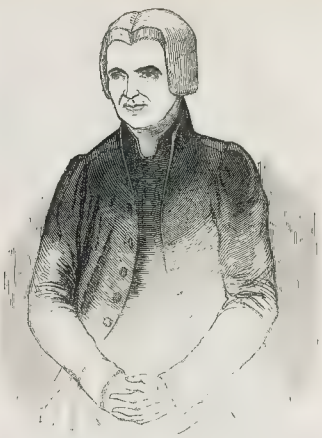
And now it may not be amiss to point out some of the details of the work, which the cuts we have introduced will render the reader more capable of understanding with ease.

The picture represents the first assembling of the first reformed Parliament after the passing of the Reform Act, in the year 1833, at the moment of moving the address to the Crown. Fortunately for the artist the mover of the address on that occasion was dressed in a military uniform, and, consequently, rendered conspicuous by his costume. The eye is immediately drawn to this figure, and the spectator at once reads in the picture the event described. The Speaker is seen something beyond the middle distance, but in advance from the background, and on either side of the house the parliamentary leaders of the two great leading parties in the state. There are to be seen Sir R. Peel, Mr. O'Connell, Lord John Russell, and other eminent men, all portraits, all correct representations, all full of animation, and most represented so characteristically of their manners and modes, and so expressive, that they are at once recognised, and stand before the beholders as in actual life, and the daily expression of the emotions and thoughts. This is the triumph of portrait painting, where only single figures or small groups are attempted; and this triumph has been gained in this picture in hundreds of instances, and by its continuation rendered the whole a work of most astonishing merit. In the foreground are seen those members of the House of Lords below the bar, and mingled with a few members of the Commons, who, at the time depicted, 1833, formed the leaders of the two great parties in the nation. Amongst them are some admirable portraits of celebrated living men. The illustrations subjoined explain a portion of this part of the picture. The left hand side of the painting contains portraits of Lord Grey and his supporters, Lord Melbourne and others of the Whig party. On the right hand are seen the Duke of Wellington, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lords Aberdeen and Lyndhurst, and others of the Conservatives; and in the middle of the foreground we behold Sir F. Burdett, Lord Castlereagh, the present Duke of Buckingham, then Marquis of Chandos, the officers of Parliament, &c., and the artist himself, who is seated, and represented as sketching the picture. These figures in the picture itself are half life-size, and are painted with great care. The management of the lights and shadows has been accomplished with the knowledge of a master; great breadth of effect has been secured where it was most difficult to avoid the breaking of the whole into detached bits, and the consequent frittering of the picture into distinct patches. The perspective is fine, and the atmospheric effect produced by the treatment and management of the light from the windows has given a depth and distance to the picture which can only be understood by seeing the picture itself. Altogether, this painting is an honour to British art. It should be seen by all foreigners who can conveniently get an opportunity to see it, as well as by all Englishmen: it will convey to the one class a more vivid and intelligible notion of an English House of Commons than they could obtain by reading volumes; indeed, such intelligence cannot be conveyed by any reading; and to the natives of Great Britain, it is almost a duty to be visitors. We could expatiate at much greater length upon the subject, but our limits prescribe brevity, and we know our readers will go and see, and judge for themselves.

THE SPEAKER—MANNERS SUTTON.



DUKE OF WELLINGTON. LORD ABERDEEN. LORD LYNDHURST.



THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

SIR FRANCIS BURDETT.

On the road between Berlin to Hamburg, near the entrance to the rich and fruitful principality of Mecklenburg, is situated a little town which surprises and charms the traveller; it is Luidwigslust, one of the prettiest and most attractive towns in Germany. Towards the middle of the last century Luidwigslust was nothing more than a mere hunting rendezvous. In 1756, however, the Grand Duke Frederick established his court there. He built himself a castle, a church, and surrounded it with houses for his officers, and several handsome and elegant streets.

The Grand Duke Frederick Francis continued to carry on the works of his predecessor. He decorated the castle and embellished the park, and, having a taste for the arts and for natural history, he formed by degrees a fine collection of pictures, of mineralogy, and of shells, which merits the attention of the visitor. Luidwigslust, being thus favoured by two sovereigns, in a short time became a place of some note.

It was in this charming residence of the princes and the nobility of Mecklenburg that the Princess Helena, Duchess of Orleans, was born. Her father, Louis Frederick, the Grand Hereditary Duke, was a prince who, to a tender and generous soul, added a noble and elevated heart. Her mother was the young Duchess Caroline of Saxe Weimar, whose picture as seen in the hereditary castle of her ancestors displays a face of extreme beauty, heightened with great intelligence. Educated at Weimar, in the great literary epoch which rendered that town illustrious, and in the bosom of a court immortalized by the names of Goethe and Schiller, in the midst of the most distinguished men of Germany and of other countries, who were there gathered together under the affectionate patronage of her parents, the Princess Caroline was remarkable for the possession of the most charming qualities of mind and person. The inhabitants of Weimar called her their tutelary saint; and a German writer, who had watched her progress in life from the cradle, in speaking of her, says—"Es war ein himliches Gemüth" (that she was a heavenly character).

Thus, both by her father's and mother's side, the Duchess of Orleans became endowed with all those qualities which engrave the names of princes in the hearts of their people—with all which ennobles their memory in the eyes of artists and poets.

Nevertheless, a great misfortune hovered over the cradle surrounded by so much splendour and so many virtues. The Duchess or Orleans, whilst yet but in her second year, lost her mother. Her father remarried on April 9, 1818, with the Princess Augusta of Hesse Homburg. Eighteen months after this event, death deprived his subjects of their prince, and his children of their parent's love.

The Duchess of Orleans had already lost a young brother whom she loved tenderly, at an age when he had already given to his family and his country the most pleasing, the most hopeful expectations.

THE DUCHESS OF ORLEANS AND HER SON.

She saw him languish, droop; and in the year 1834 she received his last sigh.

Providence, in depriving the Duchess of Orleans of her sweetest and most holy affections, gave her, in the last wife of her father, an able supporter, a tender mother, whose heart, touched whilst still young by adversity, felt for the sufferings of others, and who, strengthened and fortified by the love of goodness and a feeling of duty, became early habituated to seek in the practice of religion a support against the calamities of the world, and who found in the treasures of study truer and more fruitful enjoyments than those which fortune or power could afford.

She it was who, aided by excellent masters chosen by herself, brought up and educated the Duchess of Orleans, and who, by her incessant cares, her boundless affection, and her intelligent instructions, developed those precious gifts with which Heaven has endowed the young princess. She it was who guided her first steps in life and who gave the direction to her first thoughts, profiting by every circumstance to give a just bent to her mind, and to infuse piety in her soul. It was she who accompanied her to France on the day of the royal marriage so splendid, but, alas! so soon surrounded with mourning, and who, upon learning the frightful catastrophe, traversed in haste the whole breadth of Germany to bring to the sufferer the consolation of her piety and the support of her tenderness.

The Dowager Grand Duchess had passed at Luidwigslust with her adopted daughter twenty years of a life of good works and generous thoughts.

It is necessary to have been in Germany, and to have stopped in Mecklenburg, to understand the extent of the profound respect and affection which the Duchess of Orleans has left in the hearts of all who have ever known her. Since she left Luidwigslust the whole of the population of that town have turned their eyes towards France. They subscribe to the French papers, and wait with impatience the news of Paris. The moment the Courrier arrives, the first sheet that is opened, the first column that is sought for, is that in which they hope to read the name of the young duchess. Every body follows her movements with a tender solicitude, and every family speaks of her as a cherished child who is far from them, but whom they desire to see again.

The Duchess of Orleans justifies this constancy of affection by the fidelity which she has preserved towards those whom she has once known and appreciated. In adopting, with her whole heart and soul, the land of her late husband, she has lost nothing of the recollection of her native country. Though far off, she still, in thought, sees Germany, and is interested in its progress and well-being. Her mind still follows the footsteps of those she has once loved. She participates in their happiness, she feels for their misfortunes, and from time to time, with all the promptitude of an ardent generosity, sends them tokens of sympathy, encouragement, and consolation.

Some short time back a distinguished artist died at Weimar, and the first letter of condolence which the sorrowing widow received was from the Duchess of Orleans. Another lady who went to Italy to seek under a softer climate a remedy for an enervating disease found upon her route that the orders of the Duchess of Orleans had preceded her, that everything required was provided for her, and officious agents hastened to offer her their services.

It is hardly necessary to speak of the sentiments which this princess has inspired in her second and adopted country. The whole of France knows her. Every where she has travelled her virtues are estimated, and in Paris every day discovers some noble action which gratitude reveals though her modesty would hide it.

Who does not still recollect the fêtes of Fontainebleau, where she appeared so charming and so dignified? Who does not recal those soirées of the Pavillon Marsan, where the Duchess of Orleans and her august husband collected round them those distinguished by their birth, their character, or their talent, the high functionaries of the kingdom and poets, the deputies of the people and artists?

Alas! a frightful misfortune, which has resounded through Europe like a thunder-clap, has put an end to those fêtes. But the Almighty still watches over those so cruelly chastised; and France contemplates with tenderness the young princess whom a sense of duty still supports alike in the sorrows of eternal mourning and still rising hope—in the griefs of the wife and the consolations of the mother—in the regrets for the past and the promises of the future.

SCHOOL OF DESIGN.

THE GOVERNMENT SCHOOL OF DESIGN.

The textile fabrics of our manufacturing industry are superior, in the strength and beauty of their structure, to those of all nations, whether of ancient or modern date; but in their forms and decorations they are deficient in taste, and are this moment surpassed by many of the smaller states of Europe. Saxony is superior to us in harmony of colour, Germany in ornamental combinations, and France in the variety, grace, and fitness of its embellishments. This national inferiority has arisen from our neglect of nature in the education of our ornamental designers, and from a mercenary habit of leaving the invention of our patterns to the accidental, unpaid, and uncultivated imaginations of the poor foremen of factories. The lace-runner and tambour-worker of Nottingham, the cotton printer of Manchester, the woollen dyer of Leeds, and the silk weaver of Spitalfields, have each been left to pursue their own fancies, and it has followed that, as their fathers did, so have they done—the old designs have been repeated—or, if they have ventured on any new combination, it has only been a recomposition of old patterns, or a second-hand imitation of "new fashions" imported from the Continent. No artists—no original minds—have ever been brought to rescue the manufacturing arts from their oblivious monotony, unless, indeed, it were the pedantic Kent, who decorated the petticoat of a duchess with the five orders of architecture, or good old Strutt, who added many various powderings of "pepper and salt" to the Derby ribbed hose. This long indifference to the beauty of our fabrics at length produced its inevitable consequence—a preference for foreign manufactures, and a corresponding decline in our own trade. The Government, alarmed at this state of affairs, consented, at the instance of Mr. Ewart and some other patriotic members of the House of Commons, to take the subject under their consideration, and a special committee was appointed to collect evidence, and frame a report to the House on the general bearings of the case, and on the best means to be used for promulgating in the manufacturing districts and the kingdom at large a knowledge of the art of design. This committee commenced its labours seven years ago, and sat through two sessions of Parliament, during which time they examined a vast number of witnesses from Paris, Lyons, Berlin, &c., and our great manufacturing towns, besides several of our more eminent painters and masters of public seminaries. The evidence thus collected was ably digested, and published in two goodly volumes, which bore united testimony to the facts we have stated, and to the necessity which consequently rested on the Government to take some immediate steps for the education of the people in the principles and practice of ornamental design. A grant of money was immediately made for the establishment of a School of Design in London; and, as the Royal Academy was then about to vacate its apartments in Somerset-house for the new rooms built for them in the National Gallery, Charing-cross, it was determined those rooms should be devoted to the use of the infant institution. Here, then, in the midst of a locality sacred to the lovers and familiar to the professors of British arts the first council assembled, and the first scholars entered on their labours, and here they have ever since continued. At the commencement of the school the council were fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Dyce, a gentleman combining high classical attainments with a refined taste and great dexterity in all the practical details of ornamental art. This gentleman, before he commenced the organization of the drawing classes, made a tour of the Continent, for the purpose of forming a collection of printed cottons, figured silks, paper-hangings, book-bindings, and stained glass, for the use of the school—a labour of great responsibility, but one which he succeeded in discharging to the lasting benefit of the establishment.

The school at present contains about five hundred students, besides a well-attended class for females. The object steadily pursued in their education is, not so much the acquisition of knowledge and practical skill by a mere study of the ornamental works of the ancients and the school of Raffaelle, as it is the formation of a conceiving principle in the mind of the artist himself. For this purpose they are familiarized, by various exercises, with the forms and colours of the vegetable world, and taught to select and combine them for themselves. They are, however, at the same time zealously instructed in those refined and graceful modes of composition, those lines of beauty, on which the great masters weaved, as it were, their elegant and hitherto inimitable fancies. Beginning with the more simple, they are led on, by successive lessons, to the more complicated, till, by the attainment of the alphabet of the art, and those perceptive powers on which it depends for originality, they become fit for the management of a factory, and the production of those beautiful patterns by which, as in the recent instance of Mr. Cobden's celebrated purple-and-yellow stripe, ten thousand pounds may be made in one season. We have subjoined, for the information of our country readers, a few examples of the style of the earlier lessons given in the school.

The following interesting resumé of the last report of the School of Design is from the "Art-Union":—

The council of the School of Design have laid their report before Parliament, whence is afforded a highly satisfactory review of the progress of the parent and branch institutions. It is by no means yet to be expected that this document could dwell upon any improvement in the taste of our manufactures, but it is sufficiently shown that the best means is adopted in order to secure the best results. Our manufacturers have sustained themselves in the market by the science and energy exerted in their productions; but when legitimate art shall have raised the character of our designs, the question of superiority becomes then but a simple arithmetical thesis; for everything has already been done for foreign manufactures—but everything is yet to be done for our own.

It appears from the report that the number of pupils attending the morning school was 47 in October, 1842, and at the end of six months, March 1843, the number was 76. At the former date the number attending the evening school was 170, and at the latter 220; exhibiting, during the six months, an increase of 29 in the morning school, and of 50 in the evening; thus it is sufficiently evident that the institution is appreciated—that the want of such a school has been felt. The programme of instruction comprehends drawing in outline, shadowing, drawing from the round and from nature; modelling from the antique and from nature; instruction in colouring, including oil and fresco; instruction in the history and principles of ornamental art, in the antique, medieval, and modern styles; and instruction in design for manufactures, as silk and carpet weaving, calico printing, and paper-staining. In aid of these branches of study, such books as bear upon the respective subjects are circulated among the pupils, who have also the benefit of a series of lectures on calico and silk printing, weaving by hand and by power, figure-weaving, lace-making, type and stereotype foundity, printing, framing of machinery, engraving and sculpture by machinery, and pottery and porcelain; and moreover, for the promotion of emulation among the students, prizes are proposed for given subjects.

In 1841 the council contemplated the institution of a school for the instruction of females in the art of ornamental design, for many branches of which the tastes and habits of well-informed women so eminently qualify them. This project of the council was carried into effect last October, when the female school was placed under the superintendence of Mrs. M'Ian, a lady well fitted, as her works testify, to realize the best hopes in this department.

In Spitalfields, also, a School of Design has been formed, and is carried on under the direction of a local committee, consisting partly of masters and partly of operatives. This establishment has from time to time been visited by members of the council. The director of the school at Somerset-house has made a report of the state of this school, wherein he says—"The drawings which are herewith submitted to the council seem to me to be executed in a bold and artist-like manner, and not only to augur well of the future utility of the school, but to reflect credit on the exertions of the master, Mr. Hudson, and his assistants of the normal class." When this school was visited at the end of the last year, the number of pupils was 116, but they have since increased to nearly three that number; they were principally the children of weavers, carpenters, stonemasons, cabinet-carvers, &c. &c.

The council have assisted and established schools at Manchester, York, Coventry, Sheffield, Nottingham, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Norwich, and Birmingham, and have received applications for the establishment and promotion of others at Dublin, Cork, Belfast, Liverpool, Paisley, and Glasgow. The council have not, however, extended the same assistance to the latter places, for sufficient reasons which they state, and as waiting reports of the progress of those already established.

In the autumn of 1841 and the beginning of 1842 arrangements were effected for procuring from Paris the collections of casts of ornaments at the Ecole des Beaux Arts: from these a selection has been made and placed in the principal rooms of the school.

Copies of the "Arabesques" of Raffaelle, in the Loggie of the Vatican, have also been purchased at a cost, including carriage, of £310. The expense of procuring the casts from Paris, that is, the purchase and charges of transport, was £321 1s. 3d.

Considering the increase of the duty attendant upn the growth of this establishment, the council recommend the increase of the salaries of the directors and the master of the evening-school. To that of the director, being £500 per annum, it is proposed to add £100; and that of the latter gentleman, Mr. Herbert, it is also proposed to augment.

This report, on the whole, is of the most favourable kind; indeed, more has been effected than the most sanguine expectation could have looked for; and one of the best guarantees for the success of these institutions is the numbers who seek the benefits of the instruction they afford. We have already lamented the inferiority of our designs as compared with those of France; but there are now the best grounds to hope that, in this particular, our productions will shortly compete in this respect with those of the Continent.

Various other essential improvements are either in progress or in contemplation; among them is the appointment of a competent teacher of wood-engraving, more especially in reference to the female school. And from this female school we anticipate very valuable results; we have reason to know that Mrs. M'Ian is unremitting in her efforts to render it practically beneficial, and that already it has been productive of great good.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

THIS TIME LAST YEAR!

BALLAD.

This time last year—this time last year,
How many a gentle face was near!
All smiling round a festive board,
All rivals for the kindest word
That might the happy stranger greet,
And make him feel his welcome sweet!

Far other scenes are they that now
With care and sadness fill my brow;
In vain through sorrow's gloom I trace
For that dear, happy, look'd-for place,
Where side by side, each day more near,
Heart clung to heart, this time last year!

Those sunny moments now are past,
They were too heavenly bright to last!
The smile—the angel voice I woke
To sing Love's music when it spoke—
All—all have fled and left me here,
To mourn in vain "THIS TIME LAST YEAR!"—W

A REFLECTION!

On a warm vesper of the summer skies,
Along the verdant margin of a stream,
Which sought, by many winding industries,
To screen its crystal from the scorching beam
Of lingʼring sunset 'neath dark trees, I roam'd—
And saw how vain was all its gelid hope:—
For scarce 'twas cool, when warm again it foam'd
Adown some burning, western, rocky steep
'Gainst which Dan Phœbus' wheels had fired since noon!
And thus I marked its course still changeful on:
Cold and calescent—clear and turbid soon—
Till it at last was in the Ocean gone!
And then I fell into a reverie sweet,
That such varieties WE on Life's current meet!

Do we not spring and sparkle from our birth,
Like a young streamlet, 'mid the mountains born,
That grows a-weary of its cradle-earth,
And leaves it, thoughtless of how soon forlorn
'Twill wander through strange climes—where, unacquaint,
No welcome bids it stay its course and rest:—
The more of pow'r it gathers, more distraint
Doth hurry it all homeless and unblest
Unto its common grave—the Ocean deep!
Where thousand streams like it commingling run
And end their being in eternal sleep—
Unless, unconscious of the ruling sun,
They wake a gain in far-off drifted dews
Which turn to headlong brooks the self-same path to lose!
How much more happy is a hermit lake,
That nursed in solitude with heath or fern,
Doth never its wild loneliness forsake,
Nor any wish for wandering can learn,
But is the Heavens' mirror day and night,
Like the calm breast of meek-eyed Meditation,
That looks beyond the stars for its pure light,
Turning away from earthly contemplation!
And if a storm arise to shake its peace,
How much more tranquil is its hill-swung dot
Than beds of wind-tost streams that never cease
Their restless course, nor know one kindred spot!
Better to be in home, the homeliest left,
Than seek for palace halls, to dwell there home-bereft!—W

POPULAR PORTRAITS.—No. XXXVIII.

LORD WHARNCLIFFE.

In one of the many speeches delivered by him at Drury-lane Theatre, during the possession of that edifice by the League, John Bright, whose broad brim covers a more combative brain than that which once beat under Mambrino's helmet, described Lord Wharncliffe as a man of "acute intellect and great knowledge of business." He classed his lordship among the most able men of the present Ministry, to which he also conceded that it included more men of talent than any Ministry for many years past. Friend Bright must have had an excess of candour that night, for it is but too rarely the case that political opponents speak of each other with anything approaching to truth. The tribute thus paid was honourable to both parties, and we believe his lordship's character perfectly warrants its being given. The remark was accompanied, certainly, with much regret that intellect so acute could not see the evils of the Corn-laws quite in the light in which they strike the mental vision of the fluent and indefatigable Leaguer of Rochdale, and was, to a certain extent, qualified by an anecdote of some transaction between his lordship and his tenants, that said more for his talents as a shrewd and careful man of business than for his character as a generous landlord. But, as we have nothing to do with the private affairs of any one, we leave the question as it is, only expressing our secret and peculiar opinion, that Friend Bright would have done much the same thing could himself and Lord Wharncliffe have changed places.

James Archibald Stuart Wortley, the first lord of the title of Wharncliffe, which was created in 1826, is the present Lord President of the Council. He is sprung from a race among whom talent seems to be hereditary; he is a great-grandson of the celebrated Lady Wortley Montague, whose "Letters" will delight as long as the English language shall be read; who was both the friend and enemy, both the flattered and lampooned of Pope, and who has been, in later times, embalmed in the verse of Byron, as "the charming Mary Montague." It is impossible to say what determines the bent or direction that intellect may take, but it is evident that mental superiority of some kind will run through several generations, modified, indeed, in the different individuals, but still sufficiently apparent. Thus the quick eye and graphic power of the wife of the Turkish ambassador of a past age have turned in the great-grandson to a keen comprehension of the relations of men and things, and the ability to conduct all the complicated mass of matters that are classed under the name of business. His lordship is not unmindful of the fame of his celebrated ancestress, and is rather proud of the relationship; he has published an excellent edition of the "Letters" which have linked so great a literary reputation to the name of Wortley, and we believe it was very well received by the public. His lordship, for some part of his early life, served with the army in Canada and the Cape of Good Hope, but afterwards left the profession of arms and entered the field of politics. He was elected for Bossiney, in 1802; in 1818 he was returned for Yorkshire, for which county he sat till his elevation to the peerage; in 1828 he held the office of Lord Privy Seal, but, of course, followed the political fortunes of the Conservative party and shared the ten years' exclusion from office which it suffered after the passing of the Reform Bill. He was made Lord President of the Council on the accession of the Tory party to power in 1841

ENGLAND AND FRANCE;
OR
THE SISTERS.
A ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.

By HENRY COCKTON,

AUTHOR OF "VALENTINE VOX," "STANLEY THORN," ETC.

CHAPTER XI.

THE BESPEAK, AND THE FETE CHAMPETRE.

OT content with dinners, concerts, soirées, and balls, she at length conceived the idea of celebrating Sir Arthur's birthday by giving a fête champêtre on a most brilliant scale, and artistes of every caste were sent for from London.

Sir Arthur, of course, had no voice in this matter at all. He had nothing more to do with it than merely to pay the expenses incurred. It was, avowedly and expressly, to celebrate his birthday; and a man would be a most ungrateful brute to object to anything designed to do him honour. Sir Arthur was no such ungrateful brute, and therefore he didn't interfere He knew that there would be expenses to pay; and he also knew that the annual interest of his principal had been already expended; but he didn't say a word: no, he knew it was done to delight him, and that was enough.

Before, however, the arrangements for the fête had been completed, the manager of the theatre in the town adjacent, having a splendid eye to business, and not only knowing the popularity of Lady Cleveland, but having heard of the contemplated fête, resolved to "do himself the honour" of calling upon Sir Arthur, with the view of prevailing upon him to have what he termed a bespeak.

The manager, who was a short, goddy man, but very artful, on hearing, when he called, that Sir Arthur was out—which he very well knew before he ventured to put his foot upon the premises—did himself the honour to ask if he might have the honour of seeing Lady Cleveland, as her ladyship would do just as well—and, in his estimation, much better, but that he didn't say —and, on being informed that his card would with pleasure be taken up to Lady Cleveland, he sent up his card, and Caroline appeared

"Lady Cleveland, I presume, I have the honour to address?" said the manager, and Caroline moved with the view of indicating an affirmative "I have ten thousand apologies to make to your ladyship," he continued, bowing with very great profundity, and placing his right hand upon his left breast of course; it being impossible for any theatrical individual to bow very profoundly without doing that! "I have ten thousand apologies to make to your ladyship, but as I merely called to solicit your ladyship's patronage—that is, to inquire if your ladyship and Sir Arthur would do us the honour to have a bespeak—I thought that, probably, on learning that Sir Arthur was from home, I might be pardoned by your ladyship for seeking this interview."

"Has Sir Arthur been accustomed to bespeak a play?"

"I am bound to inform your ladyship that he has not. But we have an excellent company, and the house under your ladyship's immediate patronage could not fail to be brilliantly thronged."

"I will certainly name the subject to Sir Arthur, and you may, if you please, call to-morrow morning."

"I feel exceedingly obliged to your ladyship," returned the manager, pressing his heart with sufficient force to stop its action. "I will do myself that honour: your ladyship's most obedient."

He then bowed himself out with surpassing ingenuity, combined with all the grace he had in him, leaving Caroline, who had already resolved to adopt the suggestion, contemplating the means by which "the 'bespeak' of Sir Arthur and Lady Cleveland" might be made to go off with éclat.

"The manager f the theatre, my love, has been here," she observed on Sir Arthur's return. "He appears to be extremely anxious for you to bespeak a play."

"I bespeak a play!" exclaimed Sir Arthur; "I'm not a theatrical man!"

"It is not necessary for that purpose that you should be, dear' He says that there is sure to be a most brilliant house if the performances be under the immediate patronage of Sir Arthur and Lady Cleveland."

"Pooh, pooh! those fellows have impudence enough for anything. If I had been at home I'd have kicked him out of the house, for supposing me to be such an idiot."

"The idiotcy involved in a bespeak, my dear, is not, I apprehend, very conspicuous. Do you not think that it would look well 'under the immediate patronage of Sir Arthur and Lady Cleveland,' and that, too, on the eve of our fête?"

"It would look, my love, very presumptuous on my part."

"Oh, dear me, no: not at all. It is constantly done by persons who have no pretension to your position in society! Now, I wish you would allow me to manage it, dear; I'd arrange it so nicely; and so much to your satisfaction; you'd be quite delighted! I know you would!"

"Don't think of it, my love, for a moment; don't think of it."

"Why not, darling? Do you remember how anxious you used to be to act upon every suggestion I happened to make?"

"But this is not yours: this is the suggestion of that vagabondising player!"

"It is mine by adoption, dear: certainly by adoption! But don't you recollect what pleasure you used to feel in promoting the gratification of every wish I could conceive?"

"I don't recollect that I was ever more pleased than I am now, my dear, to see you happy."

"You cannot recollect that, because you never were! I am satisfied of it, and, therefore, feel perfectly convinced that you will place the entire management of this affair in my hands. You will do so, darling—will you not?"

"It must be as you please, my love."

"Nay, but it cannot possibly be as I please, dear, unless it has your countenance. You know that I should be extremely sorry to act in opposition to your wishes; that, in short, if I had not your sanction, I'd not act at all."

"But you have my sanction—I cannot say more! You have my sanction to act as you please."

"Well, now, that really is very kind, indeed, of you, very kind: I appreciate it, believe me, and I am sure that you will be highly pleased with my arrangement."

Thus Sir Arthur was much inclined to doubt; however, the thing was inevitable then, and experience had taught him to feel that there was in all such cases great virtue in resignation.

When, therefore, the artful manager called according to that appointment, which could not fail to live in his memory—seeing that for months he had been doing a bitter bad business—Caroline arranged with him all preliminaries, at least as far as he was concerned, and sent him away with a heart so light, that he made a desperate threat to pay off at least a part of those horrid arrears of salary which will, in the best-regulated company, accumulate when the treasury is bare.

Bills were accordingly issued in great profusion, and large placards posted all over the town. Every one knew that on Thursday evening "The Honeymoon!" and "Love's Labour Lost!!" would be performed "UNDER THE IMMEDIATE PATRONAGE OF SIR ARTHUR AND LADY CLEVELAND!!!"—who had taken the whole of the dress circle!—and every one felt that on such an occasion every one would be there.

In the meantime Caroline had issued cards for a dinner on that day, naming, of course, an earlier hour than usual; and as no one ever dreamt of refusing to go to any one of Lady Cleveland's entertainments, she knew, of course, exactly how many would be there, and made arrangements accordingly.

Well, the day came, and the whole of the arrangements were complete. The appointed hour arrived, and with it the whole of the guests, who ordered their carriages at half-past six. Covers had been laid for seventy, and precisely that number sat down to a most delicious dinner, which passed off admirably and was highly enjoyed.

After dinner, of course there was no time to lose. The carriages had already arrived, and the guests began to enter them with the view of proceeding to the theatre. Caroline, Alice, and Sir Arthur were the last to leave; and, as the coachman had been desired to drive very slowly, they were full ten minutes behind every one else, which was held to be extremely correct.

On their arrival, however, the manager—who having, as one of the supernumeraries at Drury lane, seen how George the Third had been honoured when he went to the theatre, and who had borrowed a couple of tall plated candlesticks, and stuck two wax candles therein—received and preceded them with unexampled tact: and the instant they entered their box the whole house simultaneously rose, and while thunders of applause proceeded from the upper boxes, pit, and gallery, the ladies in the dress circle waved their handkerchiefs with infinite enthusiasm, and the gentlemen, whose hands were, of course, adorned with white gloves, clapped with an energy sufficient to split them.

Caroline bowed with surpassing grace; and as she was dressed in magnificent style the effect produced was electric. Sir Arthur also bowed, in his way; but he really felt excessively embarrassed. It was his first appearance in so distinguished a character, and he had at the same time some of the oddest feelings that were perhaps ever experienced by man.

"Three cheers for Lady Cleveland, the loveliest lady alive!" cried a fellow in the pit, who was evidently enamoured of Caroline; and three deafening cheers were accordingly given.

"Three cheers for Sir Arthur!" shouted another individual. "May he never want nothing as long as he lives. Hoo-roar! hoo-roar! hoo-roar! One cheer more. Hoo-roar! A little 'un in. Hoo-ROAR!"

"God save the King" was then sung by the whole strength of the company, which, seeing that they had had had a dinner for a month, wasn't much; but, when it was being accomplished, the lamplighter inflicted an exquisite pang upon the manager by informing him that money was being actually turned away from the doors!

"What!" exclaimed the manager, rushing from the stage in a most dreadful state of mind; "money turned away from the doors?"

As the whole of his reminiscences supplied nothing at all comparable with this, he flew to the money-takers on the instant.

"What is this I hear?" he exclaimed "Refuse money—turn money away from the doors?"

"The house is crowded to the ceiling," replied the money-taker in chief. "So much the better. Gods! turn away money!"

"Why, there's no room."

"Pretty! Send them on the stage. In the wings, in the flies, there is plenty of room. Gods! don't thing of turning away money! I shall be happy to show you to go upon the stage," said he to a party of six who at that moment entered.

"We are very polite," replied the leader of that party, who was followed by the manager the moment he had said, "whatever you do, sir, don't turn away money."

The play then commenced; but during its progress the chief attraction was Caroline, who really looked brilliant.

"Is not this delightful?" she observed to Sir Arthur.

"Animating—very animating—very!" he replied. "I had no idea that we were so much respected."

"Did I not tell you that you would be highly pleased with my arrangements? You would scarcely believe it."

"My dear, with whatever arrangements you make I must be highly pleased. But did you ever witness such infamous acting?"

"Never mind the acting, dear; no one thinks of that; see are the principal performers to-night. Just put your wig right, dear: it is all on one side."

The wig was adjusted, and, when "The Honeymoon" was over, the audience would have "God save the King" again, and when that had been miraculously repeated, by virtue of the manager, in the plenitude of his generosity, having treated every member of his company to a pint of strong ale, "Love's Labour Lost" commenced under these auspices, and therefore went off with unbounded applause.

Caroline then rose, and the whole house rose with her, and having had the felicity of hearing again three rounds of enthusiastic cheers, she bowed, and, taking the arm of Sir Arthur, left the box, from which they were conducted to their carriage by the manager, by whom they were almost worshipped.

The evening, however, was not thus finished. Caroline had extorted from every friend who had dined with her a promise to return immediately the theatre was over, and as that promise was faithfully performed, all who had dined there sat down to supper.

Quadrilles were then proposed, and as a band had been duly provided they commenced, and kept it up with spirit until eight in the morning, when they had a cold breakfast, then a ride, and then dinner, when they recommenced dancing, and did not break up until noon the next day.

Sir Arthur had, of course, in the interim, several hours' sleep on the sofa; but he did, notwithstanding, feel dreadfully fatigued at the conclusion, and declared confidentially to Major Palgrave—who had been sticking as close the whole time—that this system of turning three days into one would not agree with the constitution of a lion!

Charles and Lucrece had, of course, been invited with Lady Grange, Greville and Fred, and about twenty others from town, the whole of whom arrived at the lodge en ly, and found the ground studded with marquees, pavilions, tents, platforms for fireworks, and so on, which had a very beautiful appearance. It was, moreover, a most brilliant day: the sun shone forth in all his glory, and, while in the clear blue sky every cloud seemed lurled, the air was so gentle, soft, and light that it scarcely made the leaves of even the aspen dance.

As five had been fixed for the fête to commence, at that hour nearly the whole of the guests had arrived, and as they passed through the suite of rooms which led to the lawn, the military band played a favourite march, and thus gave an additional effect to the gay scene which opened before them.

Having promenaded till six, they sat down to a most superb dinner in the principal marquee, and during the whole time the military and quadrille bands alternately played with great beauty and precision.

This was indeed delightful. The guests were enchanted. They declared again and again that they had never experienced fee ings at all comparable with those by which they were then inspired. These feelings, however, did not interfere with their appetite: they ate like persons who are in excellent health and spirits, and who live in the country, and in stating this indisputable fact it is submitted that no simile can be more perfect.

On the cloth being removed, "Non nobis" was sung in superb style by the vocalists, who had been engaged in London for the occasion, each part being quintupled; and after the usual loyal toasts had been given and responded to with all the enthusiasm which characterised that period, Fred, having been pressed by his father and Dr. Hawtree, rose to propose the health of Sir Arthur.

"Ladies and gentlemen," said he, "I should not have presumed to address you on this occasion had I not been urged to do so, and more especially by Dr. Hawtree, whose suggestions I am at all times most anxious to adopt. I say, that I should not have presumed to address you; not because I conceive the task to be anything but most pleasing, but because I well know that I shall be unable to perform that task in the style which fair justice demands. I will, however, at once proceed to state that I have risen to propose the health of Sir Arthur Cleveland." Here the whole company rose, and, as the ladies waved their handkerchiefs while the gentlemen enthusiastically cheered, a most animating scene was produced.

"In him," continued Fred, when silence had been restored, "we see a man—a good man—an amiable man—a man whom I know to be possessed of the most kind and generous feelings by which the character of man can be adorned. Upon his friendship you, who are his friends, do not require me to dwell, and of his affection I am convinced you need not wait for any sister to speak. Every quality, indeed, that he possesses is so plainly developed that the knowledge of its existence requires but little study; and, therefore, as we have met here with a view to the celebration of his birthday, as well as to promote the cultivation of the kindest feelings of our nature, you will, I am satisfied, join me in drinking health and long life to Sir Arthur Cleveland; and may every return of this day be characterised by an increase of happiness!"

Again the whole company rose, and again the cheering was enthusiastic and, when an appropriate glee had been beautifully sung, Sir Arthur proceeded to acknowledge the toast.

"My friends," said he, "I rise to return you my most hearty thanks for the compliment you have just paid me. It has been said that 'to know a man well were to know himself,' and, if that be the only test, I am apprehensive that my knowledge of mankind has been hitherto exceedingly limited, for I did not know myself sufficiently well to know that I possessed all those amiable qualities which have been with so much eloquence described. My young friend, I fear, has been somewhat too poetical; but if even I regard it as a fable, the moral of which is that I ought to be all that he says I am, I shall henceforth see more reason than ever to cultivate those feelings which I find you so highly esteem. Again, my friends, I thank you. I am happy to see you. God bless you all."

Charles was then selected to propose the next toast; and, as that was to be the last, he, after much persuasion, consented, and spoke as follows:—

"As virtue is a theme which all who appreciate virtue love to laud, I am certain that all whom I now see around me will, with pleasure, drink to the health of Lady Cleveland." Here the whole company rose as before, and the utmost enthusiasm prevailed. "I need not," continued Charles, "describe the delightful characteristics of virtue to you, by whom they are so well understood; nor need I explain how bright, how beautiful a virtuous woman appears to her friends, or how like an angel she is in the view of her husband. You know that by them she is regarded as a pattern of her sex, while to him she is the world in whom all his hopes and joys are concentred, the idol whom he worships, the goddess whom he adores. In proposing, therefore, briefly the health of Lady Cleveland I feel that that alone will be sufficient to induce you to respond with appropriate warmth."

The toast was of course received with all the honours, but, although every sentence of the speech which introduced it was hailed with loud applause, Caroline did not approve of the speech itself. She thought it too general. It did not sufficiently identify her. She felt that the inference drawn was correct, but she doubted much whether Charles had not had recourse to a certain refined species of irony. This doubt was however, concealed; and when Sir Arthur, who was in raptures, had duly returned thanks, the curtain at the upper end of the marquee was withdrawn, and the splendid pavilion appeared, the orchestra of which was crowded with performers of high celebrity, both vocal and instrumental.

A concert then commenced, and the first three pieces were highly applauded, and gave great delight; but when it became known to the audience in general that the fourth had been composed by Lady Cleveland herself their raptures were altogether beyond expression. Oh, they never heard anything comparable with it! Their ears were ravished—their souls were charmed. Nothing was ever half so sweet—nothing ever developed so much taste. They were perfectly enchanted; and every beautiful feeling produced during the concert was ascribed of course solely to that. Caroline was naturally delighted to find she the theme of universal admiration, and more especially as she did not know that her friends were aware of its being hers, Sir Arthur having communicated the intelligence to them all in the strictest possible confidence.

The concert over, the curtains closed, and the company left the marquee; and when the extraordinary evolutions of a tight-rope dancer had sufficiently delighted them all, the young ones commenced quadrilles upon the lawn, while the rest repaired to the surrounding tents, the tables in which were covered with fruit, cake, and wine.

Here, being in the highest possible spirits, they enjoyed themselves till dusk, when they returned to the marquee, in which coffee was served, and which was then studded with variegated lamps. The band played during the whole time, as at dinner; and, the moment it ceased, a piece of ordnance was discharged, as a signal for the fireworks, which they all then immediately proceeded to witness.

On leaving the brilliant scene, to which their eyes had been accustomed, the night appeared black as a pall, and, therefore, when, on the second signal being given, a magnificent flight of rockets burst forth and illumined the sky, the effect was one of unequalled grandeur. Some splendid devices follows: a Roman Catholic flight of rockets; then a representation of a siege, which was dextrously changed into the interior of a convent; and, when the Roman candles with which it had been studded were spent, volumes of brilliant white smoke ascended gradually, and the rope-dancer, covered with spangles, became perceptible at the height of about forty feet, descending apparently from the clouds, as one enthusiastic cheer burst from the delighted audience, who ceased not to applaud until it had become darkness again.

They then returned to the marquee, and, as the carpet which had concealed the chalked floor had been removed, dancing recommenced, and was kept up with so much spirit that the guests did not even begin to leave until the morning dawned.

(To be continued weekly.)

CHESS.

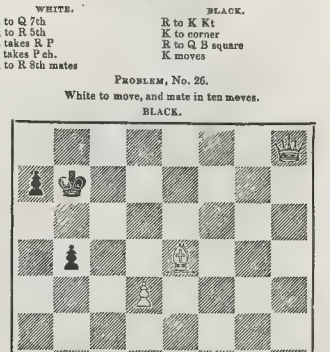
Solution to problem No. 25.

WHITE.	BLACK.
R to Q 7ch	R to K Kt
Q to R 5ch	K to corner
R takes K P	R to Q B square
R takes P ch.	K moves
Q to R 8th mates

PROBLEM, No. 26.

White to move, and mate in ten moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

The solution in our next.

THOMAS RAEBURN.

The subject of the engraving, commonly known as the "Ayrshire Hermit," is the proprietor of some nine or ten acres of land, near Kilmarnock, Ayrshire. He is the younger son of a small landed proprietor, who, when dying, left his son as his portion the few acres which he possesses. His appearance is somewhat uncouth; he has neither shaved, cut his hair, nor changed his coat for about thirty years past, the reasons for which strange whim arose from the following circumstance. The road to his paternal acres passed through the lands of a neighbour with whom he had a quarrel; the neighbour shut up the road in consequence, and Thomas was deprived for a time of all egress from his property. The case went to law, and judgment was given against him, when, fancying that that decision might be in accordance with law but not with his notions of justice, he vowed never to shave, cut his hair, or change the coat he then wore until justice should be done him by the reversion of the decision given against him; and he has faithfully kept his vow. His beard has grown to a considerable length; his hair hangs down over his left shoulder and breast in a firmly matted cake, which has never been and by no possibility ever could be unravelled by the friendly tooth of a comb. What the original colour of his coat may have been cannot now be determined from the variety of colours and the multiplicity of patches of which it is composed. It seems so dilapidated that when once put off it must require no small care to put it on again. It is now nearly a twelvemonth since Thomas was said to have meditated a trip to London to present himself and his grievances to her Majesty's favourable consideration; he journeyed even as far as Edinburgh or Leith, on his way to ship himself for London, when some kind friend prevailed on him to return home, else he might have figured long ere this in the great metropolis, as some of the other Ayrshire lions have done. He is now advanced in years. His coffers were examined a few months ago by some very inquisitive people, and a few pounds, which he was supposed to have no use for, were taken away by them, for which they have been brought to justice. It may interest some of your fair readers to know that Thomas still enjoys a life of single blessedness.—From a Correspondent.

FLORICULTURAL CORNER FOR AMATEURS.

THE AURICULA.

How admirably has Crowquill hit us off in his "Horticultural Man of business"—us, I say, for we are a class. Not that his sketch is a caricature—for there I am, even to the very spectacles, as I daily patrol my little plot of 50 square feet after office hours—there I am, a genuine lover of flowers To all my good friends, be they male or female, who love flowers for their own sake, and not for the consideration of gaining a prize at an exhibition, or of beating their neighbours, I will just say a few words as to my intentions in this little corner of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. I am no nursery man. I am a plain [illegible] who will give them any advice, freely and impartially; and should there be [illegible] and beautify their gardens, if they follow my plan. [illegible] with gardeners: the planting out of some kinds of flowers, sowing the seeds of others, and the careful management of all, render it a pleasant time. Two kinds of florists' flowers now claim our especial attention—the auricula and the dahlia; the former is now in full bloom, the latter we are just throwing our eyes over the lists of, in order to purchase a few. And first, as to the auricula, it is with me a favourite, and I believe it is almost an universal one; its beautiful foliage, its delicate perfume, its regularly-shaped and coloured flowers, and its early bloom, appear to unite all the desired requisites of a florists' flower; and it has one advantage over almost every other flower so called, viz., that it is so difficult to obtain a good seedling, that its catalogue increases very little, and varieties in vogue ten years ago are winning flowers now. To those who have auriculas I will first say a few words:—Discard such nonsense as sugar-baker's scum, pigeon's dung, &c.—there are no sugar-bakers on the Alps, and it is an alpine plant—grow it in rich, strong, loamy soil, and, if not top-dressed, put a layer of rich loam and rotten dung, about half an inch or more, on the top of the pots; water them frequently when there is no rain, but do not wet the leaves; protect them from too hot a sun; let them have an hour or two of it every day, but not more; let them also have gentle, but not drenching, rain. An auricula stage is a desirable acquisition: it consists of four or five rows of shelves about five inches wide, in the form of the steps of a staircase, the sides and back boarded up, the front (which should face the north) left open; her, now place your auriculas for bloom, and, if you have taken care of them through the winter, you may expect to reap an ample harvest of pleasure. Those who have not auriculas I would advise to visit a respectable nurseryman, and select a few, as they are now blooming. I would recommend the following sorts (that is, provided you do not grow for exhibition, for there novelty is also considered):- they are as good flowers as the new ones, and more within reach of humble individuals like myself:—

GREEN-EDGED.	GREY-EDGED.
Barlow's King.	Gunne's Privateer.
Pellett's Ruler of England.	Oliver's Lovely Ann.
Stretch's Alexander.	Kenyon's Ringleader.
WHITE-EDGED.	SELFS.
Lee's Bright Venus.	Dickson's Apollo.
Popplewell's Conqueror.	Schulz's Ned Leed.
Taylor's Incomparable.	Netherwood's Othello.

As annuals should now be sown, I add a list of a few good varieties:—

HALF-HARDY ANNUALS.	HARDY ANNUALS.
To be sown on a gentle hot-bed, and transplanted next month.	Nemophila insignis, blue.
German stocks, various.	Eutoca viscida, blue.
Hibiscus africanus, scarlet.	Clarkia pulchella, pink.
Rhodanthe Manglesii, rose.	German larkspur, various colours.
Salpiglossis, mixed.	Escholtzia crocea, yellow.
Schizanthus superbus, scarl. and yell.	Cleutonia pulchella, three colours.
Portulaca Thellusoni, scarlet.	Collinsia bicolor, two colours.

B * * * *

GREAT THORNTON-STREET CHAPEL, HULL.

This handsome edifice, built from the designs and under the superintendence of Messrs. Lockwood and Allom, was opened in August last. The design presents a striking improvement upon the general style and character of places of worship not belonging to the Established Church, and our principal reason for introducing the annexed illustration is to show the great advance of refinement and taste in the Fine Arts observable among dissenters.

The chapel is built of Hare-hill stone from the neighbourhood of Leeds. It consists of a centre and two wings, the entire frontage being 160 feet; the portico is 66 feet wide, and 56 feet to the apex of the pediment; the columns are 30 feet in height, 3 feet in diameter, and the inter-columniation 2 diameters. The interior is 90 feet by 60 feet, exclusive of the organ-gallery, and 45 feet in height. The basement is 10 feet high, and is occupied by catacombs. The right wing forms a sacristy and entrance to the catacombs; and the left is the entrance to the premises of the upper part and keeper's house. In the rear of the chapel is a building containing in the basement 5 class-rooms, and above a hall of assembly, 60 feet by 30 feet. The cost of the entire building, exclusive of the site, is £7000, and the chapel will accommodate about 1800 persons.

OTTER-HUNTING.

The chase of the Otter is still an item in the catalogue of "the sports of England;" but its proudest records must be sought in the older annals of sporting in this country.

"The pomp and circumstance" of the olden Otter-chace were very striking: the huntsmen sallied forth arrayed in vests of green, braided with scarlet, their caps of fur encircled with bands of gold, and surmounted with ostrich plumes. Boots, much of the fashion of those known to modern hunting-fields, reaching to the tops of the thighs, and water-proof, encased their lower limbs, and were ornamented with gold or silver tassels. Their spears were also embellished with carving and costly mountings; the whole set-out of the higher classes engaged in these water-huntings being of a very picturesque and imposing character. "Towards the latter end of the last century, otter-hunting was one of the most popular of our field sports, and the list of establishments supported for its pursuit would have, probably, outnumbered those devoted to hunting in any of its other forms. Regular packs of otter-hounds were kept in almost every parish, and an otter-pole was as common an instrument in the peasant's hands as a walking-stick. It was much more simple than the spear now in use; it was merely a stick of straight ash, shod with a common iron barb head, or a fork of two prongs, also arrow-headed. With these weapons in their hands, and a motley group of miscellaneous curs at their heels, the village rustics would bie them to the neighbouring streams, to chase, in humble imitation of their betters, the Mustela lutra of the naturalist." (Craven; Sporting Review.)

But otter-hunting is now fast dying away, though it is still kept up in parts of Ireland, Scotland, and Wales. Mr. Macgillivray informs us that Mr. Lonsaire hunted the Dumfriesshire rivers in 1833, 1834, and 1835; and that Lord John Scott keeps a pack of otter-hounds for the streams of Roxburghshire. "The modern otter-spear," says Craven, "is an article of some artistical pretension. It is, like its predecessor, a long, flexible ashen pole, but headed with a barb somewhat scientifically constructed. The smaller end of the pole being bored and fitted with a counter-sink (a female screw and collar), a spring barb is screwed to it. The barb is so constructed, that, being driven into the hide of the quarry, it expands, and gives out two hooks, which effectually prevent the hold of the spear being destroyed by any efforts of the animal to release itself."

In England but few other packs exist, but a splendid run is occasionally enjoyed. Thus, on September 14, 1841, the Haworth and Stockton otter-hounds commenced running on the river Tees, at Dinsdale Spa fish-locks, and, on the first day, terminated at Low Middleton Deeps, where the otter was seized, but again set at liberty, and hunted till dark. The chase was renewed next day at Dinsdale-bridge, when, after another glorious run, the otter was secured. His length was four feet two inches and a half; and, taking the time occupied during both days, fifteen hours were devoted to the chase—a circumstance unparalleled in the annals of otter-hunting.

The best of modern otter-slayers, however, and the most experienced authority on the sport, is the Hon. Grantley Berkeley, of Beacon Hodge, in Hampshire; who, with four old fox-hounds and three white terriers, enjoyed some splendid otter-hunting in the New Forest during the summer of 1840, when he put four otters down, and killed them all.

We understand that the crack pack of otter-hounds belonging to E. Dixon, jun., Esq., of Worcester, has had some splendid hunts of late. Near Bromyard no fewer than three otters were killed in one day, but not before some of the hounds were so knocked up as to require putting into a warm bath.

LONDON: Printed by ROBERT PALMER (at the office of Palmer and Clayton), 16, Crane court, Fleet-street; and published by WILLIAM LITTLE, at 198, Strand, where all communications are requested to be addressed.—SATURDAY, May 27, 1843.—Supplement.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 57.—Vol. II.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1843. [Sixpence.

OFFICE, 198, STRAND.

PRESENT ASPECT OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS.

There are epochs in the history of nations, when the popular mind, awaking from the torpor of some long period of repose, is stirred and agitated to its inmost depths, as if by some unseen moving power, when men's spirits are unquiet and perturbed, brooding over the evils and defects of the present, and pressing eagerly forward, with the active energy which hope and confidence inspire, to some brighter and more perfect state, which they persuade themselves is to be found in the future. Mind, like the ocean, has its periods of calm and tempest, and, at times such as we have supposed, in the excitement which reigns around us, in the majestic exhibition of faith, of hope, of virtue, and of power, which the necessities of the season call forth, we seem to perceive, amidst clouds and darkness, the hand of Omnipotence, like the spirit of God, moving on the face of the dull and sluggish waters of chaos.

At one of these periods we have now arrived. That profound quietude which succeeded to the whirlwind turbulence of the Reform movement is now being dispelled, and the people of the British islands are entering on a new career, where the public energies will find employment in the pursuit of fresh objects, and be developed in yet untried fields of action. From end to end the empire is in commotion, the giant frame heaving with the throes of passion long pent up, and now struggling to escape from its bonds. The aspect of affairs is not free from shades of doubt and danger; for the will that rules the destinies of man seems to have decreed that ever, in the flux and reflux of human affairs, elements of baneful and profitable use should mingle, and the powers of light hold perpetual conflict with those of darkness. While the rage of hostile factions shakes the state, and great commercial questions are agitated, which would of themselves, by the importance and extent of the considerations they involve, seem to supply matter sufficient to absorb the attention of the politician — while the smothered flame of Chartism yet glows with hardly diminished intensity in the lower regions of society, and may at any moment burst forth to spread ruin and desolation around, like those subterranean fires which some philosophers suppose to lie concealed in the central recesses of the earth, gathering their destructive forces against some day of dread, to be let loose when the Supreme fiat shall have decreed the consummation of all things—as if this were not enough, religious dissensions intervene to add other and abundant materials of strife, and national hostility menaces, in another quarter, the unity of the empire with disruption.

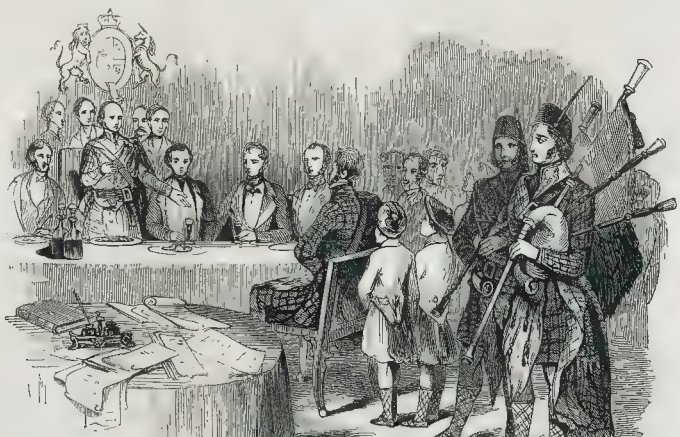
Some years back, all the other influences which sway the thoughts and mould the temper of men gave way to those of politics; for the social edifice, by long use, had grown so crazy that the general attention was engrossed by the repairs which had become indispensable, and the councils of statesmen were fully occupied in devising remedies for those evils which a long course of forgetfulness and neglect had suffered to grow to such a height as almost to threaten it with subversion. Interests even more weighty, before whose awful magnitude sublunary affairs and earthly contests shrink into insignificance, were, for the moment, overlooked. But another and a mightier agent seems now to be advancing on the stage, one whose overmastering force, like the rod of Aaron, swallows up every other rival, and assimilates all passions, feelings, and desires to its own substance. The church and the sanctuary have not been free from the disturbance which now permeates the whole frame of society; discord has invaded the home of peace itself, and made its harsh and jarring sounds heard even amidst the services of the temple, whose ministers are the messengers of benignity, and whose awful silence, typical of supernal rest and harmony, seems to command the unquiet emotions of the breast to repose. New sects, or new denominations, have arisen in the Christian world, to divide its affections, and solicit its support. Non-intrusion in the sister-kingdom has already produced a schism which has drawn away a third part of the Church of Scotland from the establishment on a question of church government, of no overwhelming importance in itself, but which the injudicious treatment of men in authority, combined with the rival passions and interests set in motion by a prolonged contest, and the divisions and distractions to which these have given birth, has been swollen beyond its due proportion of magnitude. Attempts have been made to treat this theme with levity and ridicule, and represent the men who have lately taken the decided and serious step of seceding, at least for the present, from the church, as actuated solely by motives of personal hostility and disappointed ambition, which have pushed them on to enmity with their brethren, and collision with the constituted authorities of the state. This is a view which long acquaintance with the ecclesiastical state of Scotland and with the character of its people does not permit us to take. We are well aware of the deep-seated causes which have led to the unhappy dissensions of which we are speaking, and if we now allude to them it is for the purpose of opening the door of reconciliation, and pointing the way to an amicable settlement of the questions at issue. For this end it is indispensable that Parliament should without further delay interfere, unless the breach is to continue irremediable, and, by a measure of legislation which shall satisfy the leaders of the church, conciliate the just claims of the people and the clergy, with the rights of patrons and the authority of the law. Had this been done in time we cannot think that the matter would have grown to such a head, or that we should have had to deplore the occurrences we have lately witnessed.

Another schism, which if it should take place will have consequences far more fatal and enduring, seems almost to be threatened by the aspect of religious parties in England. That there is much of good in the movement of the Anglo-Catholics, or Puseyites, as they are variously styled by friend or foe, we have never doubted. They have reanimated the slumbering energies of the church, and called into action a mass of vigour and energy, directed to the highest aims of religious instruction, which but for them would have been wasted in lethargy. They have thrown new life and significance into formularies and ceremonies which were growing obsolete and meaningless, given spurs to zeal, and quickened the springs of devotion into new activity. Yet they have not always added to their zeal, temperance; nor to their faith, charity. Some of their prominent leaders have used language which has alarmed the best feelings and recollections of the country, and shown intentions which if fulfilled would more than neutralize by their bad effects all the good they have achieved. This is a case in which legislation would be useless and mischievous, and of which we fervently trust that the complications may never ripen to such an extent as to demand its employment.

The question of repeal, which forms the other prominent topic of the day, is pregnant with nearer and more terrible dangers. We should only deceive ourselves if we attributed them to the influence of any individual. Does Ireland gather her multitudes together by hundreds of thousands, on her green hill-sides and in her fertile valleys, merely to swell the triumphal procession of one among her children? Is it to pander to his ambition, or to gratify his malignity, that half a million of men join their voices in the chorus of repeal? No. The shout with which the rock of Cashel and the streets of Cork rung at the presence of the Liberator were the echoes of the voice of ages—the expression of those griefs with which she has so long stunned the ears of England, the cries of her suffering and starving people. Let Englishmen learn, with the generous candour and spirit of fairness which belongs to their national character, to look on the problems which the state of Ireland presents, unbiassed by the jealous and angry spirit of party; then, but not till then, will the cry for repeal die away, and be buried in that grave to which the animosities that yet separate them in feeling and heart from Irishmen will one day, we hope, be consigned.

It rests with the men whom the people of Great Britain have called to the helm of affairs to prove that they are equal to the crisis, which, on a review of all the circumstances of our social condition, would seem to be approaching—that they comprehend all the exigencies of our position—that they are not unfitted for the task of ruling a mighty state, and of giving a sound and wholesome direction to the vast current of opinion which determines the course of our affairs—to show that they are capable of evolving the seeds of good from the midst of evil, and of averting the day of national decline—

> That day, when thou, imperial Troy! must bend,
> And see thy warriors fall, thy glories end.



DINNER OF THE CALEDONIAN SCHOOL.—See page 384.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.—(From our own Correspondent.)—PARIS, May 30th.—From information which I have received, and on which you may rely, it appears that, within the last week, several of our principal republicans have left France for Ireland, the greater part with false passports, in order to kindle the flame of revolt, and instruct the Irish in the formation of barricades. I do not give you this news on the slight grounds, but on certain data; and it will now be for the English Government to be on its guard and take the necessary measures. No one but those who reside in France can form any idea of the pains that are taken by certain persons of high rank and many years' standing—quasi-Ministerial and decidedly Conservative—to infuse the minds of the people against England. Now that "the sight of search question" has been exhausted, we are accused of all the troubles in Spain. Mr. Aston, the British ambassador at the court of Madrid, is openly declared to have influenced Espartero in the late change in the Ministry; in short, everything that intriguing ingenuity can invent is set forth against England. And why? It might naturally be supposed that France was anxious for a close alliance with England. This is true to a certain extent; but then only for self protection, as being a powerful ally in the event of a war. There is at the same time a party who prefer a Russian to an English alliance. The real cause for the hatred to England is jealousy: the French are jealous of our commerce; they are jealous that, whilst they are discussing and intriguing about railways, in England they are not only laid down but prosper; in short, they wish that, on all great questions, France should take the initiative, and England follow her impulsions! The mass of the people are not against England, but they are kept in such a state of agitation that they know not what to think or what to do. To seduce the manufacturers, whose export trade is completely ruined by the heavy import duties, promises have been made to Louis Philippe by the Emperor of China, offering to admit the French flag and French goods on the same terms as those enjoyed by England, and that an imposing naval force, under the command of a new admiral, was about to sail for China. I am sadly afraid that, unless some decisive measures be taken, serious events may be expected, and that ere long. I have the greatest confidence in the loyalty of Louis Philippe, and his great desire to preserve the peace of Europe. M. Guizot, who is a sound diplomatist, and decidedly the first statesman in France, is actuated by the best intentions; but unfortunately there is a secret under-current, thwarting him in every way, and marring him at every step. You every now and then hear of disasters in Algiers, and then pompous bulletins of victories are published. Abdmiasem of the 4th, &c. &c. Facts are stronger than words; and the late debate in the Chamber of Deputies has convinced many a Frenchman of the great impolicy of attempting to colonise Algiers, and the only means of obtaining a remunerative return for so ruinous an undertaking is that part of Africa was to fortify and keep the port of Algiers only. It was shown on that occasion that several tribes had, after offering their adherence to the French Government, and had returned to their native chief; it was shown that the great part of the boasted submissions were the result of fear from the particular position of the French army, and that the instant the natives could liberate themselves they would do so. I often said, and I repeat from conviction, the French will never be able to colonise Algeria! From official documents it will be seen that, from the 1st of January, 1841, to the 1st of January, 1842, 88,383 soldiers had entered the hospitals, of whom 7802 died, making 10½ per cent of the whole army. It is now said that a great improvement has taken place; but I believe to be very doubtful.

Paris is becoming very dull, whilst the environs, from the numerous chateaux being inhabited, are very gay. We have horse-racing in all directions: the one which appears to promise the best sport will be Versailles, on the 4th and 11th of next month. The courses to be run for are:—1st day: the Versailles prize of 1200 francs; a sweepstakes, 400 francs entry; a sweepstakes, 1000 francs entry, called the Louis Philippe. 2d race entry; a handicap for 300 francs; the Minister of Commerce's prize of 2000 francs; and the prize given by the Count de Paris of 1000 francs. 2nd day: Prize given by the Society of Encouragement of 3000 francs; the grand Versailles Sweepstake of 2400 francs; the prize given by the Conseil Général of 1000 francs; a sweepstakes, 1000 francs entry; and a hedge-race for 1200 francs.

To your military readers the following information will be interesting:—The Minister of War has given orders for the formation of a camp in the neighbourhood of Rennes. The camp will be situated in the "Lande" of Theliu, near to Pholen, and be called the camp of Conlie. It will be composed of 42,000 Infantry and Artillery, and 1500 Cavalry. The manœuvres will be exercised on the plains of Coquédant, and will take place from the 1st to the 15th of July; the practice of manœuvres will not be before the first fortnight in August. Tents will be erected for the men, and temporary stables for the cavalry. Several Prussian and Russian officers of distinction have already notified their intention of being present.

The new postage regulations between England and France will come into force on the 1st of June. Pamphlets not weighing more than 16oz. may be sent free of postage.

There has just been discovered in the Royal Library the original text of the declaration of the clergy of France agreed to in the General Convocation of 1682. This declaration, in the chart of the Gallican Church, and signed by all the bishops, and was drawn up by Bossuet. A copy of it was sent to Rome, and burnt by order of the Pope.

The returns of the Rouen Railway are not so considerable as was expected, owing, it is generally supposed, to the high charges. From the 19th to the 25th of May the returns were 83,857 francs (about £3354) for 11,899 passagers, and from the 26th to the 31st of May 76,569 francs (or 11,849 passengers. The Orleans Railway is making more money than the Rouen.

It would appear as if the heads of the musical world had given a rendezvous in Paris: Rossini, from Bologna; Meyerbeer, from Berlin; and Donizetti and Donizetti are expected next month. Thus we shall have at the same time Rossini, Meyerbeer, Spontini, Ricci, Auber, Donizetti, Halevy, and Adam. It is said that Rossini has entered into an engagement to direct "Corrado d' Altamura," at the Parisian Italian Theatre. Auber is now about 58 years of age; he is director of the Conservatory, Musaire de Capelle to the King, and member of the Institute. He received 30,000 francs. Auber was so poor that he had not the means of purchasing a piano; now, after 23 years of brilliant success, and deservedly so, he is the proprietor of four magnificent hotels in the Rue St. Georges, and has an income of £2500 per year derived from money in the funds.

The sabitues of the Italian Opera are delighted at the re-engagement of Lablache. Amongst other attractions announced we see that the director are Mesdames Persiani and Brambilla, and Messrs. Fornasari, Ronconi, and Mario.

The sorrowful looks of those accustomed to visit the Opera Comique have brightened up within the last few days. From some cause at present unknown, the first tenor, the inimitable, graceful, and melodious Roger, threatened to leave the theatre. The erector very wisely made concessions, and Roger, the delight of the public, remains with us. By his new engagement he is to receive 36,000f., £1500 per annum, and two months' rate of absence.

A M. Gaudinot, a tenor, who has had much success in the provinces, is about to appear at the Grand Opera. Those who have assisted at the repetitions speak highly of his acquirements in very operatic voice.

About two years since a Miss Dabedielle created a great sensation in our musical and fashionable saloons. This lady is now engaged at the Theatre San Carlo, at Naples, where she is considered a brilliant star. She is a fine person and melodious tone, adds a fine mezzo soprano. Miss Prévost Colon is engaged at Geneva, at the new French Theatre. Maria, one of our most charming dancers, is gone on leave of absence for two months to Hamburg.

A new opera by Donizetti, the libretto by Scribe, and called "Don Sebastien de Portugal," is in course of preparation. Adam has already brought out his opera, "Richard en Palestine." There is some talk that a drama of Lablache will be engaged at the Opera; he has had several satisfactory interviews with the director. People have sold the copyright of "The Well of Love" for 12,000f. (about £480.)

Mercadante's opera, "Le Giurramento," was a complete failure at Prague. Tamburini is giving concerts at Milan.

A work has lately appeared bearing the following title: "General Caldoquor, Chronological Order of the Works composed by M. Marie Louis, Charles Joseph Silvestre de Sacy, born in Vorcen on the 23rd of September 1750." Then follows the following in a short note. "I began to learn music at the age of six years, and composition at nine years, the first I studied under my father Barthelemi Chrisostom; my first two masters of the second were Barthelemi Felice, and his son Alexander Felice. About 1777 or 1778 I obtained a pension from the Grand Duke Leopold in order to enable me to complete my studies under the celebrated Joseph Sarti, with whom I remained between three and four years. It was from the counsels and lessons of this truly great master that I obtained a thorough knowledge of counterpoint, which I considered a blessing. She, to outrages "mad;" and the theory was, he presumed, that murders were committed in England by madmen, and in Ireland by Roman Catholics. If they were to legislate for Piccadilly as they did for Ireland, giving arms to one class of people only, they would find that all Piccadilly would be as discontented as Ireland.—Mr. BATESON supported the bill, but deeming it to be a measure of coercion. It was but a preliminary measure, and when the excitement in Ireland was cooled down he hoped the Government would turn its attention to removing the evils which pressed upon the people of that country.—Mr. SHAW said, if he thought such a bill were necessary he would give it his reluctant, but strenuous, support, but he believed it was utterly inefficient for any legitimate object. He referred to the state of Tipperary, which he had at one time the honour to represent, and said that the outrages there were owing to the inefficient administration of the law. Juries were packed to informers, but honest witnesses were left unprotected. The solicitor for the Crown, who resided in Dublin, came down with the judges, prepared his case necessarily with a speed incompatible with efficiency, and from want of knowledge of the witnesses was baffled by the appearance of a dozen perjured ones, who had to defend the prisoners. He also attributed much evil to the jury system—the challenges allowed to the Crown amounting in effect to nearly packing a jury. He objected to the Arms Bill on several grounds, but more especially because it created a distinction between England and Ireland. It was a mockery, under such a system of legislation, to say that Ireland was an integral part of the empire. If they were teaching Ireland that it was necessary to have different legislation for the two countries, they were perhaps also instructing her that with different legislation they ought also to have different laws. The honourable gentleman then referred to the opposition of Henry Brougham—not Lord Brougham—to the Arms Bill of 1819, and asked the house to imagine how his eloquence would have scorched the man who would have dared to propose that every blacksmith should be licensed, that every weapon should be branded, and that every man in whose house a knife might be found at the end of a staff should be transported. It was a common observation on the ministerial side of the house to say that the speakers were in the wrong, but he would ask them if they were themselves conspicuously in the right? Lord Stanley had undertaken to legislate for Ireland, and had introduced a Registration Bill for Ireland which had done more for the furtherance of the cause of repeal in Ireland than any other circumstance that he knew of. The present Government wished it to be believed that they were anxious for the prosperity of the morality of the people of Ireland, and yet by their fiscal regulations they gave a stimulus to illicit distillation, which was the parent of almost every crime in Ireland. He referred to the speech on the Queen's accession, in which she recognised the appreciation which the Irish people had displayed of the justice with which they had been treated, and expressed her confidence in their loyalty, and contrasted it with the present state of that country under a conservative Administration. He also contrasted the different conduct pursued towards Ireland and Canada, and fervently prayed that the former might be treated with the same justice that had been so wisely meted out to Canada.—Mr. SMITH said that a similar measure to the one before the house had been introduced into the House of Commons, by Lord Morpeth, in 1838, with the unanimous concurrence of the Cabinet of that day, and against that measure the right hon. gentleman had never opened his lips. In 1840 an Arms Bill was again introduced, and not a single Irish member raised a voice against it. He contended that, in the year 1840, Ireland, and Ireland, the meaning of the words "Justice to Ireland" was that the Church should be despoiled of its possessions, and that universal suffrage and laxity of morals should be conceded, the latter meaning nothing less than the transfer of landed property in Ireland from the landlords to the occupying tenants. To these might be added the confiscation of the property of absentees, and nothing else but all these concessions would be considered as justice to Ireland.—Lord J. RUSSELL said that the hon and learned gentleman had defended the bill, not upon its merits, not upon the necessity for its enactment, but merely upon the ground that a similar measure had been introduced by the preceding Government. Even presuming that the two bills had been the same, yet it was to be remembered that under the former Government assurances were pursued to conciliate the people, and to cause them to rely upon the just administration of the law, although the Ministry of the day did not feel themselves justified in abandoning the existing precautionary laws until they felt confident that their objects had been effected. They enlisted the sympathies of the Irish people, and having done so, they might gradually have got rid of every law which had even the appearance of coercion. Those measures had not been carried in by the present Government—the sympathies of the people were disregarded in the appointments to the judgeship and to the magisterial bench, and also in the displacement of popular magistrates for attending meetings which the Lord Chancellor of Ireland had declared to be legal. Not knowing what mischief might result from the rejection of this bill, he would not take upon himself the responsibility of opposing the second reading, although he thought the union ought to be maintained for the benefit of both England and Ireland, yet he had no hesitation in saying that as long as the parties agitating for that repeal conducted themselves according to law, it was illegal to excite and irritate them by injudicious interference.—On the motion of Mr. BLEWITT, the debate was adjourned until Tuesday.—Another Irish debate sprung from a return moved for by Mr. S. O'BRIEN, in which complaints were made that some of the Irish members that all the chiefs of departments in Ireland were either Englishmen or Scotchmen; to which Sir R. PEEL replied, that for the most part they were in office when the present Government came into power. The other orders of the day were then disposed of, and the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The LORD CHANCELLOR having taken his seat on the Woolsack, a lengthened discussion took place on the second reading of the Peterborough and Normanton Railway Bill.—Lord WILLIAM MOLESWORTH moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.—The house divided on the question that the bill be now read a second time, which was negatived by a majority of 39 to 41.—The amendment was then carried, and it was finally arranged that the second reading should be again moved on Thursday.—The Earl of ABERDEEN gave notice that he would, on Thursday, move for a return of the number of Roman Catholic priests in the Church of Scotland.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE read the letter recently written by the direction of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland dismissing the chairman of the commission of the peace, and stating that the Minister of the Crown had declared in Parliament that the Queen and her Government were determined to maintain the union inviolate, and asked upon what ground the Irish Government could pretend to change its conduct according to a speech in Parliament rather than according to law. He also wished to know if any communication had been made to the Irish Government in an official shape that any speech or message from the throne had been delivered respecting the repeal of the union.—The Duke of WELLINGTON said that the Irish Government had been instructed that it was not in an official shape that any speech or message from the throne had been delivered respecting the repeal of the union.—The Duke of WELLINGTON referred to the anxiety occasioned by the agitation in Ireland, and said that the Government had adopted measures to enable the Irish Government to preserve the peace, and to put down all illegal requisite measures to preserve the union inviolate. Her Majesty had declared her intention to maintain the union, and yet magistrates holding her commission were presiding over repeal meetings. It was the bounden duty of the Lord Chancellor to give every check to those repeal meetings, when it was well known to be the intention of the Government to maintain the inviolability of the union.—After a few observations from the Earl of CARNARVON, Lord CAMPBELL denied that repeal meetings were necessarily illegal, and condemned the letter of the Lord Chancellor.—After some remarks from the Earl of CLANCARTY, the Earl of WICKLOW, and the Lord Chancellor defended the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and said had he acted otherwise he would have departed the duty which he owed to his country and to his sovereign.—Lord NORMANBY and the Marquis of LANSDOWNE condemned the letter.—Lord WHARNCLIFFE said that although the peace had not been broken at these meetings in Ireland, yet the assemblage of 200,000 people upon such occasions was calculated therefore to be intimidating. As to the dismissal of Lord French, he was quite ready to take his share of the responsibility of that step, for any magistrate who attended such meetings was not fit to remain in the commission of the peace. The Marquis of CLANRICARDE moved for the production of the letter to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, which was agreed to.—Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

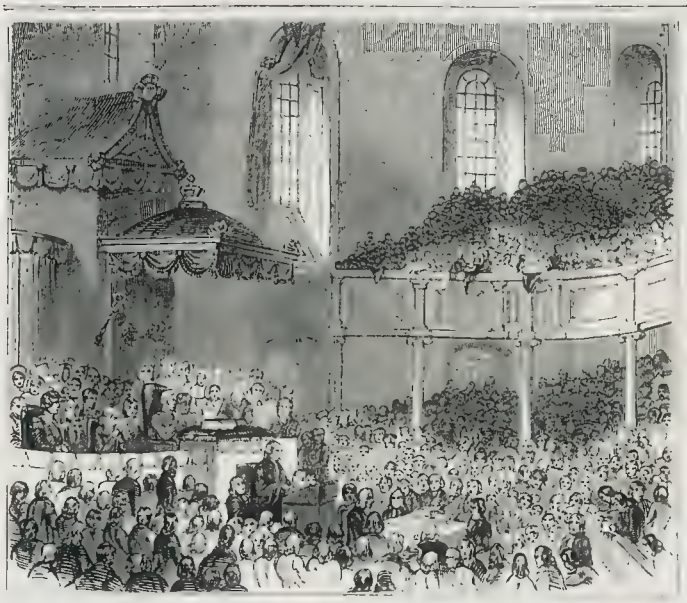
All other business before the house was waived in order to give precedence to the adjournment debate on Irish Ireland) Bill. Before it commenced, however, Lord PALMERSTON took occasion to regret that the postponement of a motion of Mr. Cockrane's relative to our financial intercourse with Greece prevented the noble lord from having an answer to his question on the subject of the former evening to the effect that the interest on the Greek loan had been guaranteed by the late Government. The was an error, for that loan was guaranteed by the Government which Sir R. Peel was a leading member.—Mr. ROSS then resumed the adjourned debate, and contended that the Irish people were naturally a loyal people, and it was an impeachment of their characteristic feelings of attachment to the throne to say that the bill being proposed to do.—Mr. STAFFORD O'BRIEN admitted that in past times Ireland had laboured under great and numerous evils, and that even yet she had many which still to be redressed; but he should support the Arms (Ireland) Bill for Ireland, but he should in committe propose amendments in it, with a view to ameliorate its stringency; and he hoped when passed into a law that it would not be carried to oppressive hardship and severity.—Mr. REDINGTON said that the new enactments of the Arms Bill were as hard as they were stringent in severe. There was nothing in the state of Ireland calling for a different course of legislation from that which was adopted towards England. The riots in Lancashire far exceeded anything of the kind which had taken place in Ireland, and yet no penal was made to disarm the inhabitants of that extensive and populous district. He warned the house against exasperating the people of Ireland by coercive measures increasing in stringency in proportion to the diminution of crime in that country.—Colonel COGOLLY said his experience as a magistrate convinced him of the necessity for this measure.—Mr. CAREW, in a maiden speech, declared his opposition to the bill, and contrasted the present condition of Ireland with its condition prior to the accession to power of the present Ministry.—Lord BERNARD supported the bill, and thanked the Government for bringing it forward, it being a bill essentially necessary in the opinion of all those who had at heart the real welfare of Ireland. Mr. W. S O'BRIEN protested against the bill. The best way to repress outrage in Ireland was by improving the condition of the country, and protecting the people from the oppressive conduct of their landlords. He warned Government that the bill, in its present shape, would create a division on every clause.—Captain LAYARD hoped the Government would withdraw the bill; but, if not, he appealed to the members for England and Scotland not to support a measure which was calculated to create a feeling of animosity in the people of Ireland.—Mr. WATSON protested against a bill which went the length of placing eight millions of their fellow-subjects beyond the pale of the constitution. He regretted to see the significant absence of any expression of partial administration of the law, to which he firmly believed Lord Eliot was well disposed.—Lord C. HAMILTON felt a deep interest in the welfare of Ireland, but ever since the speech from the throne it was the universal cry the necessity of an Arms Bill, which was merely a bill to protect the innocent and well-disposed.—Mr. C. BULLER said the effect of the bill would be to deprive the virtuous of arms, while it would have no effect in preventing those disposed to commit outrage from procuring the means of doing so. He did not regard the bill itself as a matter of importance, being only a continuation of an old law which both parties had supported, but in one point of view it was important. It might have been easily passed by the late Government without any particular jealousy, because the late Government was ruled by the feelings of the majority, while the present Government ruled according to the feelings of the minority. The repeal of the union ought to be deprecated by every one, and more particularly by the Irish Government. He asked them was it that the people of Ireland wished to repeal the union? How was it that the poor and weak wished to separate themselves from the strong and wealthy? How was it that for the last two centuries the misgovernment of Ireland had been the scandal of Christendom? How was it that while all Europe was advancing, the condition of the people of Ireland had been getting worse? The causes of the misery of Ireland were chiefly the conduct of the landlords, and even the existence of the Established Church upon the endowments of their ancestors intended for the instruction of the people, but which were expended in the most aberrant manner on their own residence. Ireland had been quiet under the late Administration because it sought to conciliate the people; but the present Government, on its accession, had allied itself to the Orange party in that country, and elevated Judges to the bench upon whom the people had no confidence, and thus lost for itself public confidence by the proceeding. In one year and a half the right hon. baronet had alienated from England the hearts of the people of Ireland, and even at the present moment, whatever good for Ireland he had in store, he kept it carefully concealed, and only presented it with an Arms Bill.—Mr. SHAW looked upon Ireland to be in a most unsatisfactory and alarming condition, the lower classes being in a state of unnatural excitement, while those above them were despondent and dejected. He referred to the temperance movement, and spoke highly of the motives of the leaders, and the additional curse; and thus the temperance movement, with its badges and medals, was made use of by designing people to render more perfect a system of organization for other purposes. He did not apprehend any danger of an outbreak in Ireland, for Mr. O'Connell, as he himself declared, "knew a trick worth two of that." His whole policy was to keep the people in order while keeping them also in a constant agitation for causing them to meet in myriads. The real danger to be apprehended was not the repeal of the union, but the organization of the entire country under the plea of repeal. The danger was in fact the combination of the Catholic clergy with the mass of the people of Ireland for the purpose of subverting the rights of property in Ireland. While he said this he felt bound in justice to say that the most alarmed of all classes at the present state of things, and the most anxious for its termination, were the respectable Roman Catholics. He supported the second reading of the bill.—Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL opposed the bill, and said, from the conduct of both parties in the house, the people of Ireland had no dependence but upon themselves.—Mr. V. STUART supported the bill, which he hoped would be amended in committee.—Sir H. W. BARRON opposed the bill as unnecessary.—After a few words from Colonel CHATTERTON, the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House of Lords met at four o'clock, and the royal assent (by commission) was given to several public and private bills. No other business was transacted.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

In the House of Commons, the table was presented to upwards of 200 petitions from all parts of the kingdom, and many of them very numerously signed, against the Education Bill.—Several other hon. members presented similar petitions.—Mr. WYNN gave notice that, on the motion for the Speaker's election, that the committee had determined J. Collett, Esq., to have been duly returned. The adjourned debate on the Arms (Ireland) Bill was resumed.—Mr. F. MAULE opposed the bill. He did not complain merely of the light of a police regulation. The hon. member proceeded to show, at great length, the injustice that had been imposed upon Ireland, arguing that coercion never could heal the discontent which was the real evil that was suffering.—Mr. J. O'BRIEN said that hon. members were now called upon to sacrifice the liberties of Ireland under the delusive name of an Arms Bill.—Sir J. GRAHAM and Sir JAMES GRAHAM HOPE supported the measure as a strong remedy for a great evil.—Captain BERNAL said that the present agitators of Ireland only spoke the spirit of the people.—Sir GEORGE GREY said that the present measure was the light of a police regulation. The hon. member proceeded to show, at great length, the injustice that had been imposed upon Ireland, arguing that coercion never could heal the discontent which was the real evil that was suffering.—Mr. J. O'BRIEN said that hon. members were now called upon to sacrifice the liberties of Ireland under the delusive name of an Arms Bill.—Sir J. GRAHAM and Sir JAMES GRAHAM HOPE supported the measure as a strong remedy for a great evil.—Captain BERNAL said that the present agitators of Ireland only spoke the spirit of the people.—Sir GEORGE GREY said that the present measure was urgent to justify placing arms in the hands of the peasantry of Ireland.—The O'CONNOR DON contended that no sufficient cause existed in Ireland to justify the passing of the present measure, or any other of the coercion, legislation on all; it was one that no English gentleman would allow to be applied to his country. Justice to Ireland was all that the supporters of repeal desired.—Mr. D. BARRY and Mr. HORSMAN opposed the bill. Mr. HUME said, although he disapproved of the bill, he should not vote against the second reading, but hoped to make some alteration in it in a committee.—Sir ARTHUR BROOKE expressed his astonishment that this bill had been brought forward.—Mr. HAWES contended that no case had been made out for the introduction of the bill. In fact, it had been shown that those crimes which grew out of the use of arms had diminished. He must, therefore, consider the bill as an indication of the system upon which the Government had determined to govern Ireland in future, which was to revert to the old plan of force and coercion.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL, after remarking on the different speeches which had been addressed to the house during the debate, contended that sufficient admission had been made, and a particular case proved to justify the House to justify the Government in bringing forward the measure.—Under other circumstances the bill might have been considered unconstitutional. The measure had been misrepresented; it did not deprive the people of Ireland of the power of having arms in their possession, but it required that they should be registered and stamped. The Government were determined to legislate for Ireland as a nation—not for a party. It was for the Irish, therefore, consider the bill as an indication of the system upon which the Government had determined to govern Ireland in future, which was to revert to the old plan of force and coercion.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL said, although he disapproved of the bill, he should not vote against the second reading, but hoped to make some alteration in it in a committee.—Sir ARTHUR BROOKE expressed his astonishment that this bill had been brought forward.—Mr. HAWES contended that no case had been made out for the introduction of the bill. In fact, it had been shown that those crimes which grew out of the use of arms had diminished. He must, therefore, consider the bill as an indication of the system upon which the Government had determined to govern Ireland in future, which was to revert to the old plan of force and coercion.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL, after remarking on the different speeches which had been addressed to the house during the debate, contended that sufficient admission had been made, and a particular case proved to justify the House to justify the Government in bringing forward the measure.—Under other circumstances the bill might have been considered unconstitutional. The measure had been misrepresented; it did not deprive the people of Ireland of the power of having arms in their possession, but it required that they should be registered and stamped. The Government were determined to legislate for Ireland as a nation—not for a party. It was for the Irish



INTERIOR OF ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH, EDINBURGH.—THE PROTEST.

THE SCOTCH CHURCH.

The importance of "the Great Scottish Secession" has induced us to obtain for the gratification of our readers the annexed illustrations of the principal scenes of this extraordinary movement.

GREAT HALL AT THE CANON MILLS.

The first engraving represents the interior of St. Andrew's Church, Edinburgh, at the first meeting of the General Assembly. His Grace the Commissioner, the Marquis of Bute, is seated on his throne; and Dr. Walsh is "tabling the Protest," as detailed in our paper of the 20th ult., p. 336.

The next engraving shows the exterior of the place of meeting of the first Free Assembly, the Canon Mills Hall, Tanfield, whither the seceding clergy withdrew from St. Andrew's Hall.

The third engraving represents the interior of Canon Mills Hall, at the meeting of the Free Assembly, Dr. Chalmers addressing the meeting subsequent to his appointment as Moderator.

For some days after the disruption produced by the Non-intrusion Commissioners leaving the General Assembly, on Thursday, 18th May, it was generally understood that the clergymen of the party were to continue their ministrations in the established churches till the first Sunday of June, when it was intended they would finally and formally demit their charges. Subsequent events, however, seem to have caused an alteration in this arrangement, for the protesters and others, having sent in a deed of separation to the General Assembly, and that body having declared those who had signed the protest and left the Assembly no longer ministers of the Church of Scotland, and their parishes vacant, it became necessary that places of worship should be procured without delay for those who had thus thrown up their churches. Accordingly, all of them in Glasgow, seven in number, had provided places of meeting previous to last Sunday, which were made known to their hearers by advertisements and placards towards the end of the week.

The seceding clergymen were variously distributed throughout the city. Dr. Brown (St. John's) preached in the City Hall in the forenoon, and Dr. Buchanan (Tron), in the afternoon and evening. Dr. Henderson (St. Enoch's) officiated, forenoon and afternoon, in the New Corn-exchange, Hope-street. Dr. Paterson (St. Andrew's) occupied the Black Bull Hall; Dr. Forbes (St. Paul's), the Methodist Chapel, Canon-street; Dr. Smyth (St. George's) occupied Dr. Willis's church, Renfield-street; and Mr. Lorimer (St. David's) preached in the Assembly Rooms. Such of these temporary places as required alteration were comfortably fitted up for the occasion with pulpits and forms, and all of them, with an exception, perhaps, were filled with respectable audiences. In the City Hall, especially, the crowd was immense, two congregations being collected there, in addition to those strangers who went from curiosity, amounting to a considerable number. Upwards of 4000 persons must have been present at each diet of worship, and many withdrew, unable to obtain admittance. In Edinburgh there was, as might have been expected, a general diminution in the numbers throughout—in some of the churches to a much greater extent than in others. The new places of worship opened by the seceding ministers were generally well attended.

MEETING OF THE FIRST FREE ASSEMBLY.

At the evening sederunt of the Free Presbyterian Church, in Edinburgh, on Thursday week, the following letter from the Marquis of Breadalbane was read, and received with great cheering:—

"Dear Mr. Dunlop,—I received your note of the 17th instant yesterday morning, and as I have also received the Scotch papers, I am aware of all your proceedings down to Saturday. After a careful perusal of these, and having given my anxious consideration to the various topics of the Queen's letter, and the spirit which pervades it, I am most reluctantly obliged to give up that hope that I had till now fondly entertained, that the Government were really in earnest in their desire to bring in a measure consistent with the rights and privileges of the Presbyterian Church, and securing to the parishes of Scotland the appointment of ministers acceptable to the people. My resolve, therefore, is now taken, to vindicate my principles as a Presbyterian, and to leave the Established Church; and I beg of you to command my humble services in any way in which they can be most useful to the cause of the Free Presbyterian Church.—I remain, dear Mr. Dunlop Very faithfully yours. (Signed) "BREADALBANE."

BURGHFIELD NEW CHURCH, BERKS.

Burghfield is a rectory in the hundred of Theale and deanery of Reading; and the church, which has just been rebuilt, as above, was consecrated, on Thursday week, by the Lord Bishop of Oxford, attended by the Rev. H. C. Cherry, rector, and the clergy of the diocese and neighbourhood; the interesting ceremony being witnessed by a large number of the parishioners and neighbouring gentry.

The design possesses originality and unity of parts seldom met with in modern churches. The architect, Mr. J. B. Clay, of Reading, has adopted the Anglo-Norman style, which we think peculiarly applicable to rural districts. The plan of the structure is cruciform; the nave being occupied with open, and the transepts with enclosed, benches.

In the chancel the tablets alternating with the windows have a good effect, which is heightened by a handsome painted window, presented by the rector, and containing a full-length figure of the Virgin Mary, from a picture by Rubens. At the west end is a recessed gallery for the school children, choir, organ, &c. The pulpit and reading-desk, of stone, are each of appropriate and novel design.

In this church provision has been made for 608 sittings, of which 402 are free. The total cost of the building has been £2200.

A beautiful lithograph, by Day and Haghe, has been published in aid of the building fund, in which, we regret, there is still a deficiency.

INTERIOR OF BURGHFIELD NEW CHURCH.

RESTORATION OF CHARLES II.—Monday being the anniversary of the Restoration of King Charles II., the chaplain of the House of Commons, in conformity with the old usage, preached before "the house" in St. Margaret's Church. The attendance of members was very limited, and "the house" consisted of the Speaker, the Sergeant-at-Arms, the clerks and other officers, and about eight members. Amongst those present were Sir Robert Inglis, Mr. Brotherton, and Mr. John Round.

POSTAGE STAMPS.—We are enabled to place before our readers the following statement of the amount received for postage stamps, sold at three of the leading post receiving-houses in London, during the past two years:—

	1841.	1842.
White, Cornhill	£4,435 16 6	£7,640 13 6
Reid, Charing-cross	2 636 10 2	3,507 7 6
Smith, Vere-lane	2 374 12 6	3 327 7 0

From this return it will be seen that the increase of the year 1842 nearly doubled that of the preceding, that Mr. White alone, in the two years, disposed of stamps to the amount of £12,076, which, reduced into single sheets, gives the extraordinary number of 2,898,348, and would, if placed lengthways, extend over a distance of forty-two miles and three quarters; or the total number sold in the above houses would cover 6,238¾ square yards, or reach 128 miles, the distance from London-bridge to Havre. The Post-office allowance on postage stamps to receiving-houses is 1 per cent., consequently the discount to the three offices named would amount to £239 14s. 8d., at this trifling rate of remuneration.

BEATING THE TOWER BOUNDARY.—See p. 384.

MAY MEETINGS.

As the month has drawn to a close these meetings have assumed a diversity and homeliness of character which contrasts strongly with the multitudinous assemblies which ennobled the first three days of its commencement. They have not, however, become less interesting, and certainly not less promising of immediate and most beneficial results. On the 8th a most important one was held, at Jewin-crescent Chapel, of the

LONDON WELSH AUXILIARY BIBLE SOCIETY.

W. Bulkeley Hughes, Esq., in the chair.

The report exhibited a very satisfactory picture of the progress of Scriptural knowledge and morality in the more neglected regions of the principality. The Rev. Henry Richard, alluding to this happy state of things, said that he must be allowed to state his belief that the peasantry and the great mass of the inhabitants of the principality possessed a much higher and more extensive knowledge of Scripture than the same class of people in England. He had heard calculations made as to the state of education in Wales from the parochial returns of the number of persons who could attach their own signatures to the marriage register. But, he must be allowed to demur, in the most distinct language, to that mode of testing the amount of education existing in Wales; for it must be borne in mind that writing, to the great body of the peasantry, was an acquirement of comparatively little consequence, living, as they did, from age to age, amongst their own friends and kindred: and, though very many amongst these people might be found incapable of writing even their own names, yet it would be found that all, from the highest to the lowest, were well able to peruse the Scriptures in their native language; ay, and some of the peasant boys of that mountain land might puzzle, with their intimate knowledge of Scripture, some very wise and learned theologians.

Allusion was then made to the desirableness of extending a knowledge of the native language among the resident gentry and landed proprietors; for "how otherwise could they form a correct idea of the wants and wishes of the people?" The meeting concluded with the expression of a hope that nothing would ever deter the Welsh residents of London from prosecuting their labours in behalf of the Bible Society, and that, despite every obstacle that might arise, they would ever bear in mind the noble maxim of their celebrated poet—

Yn mlaen a chwi, fel milwyr da,
Yn llon, er gwaetha'r lhd.

On May 11 a deeply interesting meeting of the FEMALE SERVANTS' HOME SOCIETY

took place in Exeter Hall, the Right Hon. Lord Howard, M.P., in the chair. It was stated that the object of the institution was "to preserve the moral character of female servants when out of place;" and that it proposed to accomplish its humane purposes by establishing "homes" in different parts of the metropolis and its immediate neighbourhood, in which servants of good character, out of situations, might be allowed to reside by paying one shilling weekly, assisted by the care of a judicious matron and enjoying the recommendation of a numerous committee. A "home" on such principles had been established in Nutford-place, Bryanston-square, to which, since its foundation in 1836, nearly 1500 servants had been admitted, and which at present contained 200 persons. Many important statistical statements were laid before the meeting in furtherance of the claims of the society to universal sympathy and support, in all of which we most heartily acquiesce; for when we consider the manner in which servants are situated with respect to the families in which they live, we can hardly doubt that a powerful influence may be and is possessed by them. They become in many cases the depositories of important family matters, which could not be publicly known without producing serious injury; they are often necessarily entrusted with property, of various kinds and in various ways, the misapplying of which might produce abundant evil; they are the instruments whereby "home," that greatest of all comforts in England, acquires many of its attractions in cleanliness, neatness, and order; and, which is perhaps most important of all, they exert a powerful influence on children of both sexes, who are in a considerable degree under their charge. It is wrong, both to employers and to servants, to regard the latter merely as machines, hired to do a certain quantity and kind of work; they are, and ought to be, something more than this: they are moral agents, whose sphere of operation, though not always apparent even to the individuals most concerned, is large and important.

If this be the case, it behoves us to inquire how the influence thus possessed by domestic servants may best be made conducive to their own advantage and the welfare of others; and how far English society has already taken measures in the advancement of this desirable object. The meeting, feeling themselves to be pledged to their protection and religious improvement, put the case most strongly before the public. It was shown that there are in the metropolis upwards of 100,000 female servants. The exact numbers are 101,292 in the metropolis, and 6670 round it; making 107,962 in what is commonly called London. This was no rough and rapid calculation, made for the sake of bringing out a large number; the fact was arrived at in several ways, and the Government returns at the census in 1831 showed that this was the exact number.

The question might be asked, Are there so many in the city of London as to require an institution of the kind? The number of female servants connected with the city, not to mention the Holborn division, where there are 29,000, was—In Finsbury division, 8,166; in the Tower division, 9,137; in Southwark, 5,035; in the City within the walls, 3282; in the City without the walls, 7,070; total, 30,690; 30,690 female servants connected with the City!

In reference to property under the care of servants, it was stated that in the dwelling-houses in England and Wales there are £130,000,000 of property, in household furniture alone; in wearing apparel, £16,000,000; in plate, jewels, and similar articles £34,000,000; so that £180,000,000 of property are under the immediate care of our domestic servants.

And respecting the morals of children likely to be affected by the morals of servants, it was asked, suppose a servant out of place,—she goes to lodge—where? They go to lodge very often in courts and alleys, where you would feel some degree of difficulty and hesitation, if called upon to visit the place. And why do they go there? Because of the expense of going to respectable lodgings. It was found almost impossible for a young person to get a room to herself in a respectable house under 5s. a week—though of course, if two of them could go together, it would be 2s. 6d. each. Their money is thus soon gone—three or four weeks run away with their little fund. And what is the consequence? They pledge their clothes; and as long as these last they can exist; and when the clothes are gone, what is it they do? They give themselves up to immorality, or they fly to the Thames. Nearly one female suicide every week had taken place in the river Thames alone, from the year 1770; at least the average is 47 a year.

The reports of the Magdalen Hospital powerfully support the views of the Servant's Society; as will be seen from the following account just issued of the young women discharged in credit from the Magdalen Hospital during the four years 1839, 1840, 1841, and 1842, prepared by the treasurer to the charity from authentic information, and with the utmost accuracy, proving the happy results of their admission to be, that during that period two-thirds of the number were permanently reclaimed. Married, 43; in service, or with their friends, 151; dead, 5; lunatic in confinement, 1; situation unknown, 46; behaving ill, 43: total, 289.

The Servants' Society strikes at the root of the malady, and endeavours to prevent those evils which the Magdalen, to a very limited, but still most important extent, does but mitigate.

"The merciful man," says Solomon, "is merciful to his beast;" and in their jubilees of mercy it must have been strange had the poor animals, subject as they are to caprice, pain, and undue coercion, been overlooked. One good principle begets another; and it was not, therefore, an unexpected sight to meet those who had at previous meetings advocated the claims of suffering humanity assembling in great numbers at the meeting of the

ROYAL SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS,

which was held on the 18th in Hanover-square Rooms, the Earl of Carnarvon in the chair. The society appeared, from the report, to have done much good in the prosecution and punishment of several flagrant cases of cruelty to horses; in the suppression of cockfighting and other brutalizing sports; and generally in the better ordering of our markets, race-courses, and cattle-fairs. The funds, however, were in great need of support.

CHARITY DINNER.

On May 23, the twenty-eighth annual meeting of the

PEACE SOCIETY

was held at Devonshire House, Houndsditch. The spacious edifice was crowded by a highly respectable auditory, chiefly consisting of members of the Society of Friends. S. Gurney, Esq., in the chair.

The Rev. J. Jefferson (Secretary) read the report. It commenced by paying a well-deserved tribute to the memory of the late Rev. N. M. Harry, who was for some years the efficient secretary of the society. The labours of Mr. Rigaud, one of the society's agents, were then detailed. The agency fund had been increased, but additional subscriptions were needed, in order to carry out the design. The general operations had been carried on with considerable encouragement. The publications of the society had been circulated to at least as great an extent as in former years. The American Peace Society continued to labour with assiduity and zeal, and with much success. In France it was hoped that there was an increased feeling in favour of peace. The report then expressed the gratification of the committee at the termination of the wars in Affganistan and China, and after alluding with approbation to the formation of a society for the prevention of duelling, concluded by calling attention to the ensuing Peace Convention. From the cash account it appeared that the total receipts for general purposes during the past year were £675 2s. 10d.; the expenditure, £659 12s. 1d.; leaving a balance in hand of £15 10s. 9d.: but the society was under liabilities to the amount of £350. On account of the agency fund, there had been received £173 13s.; expended, £216; leaving a balance against the fund of £43 7s.

Mr. Ryland (agent to the society), in explaining his labours, said:—I shall confine myself to that part of the society's proceedings which has reference to the Continent of Europe, and where I have been privileged to labour. It is evident to all, that if we wish to effect a peace between two parties at variance, there must be a corresponding feeling of peace on both sides; and therefore it is not sufficient that we should disseminate these principles in our own land, but extend them to others. To corroborate the statement contained in the report, as to the improvement in public feeling respecting peace in the important kingdom of France, I will briefly contrast things as they were with what they now are. When I first visited Paris, in the latter end of the year 1840, the war spirit was most prevalent. In every café that I entered I heard rarely anything but bitter invectives against England. At that time there took place the military triumphal procession to accompany the mortal remains of Napoleon to their final deposit in a magnificent mausoleum, surring up all the former martial spirit of the French nation. Most of the English and quiet Paris left to know the state of the public mind, I may mention that a little boy in a Sunday-school one afternoon came strutting up to his teacher and said, as if he could hardly contain himself, "Il nous faut la guerre"—(We must have war). "Why so?" said the teacher. "Notre honneur est blessé"—(Our honour is wounded). How many wars, however, have actually been undertaken on no better a pretext. But, on our visiting France last month, I found a visible improvement in many respects. I may instance the sentiments put forth in the French journals; and the completion and opening of the Paris and Rouen railway, which was undertaken by French and British capitalists, and formed by French and British labour. (Cheers.) It is evident also in the plans and projects brought before the Chambers of France, which have reference to internal improvements, and to the extension of manufactures and commerce.

Mr. Buckingham, Henry Macnamara, Esq. (author of the Prize Essay on Peace), Rev. J. Barat, and others addressed the meeting on behalf of that "sweet peace," which to the great satisfaction of their hearers, especially the ladies.

Lays the rough paths of peevish nature even,

An agreeable variation in the character of these meetings took place on Holy Thursday, the 25th, when according to an immemorial custom, the charity boys belonging to the various parishes throughout the metropolis, headed by the minister, churchwardens, vestry-clerk, and beadle, perambulated the various parochial districts for the purpose of beating the bounds, a ceremony which the boys performed with long white wands, accompanied by such hearty cheers as showed that they rejoiced in having obtained a holyday, and would have been ready, for the same indulgence, to have beaten anything much more formidable than cane walls. In numerous parishes the boundary mark lies in some very curious and out-of-the-way places, and a great deal of merriment was, in consequence, caused by the intrusion of the juvenile visiters whose presence was utterly unexpected, their customary annual visit having been quite forgotten. The visiters were, however, invariably received with the utmost good humour.

On the same day, the triennial ceremony of perambulating the "bounds" of the liberties and royalty of the Tower of London took place. After divine service had been performed in the ancient chapel of St. Peter-ad-Vincula by the Rev. Henry Melvill, the chaplain, the procession for "beating the bounds" was formed on the parade under the direction of Mr. Lund (senior yeoman warder), as follows:—The high constable of the Tower Hamlets, the headsman bearing the axe of execution, a painter to mark the bounds, yeomen-warders in full dress, with halberts, walking two and two abreast, children of the Tower National School, with wands; children of Wellclose School; the Deputy-Governor of the Tower (Colonel Gurwood); the Fort-Major of the Tower (Major Elrington), mounted on horseback; the High-Bailiff of the Tower (Mr. J. W. Lush), the chaplain (Rev. H. Melvill); the Master-Gunner of the batteries; the vestry-clerk of the Tower precinct (Mr. H. Athans); officers of the royal engineers; crier of the Royalty court; beadles of the liberties, with their staves of office; peace officers; yeomen of the court-leet, and inhabitant householders. The procession thus formed, consisting of about 1000 persons, then moved forwards, stopping at the different boundary stations, where the "broad arrow" was painted in red, on a white ground, as a boundary mark, the chaplain at the same time repeating the emphatic words of the Hebrew lawgiver, "Cursed be he who removeth his neighbour's land-mark!" The ceremony being concluded (which occupied nearly an hour), in the afternoon the gentlemen who accompanied the procession sat down to an elegant cold collation at the Gold Chain, Tavern within the Tower, which was provided at the expense of his Grace the Duke of Wellington, Constable of the Tower, who has on all occasions evinced a praiseworthy determination to maintain inviolate the rights and privileges attached to this ancient fortress and palace of the Sovereigns of England. The health of the noble duke was drunk with great enthusiasm, Colonel Gurwood responding to the toast.

Our engraving presents an accurate picture of this interesting ceremony, and will, we doubt not, be very highly prized by the lovers of the old national customs, which, in this smoothing-centralizing age, are yet preserved to distinguish us as a people.

—Many charity schools, after beating the boundaries of their respective parishes, were treated to abundant feast of good things; and never did we behold more sudden and distinguished honour done to the compliments. We really trembled for the poor who on these occasions receive the broken victuals; but we are happy to say, that such was the munificence of the parish authorities, the poor supplicants of gate-alms were in no case permitted to go empty away. We have added a picture of one of these charitable wind-ups of a hospitable day.

On Saturday, the 27th, the twenty-fifth anniversary festival of the was celebrated at the Freemasons' Tavern. A numerous body of gentlemen, friends to the institution, and many of whom wore the national costume, partook of an excellent dinner, which was put on table in a manner highly creditable to the proprietors of the tavern.

CALEDONIAN ASYLUM

General the Hon. Sir A Duff, G.C.H., who presided, was supported on his right and left by Sir James Riddell, the Hon. J. Buller Johnson, Major Anderson, Captain C. Forbes, and Messrs. Walker, J. Gordon Duff, H. Longlands, and J. Matthieson. The healths of "the Queen," "Queen Dowager," "Prince Albert," and "the Prince of Wales" having been proposed and drunk with every demonstration of loyalty, the hon. chairman rose to propose "the memory of the late Duke of Sussex, the late president and patron of the institution," which being received in solemn silence and with every demonstration of respect, Sir Alexander then gave the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Caledonian Asylum, and may the offspring of the brave never want a protector." In proposing this toast the chairman observed, that it was unnecessary to waste much breath in recommending to Scotchmen an institution so valuable, and so entirely national in its character; it would be only necessary to recal to their minds the object for which the charity was instituted to induce every Scotchman to open his purse liberally, and he would assure them that it would not be throwing money away. The object of the Caledonian Asylum was to support and educate the children of soldiers, sailors, and marines, natives of Scotland, who had died or been disabled in the service of their country, and the orphans and children of indigent Scotch parents, resident in London, not entitled to parochial relief; and he was sure he should not have to appeal in vain to his countrymen to support, as far as their means would allow, so valuable, so admirable an institution. At the present moment, though they had room for a much larger number of children, prudence compelled them to restrict their inmates to about 90 boys, who in the Caledonian Asylum received a good plain, sound, and religious education. At the last examination of the children he had himself attended, and he could, therefore, speak to the excellence of the system pursued, and to the progress and attainments of the scholars. (Applause.)

The inmates of the school, clad in the national garb, to the number of 90, were then introduced, and were marched round the room, headed by the pipers, and a more healthy and handsome body of children could not be found anywhere; indeed their fine appearance was as remarkable as it was creditable to those who had the care of them.

On their disappearance from the room, Major Anderson rose and said that there could be but one opinion upon the way in which the charity was carried out as regarded the boys; but why was not the charity extended to girls? He was quite sure that funds could be raised to extend the benefits of the asylum to them, and for his part he was fully ready to contribute in carrying out such a desirable object. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. G. Duff read the report of the situation of the establishment as regarded funds, by which it appeared that in the course of the past year the income derived by the asylum from dividends in stock, donations, subscriptions, and produce of the Caledonian ball amounted to £1705, whilst the expenditure was £1765.

A list of subscriptions was then read, in which we remarked the names of the Duke of Cambridge for £10 10s., Mr. J. Matthieson, 100 guineas; Captain Forbes, 50 guineas; Mr. A. Grant, 20 guineas, and numerous other donations for various liberal donations. We understood the sums collected at the dinner to amount to upwards of £564 for the charity, and £150 (£100 of which was subscribed by Major Anderson) towards the fund for the extension of its benefits to girls.

In the course of the evening several songs and glees were sung by Misses Dolby and Lucombe, and by Messrs. Wilson, Broadhurst, and other professional gentlemen. The pipers of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex and his Grace the Duke of Sutherland attended, and added greatly by their efforts to keep up the national character of the festival.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 4.—Whit-Sunday.
MONDAY, 5.—King of Hanover born, 1771.
TUESDAY, 6.—
WEDNESDAY, 7.—Reform Bill passed, 1832.
THURSDAY, 8.—Mrs. Siddons died, 1831.
FRIDAY, 9.—St. Anthony.
SATURDAY, 10.—

HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE JUNE 3.

Morning..... ..17 minutes after 4 | Evening.....37 minutes after 4.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. H.," Leeds.—We know of no instrument better than the camera.
"J. T." should write respecting the cadetship to the East India Company.
"A Constant Reader, X. K."—We have more than once engraven Freemasons' Hall. We are glad to see that the patriotic spirit of the militia is unabated.
"Geo. G. M."—Thanks for the sketch of Grana Uile.
"I. S."—Mogg's "Guide to London" is as satisfactory as any.
"Next of Kin," Huddersfield, should apply to a respectable stockbroker.
"W. A. P."—The zodiacal light is considered by many to be the best solution; and "nebulosities" may probably be another name for it.
"B.," Norwich.—Sir Joshua Reynolds's portrait of Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse is in the Dulwich Gallery. We do not remember the exact size.
"A Subscriber."—The law relating to wills has not been altered since 1838.
"A Subscriber" is mistaken. We have never advocated, either directly or indirectly, any such tenets.
"A Jockey."—Aristides was trained by Dawson.
"Agricola."—We will endeavour to procure the portrait of the Chief Secretary.
"A Subscriber from the commencement" has favoured us with the following correction of a passage in our No. 90, p. 255:—"The author of the excellent "History of the Peninsular War" is major-General W. F. P. Napier, C.B., the present Lieutenant-Governor of Guernsey, a younger brother of Sir Charles Napier, who obtained the glorious victory over the Ameers of Scinde, and is the eldest of three, the other, Sir George Thomas Napier, being Governor of the Cape of Good Hope."
"A Subscriber from the commencement."—Will our correspondent favour us with the sketch of Anerley?
"A. K." should apply at Herald's College.
"Penn."—He cannot claim the legacy.
"W. Wedlake."—Mrs. Mardyn is, we believe, on the Continent.
"R. B. F."—A memorial to the Postmaster-General must be signed by several householders who well know the applicant.
"J. B."—In Everybody's Column.
"A. Q." "J. D.," Yarmouth, and "Dirt"—See our announcement of our next supplement.
"J. K. W. L."—We do not know, but our correspondent may probably learn of the choir in his own town.
"Patricius."—We consider, with our correspondent, that the present repeal agitation must prove very injurious to Ireland. Can he authenticate his statement respecting Mr. O. Lowndes?
"J. J. D.," Post-office, Bath.—The communication shall be returned if the full address be forwarded.
"P. W."—We are glad to hear of his high approval of the two Supplements. To the second question, the engravings alone cost upwards of £150.
"Continua."—Our space is limited.
"M. A. S."—Thanks for his approval of the Supplements. The price of the paper is 6*s. 6d. for thirteen numbers.*
"A Subscriber from the first."—The portrait would have been interesting at the time of the marriage.
"W. B. K.," Knutsford.—Will our correspondent favour us with a sketch of the presentation, &c.?
"H. J. M.," Guildford Inn.—The MS. is left for return at our office.
"J. M. B.," Newman-street.—We are sorry we cannot find time.
"A Subscriber from the first."—The post-office charge for delivery is, we beleave, legal.
"W. B.," Enfield.—The lines have merit, but are unequal.
"M. D.," Skinouth-street.—The novel now in course of publication in our paper is original, i. e. has not before been printed.
The Government School of Design organized such Mr. Papworth, and not with Mr. Dyce (as stated in our last), who succeeded Mr. P. as director.
Thanks for the correction.
A Sunscriber, "W. B.," wishes us to caution the public against an impostor who represents himself to be a collector on behalf of a Baptist congregation at Ratcliffe-highway.
"H. D. G.," Bagnigge-road.—We are entirely of his opinion, and think if a greater crime to steal the common from the goose than the goose from the common.
"A Somerset Farmer."—We have not space.
We have been much gratified in examining one of Chubb's patent detector padlocks made of gold. As to the utility of the Messrs. Chubbs' locks generally, we can bear testimony from personal experience.
"E. M. S.," Belfast.—We shall be happy to receive sketches.
"Humanitas."—We are happy to receive his good opinion.
"Gaiday."—A license is requisite for coins exceeding half-an-ounce weight.
"Mr. J. N.," Bartlett's-buildings.—We cannot agree with Mr. W. as to "our Israelitish origin."
"H."—His suggestion shall be attended to.
"C. Castle" is under consideration.
"R. S.," Belgrave, Leicester.—The subjects shall shortly appear.
Mr. Wyld, of Charing-cross East, has published an excellent plan of the battle of Meanee, near Hyderabad, drawn by Lieutenant Fitzgerald, from a survey by Captain Jacob, Bombay Artillery. It is remarkably full and satisfactory in its details.
'Public Entry into Cork."—We have no room.
The Barge Day, Newcastle, reached us too late.
"Le Chevalier de C——."—We have not received the sketch of Beranger.
"J. B.," Leicester.—Thanks for the lithograph; but the subject has been too often engraved.
"W. G.," Gateshead.—At present we do not require the sketches suggested. The view of the establishment at Battersea shall appear.
"Captain M. Denton."—The tallest chimney in the kingdom is that completed last year at St. Rollox chemical works, in Scotland. It is 450 feet in height from the ground to the cope-stone, being exactly the height of St. Peter's, at Rome. Last year also there was completed at Blankhorn's chemical works, Little Bolton, a chimney 367½ feet in height.
"Cantab."—Good Friday Buns. The term bun is derived by Bryant from bo-un, a species of sacred bread which the Greeks offered to the gods; and the cross commemorates the passion of Christ on Good Friday.
"W. D."—The actress in question first appeared on the stage in 1819, we think at Drury-lane Theatre. We cannot answer impertinent questions about ladies' ages.
"Rose."—The large conservatory at the Horticultural Society's Gardens at Chiswick, constructed by Anger, comprises 11,000 feet of glass, and is heated by 2700 feet of pipe.
"Demoiselle" is quite right, but the error was merely typographical.
General correspondents will be answered in our next.
"Continuus," Brighton.—Our correspondent's hints shall not be lost sight of.
"The Forest Days."—The second and concluding verses of Mr. Loder's song were accidentally omitted last week. (See Supplement, p. 385.) We now subjoin them.—

II.

"Oh! merry it was brave bold Robin Hood
And his yeomen stout to see,
In their Lincoln garbs by fair Sherwood,
Meet under the tryal tree!
And they fed the poor from the rich man's store
(But they robb'd right courteously);
And their name it went like a blessing sent,
Thro' all the north countrye.
Then, oh! for the days, &c.

III.

"Oh! the leaves are bright in the summer sheen,
And the glades still prankt with flow'rs;
But the archer green no more is seen
At dawn or at noonlight hours!
The old oaks sigh for the days gone by,
And the yew and the ash make moan,
And the sun looks drear on the forest sere,
For the days that for aye are gone!
Then, oh! for the days, &c."

CHESS.—"Arthur Johnston," "G. Walton," "T. A.," "O. C. F.," "T. W.," "Shakespeare," "Pawn en passant," "Stalemate," "A Subscriber," "Salsio."—See our chess article. We regret the error, and will endeavour to be correct in future.
"Philidor, Jun."—We could not find room for his proposed communications.
"Checkmate."—Your suggestions shall be attended to.
Several chess correspondents shall be answered in our next.
We are obliged to defer our chess problem for want of room.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—At the close of the present month we shall present to our readers another SUPPLEMENT—GRATIS; making the third gratuitous supplement within Six Months.

We are compelled from want of room to defer our concluding notice of the Royal Academy Exhibition until next week.

FANCY FAIR AT GREENWICH HOSPITAL.—In our next will be given a splendid Engraving of the Fancy Fair held in the Painted Hall on Thursday and Friday, for the benefit of the funds of that excellent charity, the Shipwrecked Seamen and Mariners' Society.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1843.

Nothing is more calculated to breed feelings of irritation and discontent among the people, or to induce in the minds of the humbler classes of the community the idea that they are regarded by their richer and more fortunate brethren as a separate and distant caste, created only to be newers of wood and drawers of water, to minister to the cravings of luxury or swell the hordes of avarice, than the awarding by law of disproportionate punishments for trifling offences. The whole subject of penal regulation and prison discipline, indeed, is intimately connected with the art of government; for there is no surer mode of engendering a revolutionary feeling, which is generally the expression of some not groundless resentment against authority, than to administer the laws in the spirit of Draco. Every punishment disproportioned to the offence is so far an injustice to the offender, as it exceeds the just measure of severity which is called for by a regard to the safety and welfare of society.

From the more glaring anomalies which the criminal code of England was lately disgraced the law of England has been freed, by the exertions of two of our most distinguished public men of recent times, Sir R. Peel and Lord John Russel. Up to the commencement of the present century our code ranked among the most sanguinary in Europe. The barbarism of the feudal ages left its imprint as a character of cruelty on our legislation, which stimulated the efforts of the philanthropists of the day; Howard led the way, and Bentham, Romilly, and Mackintosh laboured in the field of purifying the statute-book from the relics of the dark ages. The result has been the restriction of capital punishment to a few cases of aggravated crime, in which the general sense of mankind still recognises the justice of its infliction; as well as the abolition of some barbarous modes of punishment which shocked the humane abolition of torture. The humanising influence of these changes has been extensively and most beneficially felt in the amelioration of the national character, which has been perceptible within the last generation, in the prevalence of a juster and sounder tone of feeling on the subject of criminal justice, and in the direction of the efforts of enlightened and Christian benevolence towards the moral reformation of the character as well as the physical excruciation of the frame.

Much, however, remains to be done towards the correction of our system of secondary punishments, in many respects a fitting companion of the elder theory of capital punishments, the practice of which is now so happily abolished. The great and crying evil of our criminal law is its inequality and uncertainty of operation. There are so great fear and favour which ensure certainty the punishment which may await an offence committed by him, until he hear his sentence from the lips of the judge who tries him. On the temptations which such a system holds out to the criminal mind, ever prone to dwell on the chances of escape, and undervalue those of punishment, it were needless to dwell. One judge will visit an offence with transportation, which another, with the same witnesses with overnight's imprisonment; and during the sitting of petty or quarter sessions every paper is full of accounts of men sentenced to endure for months the miseries of a rigorous incarceration for no more heinous offence than that of purloining a basket of apples or a bundle of sticks. Something of this, we are aware, is incidental to every system of criminal jurisprudence, and arises from the very definition of crimes. But the peculiar complication of our statutes, the multitude of laws, and the equally great variety of those who are to administer them, have carried these evils in England to a very aggravated pitch. The revision of the statute-book, codification, and the establishment of local courts, would go far to remove these causes of complaint.

On the subjects of fines for assault, and costs imposed on summary convictions for slight offences against the person or property, there is no less evidence of the inequality of operation belonging to our system than in more grave matters. The same amount of fine which to the rich man is a trifle is to the poor man almost a confiscation of his substance, or a dead weight on the earnings of his labour which no exertions will surmount. Hence, the one escapes with impunity, while the other, unable to pay the fine, is sent to rot amidst the contamination of a jail, and to take lessons in the school of depravity from convicted felons. Several gross cases of oppression from the imprisonment of poor persons unable to pay the costs of legal proceedings have lately been made public. Among these is that of a little boy, about the height of the table, who was fined, at the last Loughborough Petty Sessions, in the sum of 2s. 6d. for having thrown a stone into a private house out of wantonness; by which a child was accidentally hit, and cut on the forehead. The father, a poor labouring man, would have paid the fine, although the amount, small as it may appear, would have been a hard tax on his earnings; but the costs of the suit, the fees to the magistrate's clerk, and the constable, and other officers, who depend on them as a remuneration for their duties, having no fixed salaries, came to 12s. more. The poor man could not pay this, and the little boy was, in consequence, sentenced to a month's imprisonment. So much for this part of our system.

The means of ensuring fixity and equality of punishment after the sentence has been pronounced we must reserve as the subject of some future article. At present, the treatment of prisoners after sentence varies very much, according to the caprice of the local magistrates or the Visiting Justices of the jail, and the late case of Knutsford prison, which, a few days back, occupied the attention of the House of Commons, is a pregnant proof of the cruelties to which such a system is calculated to lead.

From every side complaints are addressed to us of the state in which the local authorities allow the streets of the metropolis to remain. Scarcely a week passes in which some one or other of the great thoroughfares is not blocked up and rendered impassable by the operations of some wood-paving, gas, or water company. There needs no great power of observation to see that this continual tinkering could not be required if the work was properly done; and it is just possible that the members of the parish vestries, boards of paving commissioners, and so forth may find their account in these doings. The public business of the citizens of London affords a fruitful field of jobbing; and there exist no means, at present, of placing an adequate check on the proceedings of the local vermin, who burrow in the corners of our old jurisdictions, like rats about an old house. Nor will there ever be an adequate power of control over subordinate bodies until some great central corporation, embracing the whole metropolis, shall be established. Such a body would find ample occupation in the multitudinous affairs of this great city. We firmly believe this is the only measure which can apply an effectual remedy to the evils to which we have adverted; and the people of the metropolis may rest assured that they pay dearly, in a hundred ways, direct and indirect, for the want of such an institution. Look at what daily occurs in Fleet-street, even when no repairs are going on! The passage of the street stopped for half an hour, and scenes of confusion and embarrassment in consequence produced, which would disgrace the capital of a barbarous people. Had London possessed the benefit of a local Parliament, possessing jurisdiction over its whole extent, we should speedily see our great thoroughfares widened, and put in a decent state of repair.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

CLAREMONT, Sunday.—The Venerable Archdeacon Wilberforce, who arrived upon a visit to her Majesty on Saturday afternoon, read prayers on Sunday morning before the Queen and the Royal household.

MONDAY.—The Royal party at Claremont took an airing in the afternoon shortly before four o'clock. Her Majesty and the Lady in Waiting, the Countess of Ashburnham, were in an open pony phaeton; the Royal Highness Prince Albert was on horseback. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was taken an airing soon afterwards in a carriage and four.

TUESDAY.—The Queen left Claremont for Buckingham Palace at Two o'clock precisely, arrived in town at twenty minutes before five o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, in a carriage and four. Her Majesty and the Prince were received at Buckingham Palace by the Lord Steward, the Lord Chamberlain, the Master of the Horse, the Vice-Chamberlain, Lord Colville, Lord in Waiting on his Royal Highness; and Sir Frederick Stovin, Groom in Waiting on her Majesty.

WEDNESDAY.—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen at Buckingham Palace, and remained to luncheon with her Majesty. A grand dinner was given in the evening at Buckingham Palace to the Queen Dowager, the Royal Family, and the Noble Directors of the Concerts of Ancient Music. The Royal party, consisting of the first arrival by the Maids of Honour and the Equerries in Waiting. Her Majesty the Queen Dowager was also received by the Lady and the Groom in Waiting, and was conducted through the grand staircase to the drawing-room by his Royal Highness Prince Albert. Immediately after dinner her Majesty, with her illustrious and distinguished visitors, proceeded to the Concert-room, the Music. Her Majesty and Prince Albert entered the Royal box about twenty minutes before nine o'clock; also after Majesty the Queen Dowager, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duchess of Kent, the Duke, Duchess, and Princess Augusta of Cambridge. Among the company were the Duchess of Sutherland, the Countesses of Jersey, Powis, Essex (Dowager); Lords Normanton, Powis, Bandon, Dartmouth, Devon, Emlyn and Lady; the Archbishop of Armagh, Bishop of London and family, and a most brilliant assemblage of rank and fashion. When her Majesty entered the company rose and received her in the most respectful manner; boisterous applause on the occasion at these concerts. The Queen and Royal party went into the tea-room at the end of the first part, when a great many ladies came, and were most graciously received by her Majesty, who took her departure about a quarter past eleven o'clock. The second of these performances will close on Wednesday next with Handel's Messiah, for the benefit of the Royal Society of Musicians

It is rumoured that previous to the nuptials of her Royal Highness the Princess Augusta of Cambridge with the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, an application will be made to Parliament by Ministers, to settle an annuity on that Princess of £3000 per annum. The auspicious ceremony is now understood to be fixed for the first week in July.

THE POLISH BALL AT WILLIS'S ROOMS.—The grand entertainment, which is to take place on Monday the 26th of June, is likely to rival in brilliancy the fancy fair lately held in Paris for the benefit of the Polish exiles, which all the beauty and rank of the French metropolis presided, and which produced a sum of upwards of £1000. The lady-patronesses' committee, of which the Duchesses of Bedford and Sutherland, the Marchioness of Abercorn and Ailesbury, the Ladies Marianne Alford and Norreys, are amongst the most active members, have held frequent meetings at Almack's, and have made arrangements which cannot fail to ensure a most splendid and successful assembly. They have particularly requested that all the ladies who were present at her Majesty's ball last season will appear in the dresses in which they were on that occasion. Sets of quadrilles, in Polish, Circassian, Greek, Indian, and other costumes, have been formed by the lady patronesses, and many ladies who have taken tickets are imitating their example; but the committee are very desirous to be informed of all the quadrille costumes that have been made up on the Saturday previous to the ball, in order that sufficient space for effect may be given to the dancers. The ladies' committee sent in their report to the comité d'état at the moment will probably be more striking than anything that has been witnessed at a public entertainment in this country.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

ELECTION COMMITTEES.—NOTTINGHAM COMMITTEE.—The general committee of elections met on Monday, and selected the following members to try the merits of the petitions presented in this case:—Mr. Ralph Bernal, Lord Courtney, Mr. James Baillie, Mr. Ogle, and Mr. Charles Round.—ATHLONE COMMITTEE.—The same committee also selected the following members to try the merits of the petition presented to the house, consisting of an undue return having been made for the borough of Athlone:—Mr. Stuart Wortley, Mr. Evans, Lord Barrington, Mr. J. M. Gibson, Mr. Joseph Neeld, and Sir F. Colebrooke. The following are the names of the committee appointed on Tuesday:—Mr. Charles Wood, chairman of the Nottingham election committee; and Mr. B. Hawes as chairman of the Athlone committee.

ATHLONE ELECTION COMMITTEE.—The committee appointed to try the merits of the petition against the last return for this borough met on Wednesday morning at ten o'clock, when it was stated by the agent for the petitioner that his counsel, Mr. Cockburn, "had gone to the Derby," and he begged of the committee to adjourn until next day. The counsel for the sitting member resisted this application; and, after several deliberations, it was put to the agent whether, if the committee adjourned, he would be answerable for the day's expenses. This he said he was not authorised to do; and the committee ultimately decided that the sitting member was duly elected.

DETENTION OF THE OVERLAND MAIL TO INDIA.—On Wednesday morning the subjoined notice was posted in the grand hall of the General Post Office:—"The Overland Mail for India, viâ Marseilles, detained. Letters in time on Tuesday, the 6th proximo."

NEW POST OFFICE CONVENTION BETWEEN ENGLAND AND FRANCE.—On Wednesday the employés in the General Post Office and the foreign offices were making every arrangement for the new Post office convention between England and France, which came into operation next day, by which the British rate on all letters to France and Algeria, or countries through France, is reduced to 5d. on a letter not exceeding half an ounce, and the French rate to 5d. (10 sous) under the weight of a quarter of an ounce. To Spain and Portugal, Sardinia, and the southern states of Italy (when not conveyed by Mediterranean packets, viâ Falmouth), 10d. India, &c., as far as Bombay, 1s. 10d.; and any British colony or foreign country beyond sea (except the Mediterranean), viâ France, 1s. 5d.

IMPORTATION OF RUSSIAN GOLD.—On Saturday morning the St. George Steam Packet Company's steamer Hercules, Captain Mowie, arrived at her moorings off the St. George Steam Packet Wharf, Lower East Smithfield, from Cronstadt and Copenhagen, with a full cargo. Part of the Hercules's cargo consisted of upwards of £100,000 in gold half imperials, the remainder of her cargo being wholly bristles, packed in casks.

ELECTION OF AN ALDERMAN.—On Wednesday forenoon, at eleven o'clock, the freemen inhabitants of the Coleman-street Ward attended a wardmote which was held at the ward-room, No. 116, London-wall, "for the election of a fit and able person to be alderman of the ward, in the room and stead of Sir W. Heygate, Bart., who had surrendered the said office." The Lord Mayor having taken the chair, Mr. Allen (the deputy) proposed Mr. William Hunter. Mr. W. Smee seconded the nomination. The Lord Mayor, having asked whether there was any other person to be proposed, and no answer being returned, put the nomination to the vote, which was declared by his lordship to be unanimous. The Lord Mayor then stated that Mr. William Hunter, upholder, was duly elected alderman of the ward, in the room of Sir William Heygate, baronet.

EAST INDIA MAILS.—POST-OFFICE NOTICE.—On Tuesday morning the following notice was exhibited in the lobby of the General Post office, and at the various branch offices throughout the town:—"On and after the 1st of June next a reduction will take place in the rates of postage on letters passing between the United Kingdom and Greece, Egypt, and Syria, when conveyed by British packets viâ Falmouth. The postage of a letter not exceeding half an ounce in weight will be reduced from the present charge of 2s. 3d. from Falmouth and 2s. 8d. from other parts of the United Kingdom to the uniform rate of 1s. 8d., and so on in proportion, according to the scale of weight in operation for charging inland letters. Letters may be forwarded to Alexandria (but not to Alexandria only), either paid or unpaid, according to the option of the sender. N.B. The next mails to India, viâ Falmouth, will be despatched on the 31st inst. for India and Marseilles, on the 5th June next."

ADDRESS TO LORD MORPETH.—On Tuesday the address of the electors and inhabitants of the West Riding of Yorkshire, agreed to at a public meeting in Wakefield, at which Earl Fitzwilliam presided, was presented by a deputation to Viscount Morpeth. It bore the signatures of 38,674 of the noble viscount's supporters and friends. The deputation assembled at one o'clock, at the house of Mr. Wilde, 130, Piccadilly, from whence they proceeded to Stafford House, the mansion of the Duke of Sutherland, where Lord Morpeth was in waiting. The deputation was ushered into the vestibule, the galleries of which were graced by the presence of her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, the young Ladies Stafford, and other female branches of the noble house of Carlisle. Amongst those entrusted with the presentation of the address were the following:—Earl Fitzwilliam, Sir E. Denisworth, Mr. C. Wood, M.P., Lord Howard, M.P., Hon. R. Vavasour, Hon. E. Petre, Sir G. Strickland, Bart., M.P., Mr. J. Stansfield, M.P., Mr. E. Childers, M.P., Messrs. Tottor, Bunsell, Bethelton, Muncy, Tweed, Clay, Smith, &c., in all about 80 noblemen and gentlemen, representing the different districts of the West Riding.

IRELAND.

The Limerick Chronicle, which often obtains correct military information, contains the following extraordinary paragraph:—"During the repeal excitement in Cork last Sunday, the Protestant soldiers were allowed to attend church, but the Roman Catholics were confined to barracks." The same paper says that Mr. O'Connell received on Thursday, at Brandley's Hotel, Kenilworth, the intelligence of his supersedeas as a magistrate on the next day for Dublin. The number of magistrates already dismissed for taking part in the repeal agitation is said to be thirteen. The following letter has been forwarded to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland by William Smith O'Brien, Esq., M.P. for the county of Limerick:—"London, May 29th, 1843. My lord,—I beg to resign into the hands of your lordship my commission of the peace for the counties of Limerick and Clare. I am not aware that by any law now in force it is forbidden to the people of Ireland to seek the repeal of an act of Parliament, which history tells us was obtained by the basest means and by the foulest corruption: and, though anxious to exhaust every hope of good government through other means before I unite with them in soliciting the repeal of that act, I cannot consent to retain any office which connives and disrobes the advocates of repeal, while it forbids the expression of national indignation, loses no opportunity of exciting well-founded discontent. I am as anxious as your lordship to uphold the dignity of Parliament; but I am alarmed to find that I have an infinitely greater interest than your lordship in maintaining the public peace and the rights of property in Ireland; but so long as my fellow-countrymen abstain from violence they are not by a land act to be prevented to participate in whatever indignities or sufferings may be inflicted upon them by their anti-Irish rulers. Being desirous to perform my duties as a free citizen of a free state, without incurring any retaliation, I may be permitted to ask your lordship, who are the chief interpreter of the laws of Ireland, not more for my own guidance than for that of others, with what number of loyal, peaceful, and well-disposed persons I am liberty to associate myself in an open public meeting, in case I should be driven by continued misgovernment to ask from the British Legislature a repeal of the act of union? Is the legal maximum 100, 1000, 10,000, or 100,000? Does the law as interpreted by your lordship apply equally to England?—I have the honour to be your obedient servant, WILLIAM S. O'BRIEN.—To the Lord Chancellor of Ireland."

REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—MONDAY.—The Corn Exchange was crowded almost to suffocation. The doors had to be closed at one o'clock. Mr. O'Connell arrived from Longford shortly after twelve o'clock. John O'Connell, Esq., M.P., was called to the chair. The following members of Parliament were unanimously admitted Repealers:—Sir Coleman M. O'Loghlen, Bart., Denny Lane, Francis Brady, Jos. M'Nevin, James K. O'Dowd, Michael Feeretty, John Fergus, and Nicholas Ennis, Esqrs. Mr. Walter Lindal, of Gloucester street, solicitor, and Mr. Bernard Murphy, of Galway, solicitor, were also admitted members. Mr. Thomas O'Hagan, barrister, entered the room, and was received with loud cheering. Mr. O'Hea, barrister, was also present. Mr. O'Connell moved the admission of another barrister, Mr. James Meade Loughlin, of Gardiner-street. Mr. Dobeney handed in the subscription of 86 volunteers, 50 Protestants, and 17,214 associates of the South Riding of Tipperary. Mr. O'Hagan was elected a Repealer amidst loud applause. Mr. O'Connell then read the correspondence which had taken place between him and the Lord Chancellor relative to the dismissal from the magistracy. The Repeal rent for the week amounted to the enormous sum of £2,205 16s. 3d.

The greatest activity prevails in various government departments in sending off troops, arms, ammunition, and stores to Ireland, in consequence of the repeal agitation. Twenty-five thousand stand of arms have been despatched from the Tower and Woolwich during the last five days, and barrack stores of every description, ammunition, &c., have been sent away for the same destination.

At the repeal meeting on Thursday Mr. O'Connell gave notice of an address to the people of England on the present posture of the repeal movement.

EPITOME OF NEWS.

Mr. Hume is kept from his parliamentary duties, having been confined to his room since Wednesday week.——Mr. Campbell, of Monsie, has officially intimated that at the close of the present session he intends relinquishing his seat for the county of Argyll.——The Duke of Argyll has given the new Secession or Free Church of Scotland grounds as sites for such new churches as they may build in Campbeltown.——The annual dinner of the militia officers of the United Kingdom was celebrated on Monday at the Freemasons' Tavern.——The conduct of the Brighton Railway directors in raising the amount of the fares has given great dissatisfaction to the inhabitants generally, but especially to the inkeepers, whose interests have been considerably affected by the new arrangements.——Mr. Bird and his sons were finally ejected on Friday week from Brougham Hall. Bird says his next step will be to distrain on Lord Brougham's goods there, and sell them, unless his lordship replevies.——The Hambleton gibbet-post, which has long been obnoxious to the public, was hewn down on the afternoon of Sunday last in a most mysterious manner.——A farmer at Lubersac (Correze), named Mercier, has just died, at the age of 109 years 7 months. He preserved his strength to the last. At 100, having a dispute with the mayor of the village, he knocked him down, and was with difficulty prevented from giving him a severe beating.——Last week the body of a private of the 60th Rifles was found in the Rochdale Canal. The deceased is supposed to have drowned himself because a young girl refused to accompany him with the regiment to Ireland.——We mentioned, some time ago, on the authority of a letter from Copenhagen, that a journalist of that city, charged with libel, had, in virtue of some obsolete law, been thrown into a dungeon, and kept on bread and water. By another letter, of the 17th ult., we learn that he has since been brought to trial and acquitted, and the crown has been condemned to the costs of the suit.——A lady, named Kensett, was poisoned at Hampton-wick on Tuesday last, in consequence of having taken laudanum instead of rhubarb.——A rule for a criminal information was obtained by Mr. Kelly in the Bail Court on Thursday, against the printer and proprietor of the Worcester Chronicle, for a libel on a clergyman named Smith.——The Federal of Geneva states that, in consequence of the heavy rains, the wheat crops in Switzerland have materially suffered.——During the two months since the Thames Tunnel has been opened there have passed through and paid toll 675,640 persons.——Mr. Bright, of the Corn-law League, late candidate for the representation of Durham, was in that city last week for the purpose of arranging measures with his friends on the subject of petition against Lord Dungannen's return.

POSTSCRIPT.

Friday Evening.

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL.

The following, received by extraordinary express, from Paris this morning (Friday), announces the arrival of the Overland Mail. The accounts are from India to the 2nd of May, and from China up to the 12th of March.

INDIA.—The affairs of Scinde were tranquil, though some troubles had taken place at Sirbind, and a serious engagement had been fought at Khyful.

CHINA.—The death of Commissioner Kiepoo was the only news at Canton, but fresh attacks were expected on the factories. On Major Malcolm's arrival Sir H. Pottinger was to go to Canton with the ratification of the treaty.

CHRISTENING OF THE INFANT PRINCESS.

The Infant daughter of her Majesty and Prince Albert was this day (June 2nd) admitted into the pale of the church, in the Chapel Royal at Buckingham Palace. The members of the Royal Family, all of whom came in full state, were escorted by detachments of the Horse Guards.

The usual forms of state having been gone through, her Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, and other royal personages took their seats in the Chapel Royal shortly after 12 o'clock, when the great officers of the household took their places near the Queen and his Royal Highness.

The Lord Chamberlain conducted the infant Princess into the chapel; her Royal Highness was carried by the head nurse, attended by the Dowager Lady Lyttleton.

The sponsors were, Proxy for the King of Hanover; H. R. H. the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, Proxy for H. R. H. the Hereditary Prince of Saxe Cobourg and Gotha. H. R. H. the Duchess of Kent, Proxy for H. S. H. the Princess of Hohenlohe Langenburg; and H. R. H. the Princess Sophia Matilda.

Upon the conclusion of the baptismal service, the infant princess was reconducted from the chapel.

As soon as the ceremony was concluded, her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, the sponsors, and the other royal personages returned to the Queen's apartments in the same order as they entered the chapel.

The royal infant received the names of ALICE MAUD MARY. The ceremony was concluded shortly before two o'clock. The King of Hanover had not arrived at a quarter past two o'clock, consequently his Majesty, who was to have stood sponsor for the royal infant, was represented by proxy, as we have above stated.

Several officers of the household of his Majesty have arrived at St. James's Palace, and the King has been expected every minute during this morning.

THURSDAY.—The Queen and Prince Albert took an airing in an open carriage and four, attended on horseback by the Equerries in Waiting. His Royal Highness Prince Albert left Buckingham Palace soon after eleven o'clock for Counter-hill, near Deptford, to lay the foundation-stone of the Royal Naval School. His Royal Highness and suite returned to the Palace shortly before one o'clock.

To-morrow (Saturday) her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the immediate attendants of the Court leave Buckingham Palace for Claremont for the holidays. It is doubtful whether the Queen and Prince will go to Ascot Races this year or not.

NEW APPOINTMENTS.—This night's Gazette contains a notification that her Majesty has appointed H. R. H. Prince Albert, a Knight Grand Cross of the most Honourable Order of the Bath; and H. R. H. the Duke of Cambridge, Chief Ranger and Keeper of Hyde Park and St. James's Park, in the room of his late R. H. the Duke of Sussex.

THE OPERA.—Donizetti's new opera of "Linda di Chamouni," which was produced on Thursday for the benefit of Madame Persiani, was highly successful, and, taking the performance into account, deserves its success. It may be regarded as one of Donizetti's best operas: and no opera was ever more beautifully sung and acted. The piece, too, is splendidly got up. The house was very full. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, and the Duchess of Kent were present.

JUDGES' CIRCUITS.—The Judges set on Thursday in the Exchequer Chamber, and selected their circuits during the approaching summer assizes. The following is the arrangement:—Norfolk Circuit, Lord Denman and Baron Alderson; Home Circuit, Lord Chief Justice Tindal and Baron Parke; Midland Circuit, Lord Abinger and Justice Patteson; Northern Circuit, Baron Gurney; South Wales, Baron Rolfe; Oxford Circuit, Justice Williams and Justice Maule; Western Circuit, Justice Coleridge and Justice Erskine; Northern Circuit, Justice Wightman and Justice Cresswell. Justice Coltman remains in town

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—On Thursday afternoon an extraordinary general meeting of the members of this society was held in the theatre of the institution. The Duke of Sutherland, K.G., took the chair, when his Royal Highness Prince Albert, who had graciously been pleased to intimate his readiness to become the president of the society, was received by acclamation to fill that office, vacant by the lamented death of the Duke of Sussex, who had officiated as president of the society for twenty-seven years.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHARITY CHILDREN.—On Thursday the anniversary meeting of the patrons of the schools for charity children throughout the metropolis was celebrated at St. Paul's, when a sermon was preached by the Archbishop of Salisbury. There were present the Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by the Duke of Mecklenburg, Lord Ashburton, the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, Sir John Pirie, &c. The children—between 7000 and 8000 in number, the whole dressed in new clothing—were arranged on platforms, extending from the screen below the organ down the nave and round the centre beneath the dome, and had a very imposing effect. At the termination of the day's proceedings a collection was made of near £700.

LAUNCH OF THE INFERNAL.—WOOLWICH, JUNE 1.—This beautiful first-class steam-frigate was launched on Thursday afternoon, in the presence of Sir Francis A. Collier, Knt., C.B. and K.H., Captain Smith, Captain Smith, inventor of the paddle-box boats; Commander Smith, and a great number of naval and military officers; Mr. Lang, master shipwright; Mr. Field, chief engineer, and the heads of the various departments of the Dock-yard. Miss Hornby, daughter of Captain Phipps Hornby, C.B., broke the bottle of wine on her bows, at the same time naming her the Infernal. As soon as the ropes were then driven out, and this elegant steam-frigate glided into the water in beautiful style, amidst the cheers of several thousand spectators, the band of the royal marines playing "God save the Queen."

SAILING.—The Peninsular and Oriental Company sail upon her first trip to the West Indies, and will call at Falmouth for the mails. She takes out thirteen passengers, and 200 bottles of quicksilver. The Great Liverpool sailed this day for Alexandria. The Oriental is expected on or about the 6th inst.; she has on board a large number of passengers, including those from Calcutta by the Hindostan.—The West India packet Thames arrived with her mails and sixteen passengers on Hampton inlet early this evening, at seven. She brings about 400,000 dollars and 137 serons of cochineal. The weather being thick off Falmouth she could not get in.

On Tuesday the same vessel brought to the new Post-office, consisting of the mail-guards, coachmen, deliverers of letters, postboys, &c., received their annual new suit of clothes, and presented a very gay appearance.

DEVON RACES, Friday.—THE OAKS.—The Oaks Stakes of 50 sovs each, h ft, for fillies then three years old, 8st 7lb each. (96 subs.) Mr. Ford's Poison, 1; Mr. Thornhill's Extempore, 2; Mr. Payne's Bessy Bedlam, 3. Poison won cleverly.—22 started.

FOREIGN.

FRANCE.—The Paris papers of Wednesday have come to hand. The Moniteur publishes long dispatches from the Duke d'Aumale, detailing the last successes against Abdel Kader. No fewer than 7000 prisoners have been captured, among whom are the women and children of several of the principal families attached to Abdel Kader. The Paris journals are chiefly occupied with eulogies on the heroes by whom this triumph has been obtained. For the rest, for they contain no news, they are content to reiterate their denunciations against England for the part which they assure their readers she has taken with regard to Spain. Mr. Aston and Espartero are, they say, engaged in a conspiracy against Spanish liberty; and add, among other assertions of equal probability, that the British minister has advanced 1,500,000 francs to the new Cabinet.

SPAIN.—The Madrid journals of the 25th ult. have arrived. Their contents are only important as showing the political excitement that prevails. All was quiet at Madrid and Barcelona on the 20th ult. The movement at Malaga had ended in nothing.

EPSOM RACES.

LEAVING TOWN.

Hurrah for the Downs! hurrah!
Swell nobs, swell mobs, away!
Be your hopes as bright as the morning light
That ushers the Derby Day!
Hurrah for the rush—the throng—
The stream that flows along
Of life and joy, hurrah!
The bounding steed, the knacker old,
The lady fair the gipsy bold—
The jest, the laugh—the shout, the scold—
The rent of rags, the sheen of gold—
Are all on the road! Hurrah!

THE SWELL DRAG.

Whip, whip! on moves a joyous freight
Of youths aristocratic!
In comet-like, bold, dashing course
They come it quite erratic.
Loudly on air as on they fly,
Their shout and laugh, float back—
Again, again, their whips resound.
In haste to see "the crack."
Unlike a searcher for the drowned
Whom waves and wind repel,
Our modern lordlings ply the drags!
However great the swell.

HORSE-VAN.

Though dark and dull this van appears,
It holds within a racer (ray, sir)
Of no slight magnitude, indeed,
Which will be claimed by Day, sir.
Which horse it is of all of those,
Like ladies' hair in papers,
Is known to none, but all agree
Outside are many gapers.
Strange cavalcade! but stranger still
Enough to make one smile,
The man that lingers in the rear
Is van guard all the while!

RINGING TO SADDLE.

Talk of trumpet, of drum, and of clarion, and all
The peals that to battle belligerents call,
A sound more exciting is borne on the air!
'Tis the bell that to saddle bids jockeys prepare.
The whole tribe of Scotts, Days, and Robinsons, springing
From rest or from slumber, respond to its ringing;
While the thousands around, with fresh longings and hopes,
Show their eager impatience, and press to the ropes.

[Drawn by C. Guys and J. Gilbert; and engraved by Orrin Smith and W. J. Linton.]

THE START.—THEY'RE OFF.

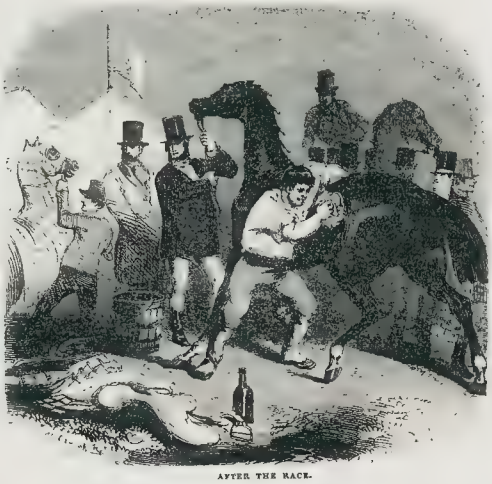
They're off! they're off! the shout, the cry,
Extend along the plain;
And countless hearts are beating high,
And countless eyeballs strain!

Rebounding and resounding hoofs
Are heard afar—now near!
Yes, here they are! the gallant steeds
Swift as the wind appear.

They're passed! they're passed! the race is won
Huzza! the winner's Cotherstone!

JOCKEYS MOUNTED.

"Observed of all observers!" bright array!
In all the hues the rainbow doth display;
Silent and stern, with brow and lip compressed,
As men on whom an empire's fortunes rest;
And who have braced their minds some deed to dare
Which shall to future times their memories bear.
Distinguished is your lot and proud your mien;
In stature small, but heroes of the scene.



AFTER THE RACE.

It is after the race—
What a change on each face!
Some nigh weeping, some laughing, some swearing—
Some down-hearted go home—
To the play-booths some roam,
In the hope their ill luck of repairing;
While some play roulette
And find that they get
Into a worse state than they were in.

RETURNING HOME.

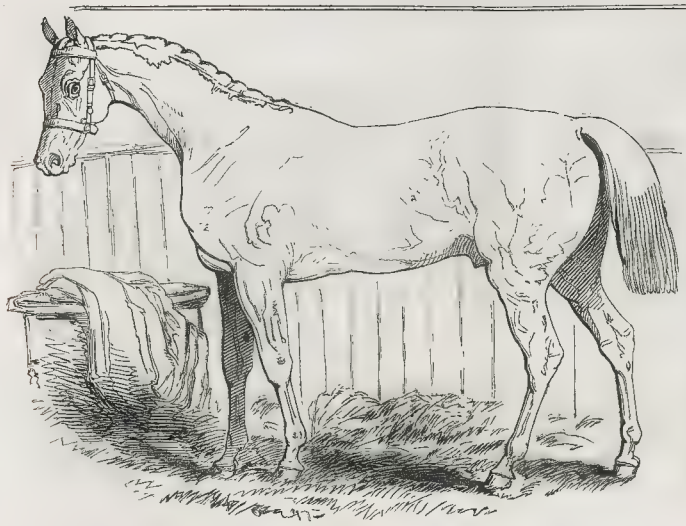
The monster-crowd is homeward bound—
A thousand cries the ear confound;
The noise of whips and wheels resound—
Bustle and clamour reign around,

And friends are lost and friends are found
Amid the dense array.
All haste to town! the flats done brown!

The rich, the poor, the gay,
All are whirled on their way,
But will not soon forget

The bustle and the bet,
The varied accidents they met,
Upon the Derby day!

[Drawn by C. Guys and J. Gilbert; and engraved by Orrin Smith and W. J. Linton.]



THE WINNER OF THE DERBY.

EPSOM RACES.

The Derby day is an illustrated epitome of the history of English sports, manners, and society. It is truly a national scene, and one so peculiarly and so completely national, so identified with the very nature of Englishmen, that it will show more of the national character to a foreigner in a few hours than months of residence and inquiry could furnish even to an industrious and judicious investigator. There is a sort of magic in the words Epsom Races, which arouses the hopes, recollections, anticipations, and sympathies of hundreds of thousands of people of all classes of society throughout the great metropolis of Britain, from one end to the other, and throughout the whole length and breadth of the land. The spirit of horse-racing is peculiar to this country; it is a spirit indigenous with Englishmen, and though it has of late years been extended to the Continent, it is there as yet but a sickly importation, and can only be kept alive by the usual means and appliances for the preservation of exotics and interpolations. Let our readers look at the first of this series of views—"Going to the Races." Here is a perfect representation of what takes place at Grosvenor-place, the great thoroughfare by which the aristocratic visitors to the course make their way to the scene of action. Here may be seen an almost endless succession for several hours of those elegant carriages, the workmanship of the celebrated builders of Long Acre, &c., unequalled, and not to be equalled, in lightness, strength, convenience, and beauty, by the coach-builders of all the rest of the world put together. These carriages are drawn by horses of matchless strength and action—horses that are superior to any others to be met with in France, Italy, Germany, or Spain. Here may be seen, "going along" at twelve miles an hour, nearly five hundred pairs of "posters," the property of a single post-master, driven by "boys" dressed in the neat costume of their "profession," besides several hundred of other "posters" of nearly, if not of quite, equal worth and goodness. Here, too, are to be seen the splendid "turn-outs" of the noblemen and gentlemen who drive their own "teams," the Corinthian "drags" of the "four in hands" of the crack "whips" of the day, all hurrying to Epsom, and freighted with the most fashionable and lovely women in the world, by whose presence the sports are exalted, and the whole business of the day harmonized and humanized into rational and elegant recreation. The train of carriages that passes along this outlet of the western end of the town is of itself a sight well worth the being seen—a sight which, to look at, as the Roman poet says,—

"——— would make old Nestor young," and one which many will long remember with pleasure, and talk of hereafter as one of the best things in memory's waste.

"Olim meminisse juvabit."

We pity those who have never had the opportunity of seeing it, and we hope an opportunity will one time or other be afforded to all our friends.

"THE SWELL DRAG."

The smaller cut, the "Swell Drag," is an admirable illustration of the manners of our noble "sporting gentlemen;" it is, forsooth, a "slap-up" concern. Nobody ever saw the spokes of the wheels of this vehicle when in motion, it is faster than a railroad, and more easy than the car of a balloon; it flies over the surface of the ground with the ease of a billiard ball, and distances all other carriages, of what description soever, both in the elegance of its appearance and the celerity of its transit. Look at the group upon the roof and on the box! The charioteer, a worthy pupil of the school of the celebrated alma mater dragsman, the late Mr. Hobart, M.A., of the University of Oxford, or of the equally celebrated Cambridge professor, Dick Vaughan, whose sobriquet involves the mention of a place "not named to ears polite," and is therefore omitted. His companions all "quadentes equis," all having a taste for the "spirid grantes campi," and all equally skilled with himself in the mysteries of the "Turf and the Road," and anxious to display their knowledge for the gratuitous gratification of all beholders.

"THE RACE-VAN."

This cut represents an improvement of modern times, a van for the conveyance of a race-horse from one part of the kingdom to the other, with security, rapidity, and certainty. By this means a horse can be brought from Yorkshire to perform his engagements at Epsom without being exposed to the dangers of a journey on his feet, without being subjected to the fatigues of travelling several hundred miles, and without being at the mercy of that class of scoundrels who are employed as the agents of scoundrels as infamous as themselves to poison, drug, or lame horses, who it is not convenient to certain persons should be winners. This "van" is an admirable invention, it preserves the horse in an equal temperature, and brings him to his point as fresh as when he left the stables of his trainer or owner.

"RINGING TO SADDLE."

Now is the moment of excitement. We cannot say

"Silence that dreadful bell,
It frights the isle from her propriety," because it is the signal that gives us assurance that all is about to be conducted with propriety. Up to this moment what a scene does the race-course present; what thousands upon thousands of people clustered into groups, and all in anxious expectation. Suddenly the bell is rung, the horses are about to saddle! Now thousands are on the alert; whole troops of horsemen are galloping from the "hill" and the more distant parts of the Downs to the place of saddling, to get a view of the horses about to start, to observe their action and condition, to get what fresh money they can in their "books," and to be present at this critical and exciting point of the sport. Those who unfortunately have no horses are running at the top of their speed to the place where the saddling is appointed, and the whole appears a mass of moving objects rushing from many points to one centre, and taking for their motto, "The devil take the hindmost." The saddling at Epsom, we do not know why or wherefore, and therefore can impugn or blame nobody, is conducted in a different manner than the saddling at other places, and to our notions in a manner not nearly so agreeable. At Ascot Heath, at Goodwood, at Doncaster, and we believe at most other race-courses, the horses, after the course has been cleared, are brought in front of the Grand Stand, and saddled in full view of all the spectators. Thus a good opportunity is afforded to almost every of seeing the horses, and thus everybody is enabled to see the colours of the riders, so that during the race he may be able to see by which horse or mare the running is made; and, if he be so inclined, regulate his betting, even up to almost the very moment of the "coming in." We throw out this hint because, as we understand, the committee of the Grand Stand have, with great liberality, offered to give £30 towards a racing stake, provided the saddling for all the races should, at Epsom, as at other places, take place in front of the Grand Stand. The saddling is a very interesting part of the race. The horses are here seen to great advantage, and a good deal of intelligence is to be picked up, both by the old and young "stagers."

"THE START."

No sight in the whole range of sporting exhibitions can equal in beauty the "start" for the Derby. Here are twenty or thirty horses of the highest blood in the country, all bred with the strictest attention to pedigree, all trained with the most unremitting care and attention, even to the minutest directions of the racing stable, and with every possible adherence to the system of the most approved and experienced trainers and jockeys. These horses, all of matchless (except with other) "bottom, bone, and blood," and worth, in the aggregate, twenty or thirty thousand pounds, upon whose exertions and success perhaps a million of money may be depending, are now fairly brought to the "scratch," and about to prove, before a hundred thousand spectators, which is the best in his generation, and to whom the proud title of the "Winner of the Derby" is to be assigned.

The "start" is no easy matter either. It requires no inconsiderable judgment, no little patience, and no undisciplined experience in him by whom the signal is given to discern that the "start" is all right, that the whole cluster is fairly "off," and that the whole is not a "false start," and consequently no "start" at all. It is on this occasion that the temper of the horses is to be observed, for be it known to our readers that the tempers of race-horses are as variable as the tempers of their owners, that high-bred colts and fillies are as changeable and capricious as the tempers of high-bred young ladies and gentlemen, and that it not unfrequently happens that they display their caprice and ill humour at the very moment when docility and obedience are most in requisition. But be this as it may, the "start" for the "Derby" is a noble sight, and we can safely say the annexed cut is a faithful representation of it. Here are all the horses, hurrying as it were almost into the air, at the signal to "start;" the various riders taking their places according to their respective judgments, and managing their respective horses according to the plan of operations they intend to pursue in the contest. On Wednesday last this was indeed a noble sight. The "start" was as fine a one as we who have seen some scores of "starts" ever remember to have witnessed. Thus was the manner, and then the names of the horses:—

Mr. Bowes's b. c. Cotherstone, by Touchstone (Scott)	1
Colonel Charrtie's b. c. Gorhambury, by Buzzard (Buckle)	2
Sir G. Heathcote's br. c. Sirkol, by Sheet Anchor (G. Edwards).
Lord G. Bentinck's b. c. Gaper, by Bay Middleton (Rogers).
Sir G. Heathcote's ch. c. Khorassan, by Samarcand (Chapple).
Mr. Bateman's br. c. Chotornian, by Camel (Mann).
Mr. Combe's br. c. Fakeaway, by Freney (Bartholomew).
Mr. J. Brown named br. c. A. British Yeoman, by Liverpool (Templeman.)
Mr. T. Taylor's b. c. Gamecock, by Jereed (Nat).
Mr. Griffiths's b. c. Newcourt, by Sir Hercules (Whitehouse).
Mr. Mostyn's ch. c. General Pelisch, by Velocipede (Marlow).
Major Yarburgh's b. c. Dumpling, by Muley Moloch (Holmes).
Lord Chesterfield's b. c. Partisan, by Jereed (F. Butler).
Mr. Bell's ch. c. Wisconsin, by Velocipede (Hesseltine).
Lord Westminster's b. c. by Touchstone, out of Langusih (Darling).
Mr. Theobald's ch. c. Humbug, by Pienipo (Macdonald).
——— br. c. High Admiral, by Rockingham (Day, jun.)
Mr. Baxter's b. c. Magna Charta, by Revolution (W. Boyce).
Colonel Wyndham's br. c. Murton Lordship, by Muley Moloch (Crouch).
Lord Egrinrtoun's b. c. Arnstein, by Bay Middleton (Robinson).
Mr. Gratwicke's ch. c. Hopeful, by Ellis (Bell).
Lord Orford's ch. c. by St. Patrick, out of Mercy (Wakefield).
Mr. Thornhill's ch. c. Elixir, by Emetics (Chifney).

They went off in grand style, and no sooner were they off than the Downs presented a scene of animation that neither words nor illustrations of the pencil can do justice to. The whole of the horsemen, thousands in number, were making for the "Corner"—"Tattenham Corner"—and making across the angle of the plain, to be able to see the race come round that well-known point. The excitement of this scene was unequalled. The chalky plain of Epsom actually rattled like a drum beneath the hundreds of hoofs by which it was beaten to double quick time.

"Quadrupitante putrem sonitu quatit ungula campum."

The plain shook and reverberated the blows it received, and at the moment the horses came round the corner the rush of pedestrians in their wake up the course completed the universal crash, augmented by the voices of exulting thousands. The event is known. The favourite, Cotherstone, was the winner; a noble animal, and one whose name will long live in the annals of horse-racing and the sports of the turf.

JOCKEY MOUNTED.

This cut will give a very correct notion of a very important part of the mystery of racing. It is a moment of great importance; and though it does not cause so much interest as some other parts of the "Derby" process, it is perhaps one in which as much actual business is done as any other of the whole day. It is a critical moment, inasmuch as it is the moment in which the owner of the horse gives his last directions to his jockey; in that moment he "Reads him matter deep and dangerous."

EPSOM RACE-COURSE.

And at this moment it is that, on more occasions than one, the real secret of what is to happen has been imparted to the car of the rider. We have seen—we cannot say we have heard—some curious things at this crisis, on which so much may hinge; and we know more than one instance in which many an owner of a horse has imparted his last precepts to his jockey, and, as it were, taken, for a while, his farewell of the "venture" which he has launched into the "rapids of the race."

The next cut is also one of interest of another character; it represents the

"RUBBING DOWN" OF THE HORSES AFTER THE RACE.

Those who are not acquainted with the very great care necessary to be taken of a race-horse, are surprised to see the anxiety of the grooms and helpers in training-stables in the articles of rubbing down, wrapping in clothes and "making," as it may be termed, the "limbs" of a race-horse. But all these cares are proper and fit, and all this attention is not only necessary, but absolutely indispensable; for, be it known, a race-horse, though one of the strongest animals in existence, is at the same time one of the most delicate animals, and one most susceptible of all others of the effects of heat and cold, change of atmosphere, and the concomitant diseases and inconveniences. The "rubbing down" affords an excellent opportunity for forming a good judgment of the shape and make of a horse: at this moment all his veins and muscles are in full development, from the effect of exercise and excitability, and all his proportions are exposed and legibly demonstrated. He is, during the operation, a fine study for an artist; and to those who want to become learned in "horse-flesh" this is the opportunity for taking a lesson, and making the observations by which their judgment is to be directed.

"GOING HOME"—KENNINGTON-GATE.

We don't know if any of our readers were present on the plains of Waterloo on Sunday evening, the 18th of June, in the year 1815, but if they were not, they will obtain a better idea of the tremendous rush along the various roads leading in the different directions from that remarkable place, when ms Grace the Duke of Wellington called out, "Up, Guards, and at them!" and the Emperor Napoleon gave the word, "Sauve qui peut!" by going to Epsom on the "Derby Day," than by reading all the descriptions that have ever been written of that great event. There is not, very fortunately, anything resembling the cannonading, the fusiades, the pursuit of dragoons, and the other concomitants of "glorious war," by which that day was distinguished, and the sexual omnes of the retreating parties made somewhat more rapid than agreeable, nor is there, perhaps, quite so much noise, as was heard "there and then;" but there is, perhaps, quite as much confusion, quite as much velocity of motion, and quite as much attention paid to the ancient maxim, that the "devil takes the hindmost" on all occasions where it becomes politic to "beat a retreat." The "young home" then may be confined to the retreat from a well-fought field. All are anxious to get into home quarters, and as most of the parties have partaken with tolerable freedom of the "creature comforts" of champagne, claret, sherry, beer, brandy, and other exhilarating fluids during their sojourn on the course, the retreat very frequently exhibits more energy than judgment, and a diversity of opinion not unfrequently arises between the drivers of the different vehicles as to priority of position, right and wrong "mules" of the road, and other similar matters, which does anything rather than facilitate the general "move," and occasionally degenerates into the "carrying out," to use a parliamentary term, of the theories of the disputants, into the most disagreeable practice of abusive language and hard blows. The great channel of retreat from the Downs into the town of Epsom, and the road to London, is down a narrow, steep, and chalky declivity, called a lane, and this lane is so long that it almost belies the old proverb, it is "a long lane that has no turning," for turning it has none, and length it has more than enough of. Here are to be seen swell drags, swell mob, heavy swells, and swells that have been lightened of their money and valuables; go-carts, carts that can scarcely be said to go, vans, caravans, the vesicles of the nomadic tribes, viz., gipsies, Romanees, Caberlonties, long-remembered beggars, black-legs, red-legs, people without legs, viz., terras, from the antique Latin, and asses of all sorts, sizes, colours, and breeds, one-eyed, no eyes, "wind-galls, spavins," the refuse of dog-carts, resuscitated for the "Derby," leaving a "charmed," certainly not a charming, "life," pedlars, struggling, blowing -before to mend, &c., in place, position, or, to use an appropriate Americanism, "a dead fix," with the "turn-outs" of noblemen and gentlemen, all joining and pushing towards home, and using their speed to obtain a good place in the heterogeneous procession. There is another road from the Downs to the London-road, but this is steep, precipitous, ploughed into ruts, and not particularly safe for top-heavy "drags," or top-heavy drivers; however, it has its quota of passengers, and sometimes its quota of accidents; but passing by such trifling drawbacks in the pleasures of the road home, the "lots," to apply a term of the turf, of both roads join issue at the north end of Epsom town, and then those who have not fallen out of their respective conveyances are compelled to fall into the train of carriages, and "en queue" after the French fashion for sometimes three hours miles or more, through Cheam-gate, and so on through Morden-gate to Kennington, at which last place, Kennington turnpike, the strain has chosen its moment and its cause of the very largest and most delightful picture. The crowd at Kennington-gate is a perfect curiosity. Thousands are on the return to town, and thousands who have not been to the races crowd about inside to see the "fun" as it is called, which, as it means, the "mischief" which has taken place or is likely to take place. This "fun," for the most part, consists of broken panels, lame horses, "drags" that can be dragged no further, drunken men and women, a tolerable relaxation both of physical and moral strength, and the exhibition of the excitement of high spirits and good cheer. The sight is amusing, however, and the study of character. The amazing diversity of characters, of costumes, of expressions, of manners, and appearance create, when mingled in one great mass, a scene of overwhelming fun and admiration. There is something to please everybody, there is a good deal to be learnt; and, after all, there is no great impropriety in the conduct of any. The excellent police regulations prevent the presence of any great violence. It is, indeed, surprising there is so little danger to life and limb, when it is considered how many thousands of persons, of all descriptions, are huddled in so small a space, and that some of these people are in a state of the most complete want of manners or mediacy of expression. But the fact is that good humour is the great characteristic of Englishmen, that there is no feeling of any vindictive sort in the hard words passed and repassed, that the national character is one of sterling honesty and manly feeling, and that, however the love of harmless mischief may predominate for the moment, directly a serious evil is likely to arise the energies of this group is forward to prevent it, to restore order, and promote good fellowship.

TUESDAY.—The weather for the fortnight up to Monday had been so unpropitious for out-door amusements as to cause anxious forebodings with regard to Epsom. Even on Monday the rain descended steadily up to midday, and the new moon, upon which so many relied as a forlorn hope, coming wet and gloomily, tended to increase the apprehensions of those interested in the success of the races; at the same time that the course had became so excessively heavy as materially to affect the chances of some of the Derby favourites; the more acceptable, therefore, was the sun that, after a few short hours produced. At one o'clock on Monday the rain ceased, the wind shifted, the glass rose, and every fear was dissipated. Nothing could be more favourable than the weather on Tuesday morning: a warm sun was tempered by a pleasant breeze, the roads were free from dust, and a respectable but not very numerous company enjoyed a good day's sport, with no other interruption to their pleasure than was caused by a smart shower during the running for the Woodcote.

The first event decided was the great trial race of the week, the Craven Stakes of 10 sovs. each, for three yrs olds 6st 8lb, four yrs 8st 10lb, five yrs 8st 4lb, six yrs and aged 8st 10lb. Craven Course. 1 mile.

Lord G. Bentinck's Discord, six yrs (Rogers)		1
Lord Chesterfield's Knight of the Whistle, five yrs (Nat) ..		2
Betting—7 to 2 agst Knight of the Whistle; and 5 to 1 agst Discord. Alice Hawthorn was a bad third, What fourth, and Moscow 5th. The others nowhere.

The Shirley Stakes of 25 sovs each, for three yrs old colts 8st 7lb, and fillies 8st 4lb: one mile; 5 subs.

Lord Stradbroke's Rendos (Nat)	1
Mr. Smith's Spitsire (F. Butler)	2
Lord Exeter's Wee Pet (Dalton)	3

Betting—6 to 2 on Eyebus, who made running all the way, and won cleverly by half a length; Wee Pet a bad third.

The Woodcote Stakes of 15 sovs each, with 30 added, for two yrs old colts 8st 5lb, and fillies 8st 2lb; T. Y. C.: 7 subs.

Lord Albemarle's Desmire by Solero (Whitehouse)	1
Sir J. Boughton's ch f by Voicegenerator out of Countess (Chapple)	2

Betting 3 to 2 agst Lord Exeter's f; 6 to 1 agst Desmire; 8 to 1 agst the Velocipede f. No others mentioned.

The Maiden Plate of £50; three-years-old 6st 10lb, four 8st 7lb, five 8st 12lb, six and aged 9st 1lb; mares and geldings allowed 3lb; winner to be sold for £300. Heats, two miles.

General Sharpe's Lara, 5 yrs (J. Marson)	1	0 1
Mr. Cowley's Adrian, aged (Cadlowy)	0	1 2
Mr. Kimber's Viola, 5 yrs (Evans)	0	3 dr
Mr. Birch's Redcap, 3 yrs (J. Howlett)	0	dr
Mr. Brook's Lina, 5 yrs (M'Dermott)	0	dr
Mr. Theobald's f by Camel, out of Citron, 3 yrs (Kaling)	0	dr
Mr. Bastard's Sir Fretful, 4 yrs (Nat)	0	dr
Mr. Shepherd's c. by Ascot, d by Confederate, 4 yrs ..	dis
Mr. Wernnick's Patchwork, 4 yrs (Macdonnad) ..	dis
Sir G. Heathcote's Aurungzebe, 3 yrs (Bell)	dis

First heat: 3 to 1 each agst Lara and Sir Fretful; and 5 to 1 each agst Donnybrook, Redcap, and Adrian. The race was between Lara and Donnybrook, and was won cleverly by a length. Aurungzebe, Patchwork, and the Ascot colt, bolted early in the race, and were distanced.

Second heat: 5 to 4 agst Lara, and 8 to 1 agst Adrain, who made all the running, and won by two lengths; Lara did not go for the heat.

Third heat: 6 to 4 on Lara, who waited to the last and won by half a length.

Match, 50, 10 ft, 9st each: mile and a half—Mr. Hewitt's Stickler (J. Day, jun.) beat Captain Freestun's Master May. The favourite won easy.

THURSDAY.

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each, h ft, for 3 yrs old and upwards. Mile and a quarter.

Mr. Herbert's Teetotaller, 4 yrs	1
Mr. Jn. Cook's Whim, 3 yrs	2
Duke of Richmond's Fly Whaler	3

The following also ran:—Mr. Skingley's Hawk's-eye, Mr. Skerrett's Lydia, Mr. Brooke's Lina, Mr. Scrit's Lady Snakes, Mr. Collins's Norma, Count Bathyany's Lasso, and Mr. Balchin's Dromedary.

Fifty Sovereigns, for 3 yrs old, &c. Winner to be sold for 300 sovs. Heats, one mile.

Sir G. Heathcote's Hydaspes, 4 yrs	1	1
Captain Daintree's Mingo, 3 yrs	2	2
Mr. Cook's Chumuny, 4 yrs	0	3
Mr. Balchin's Dromedary, 6 yrs	3	4

Three others ran.

Plate of £50, for 3 years old, &c. Winner to be sold for £150. Heats, one mile and a quarter.

Lord Maidstone's Titanis, 3 yrs	2	1	1
Mr. Shelley's Nicka, 3 yrs	1	2	2
Mr. Hornsby's Revoke, aged	0	3	3

Three others ran.

OAKS BETTING.—7 to 2 agst Bessy Bedlam filly, 5 to 1 agst Decisive, 10 to 1 agst Judith Hutter, 10 to 1 agst sister to Jeffy, 12 to 1 agst Laura filly, 13 to 1 agst Maria Day, 15 to 1 agst Elegance filly, 15 to 1 agst Messalina, 16 to 1 agst Fanny Callaghan, and 16 to 1 agst Extempore.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE MAGAZINES.

This month's crop of magazines is an unusually poor one. Several of those which may be called old stagers, and whose face has been familiar to the public for some fifteen or twenty years past, appear to be stricken with the characteristics of old age—dotage, imbecility, and mental paralysis. Their tales are worn threadbare by constant repetition; the staple of their arguments exhausted; their politics may do for those who like politics, but their essays are not easayable by the most determined reader; their humour and fun are below Joe Miller's par; and their general aspect flat, stale, and unprofitable. An infusion of new talent is evidently required in this department of literature, if it is to maintain its accustomed status in the rank of public instructors, and its importance in the catalogue of public amusements. That this consummation, so devoutly to be wished, has great chance of being realized in the late appearance of a new candidate for public favour our readers may perhaps be of opinion in the sequel.

We really know not how to speak of this long list of periodical visitants in such terms as at once to do justice and avoid giving offence. What could be objected to our verdict if we should say that "Blackwood" is almost a blank; that "Fair" is tame, and "Bentley" blockish—that a Hood seems to be thrown over the fun of "The New Monthly," and that the shine of "Fraser" is decidedly dull? Unpleasing truths, and ungrateful to the publishers' ears, yet to be digested as best may be. "Fraser," however, has one article sufficient to redeem the rest, and that is the paper on Walpole and his friends, which will be found a treat to the lovers of historical gossip and anecdote.

"The Dublin University" has a variety of agreeable papers, and announces an approaching accession of force in the persons of Mr. James and Cornet Alfred de Vigny, the author of the delightful novel of "Cinq Mars," which would itself be sufficient to set up some magazines, as magazines go now-a-days. "The Dublin" is always a favourite of ours, from the information it affords us on men and events connected with life in Ireland. There is great store of such matter in the article in the present number headed Ireland "Sixty Years Ago." The following extract gives a good idea of the style of the article, and contains an amusing anecdote of old Sheridan, the father of Richard Brinsley:—

The theatre was the scene of many outrages of the college students. One of these, and the most illegal record, and grievous picture of the then state of society. On the evening of the 19th of January, 1746, a young man of the name of Kenly, a student of the university, entered the pit much intoxicated, and commenced over the backs of the orchestra, got upon the stage, from whence he made his way to the green-room, and insulted some of the females there in the most gross and indecent manner. As the play could not proceed from the confusion, he was taken away, and civilly conducted back to the pit; here he seized a basket of oranges, and amused himself in pelting the performers. Mr. Sheridan was then manager, and he was the particular object of this gross attack. He was enticed to retire with impunity, after interrupting the performance, and disturbing the whole house. Unsatisfied by this attack, he returned a few nights after, with fifty of his associates, and others. They rushed towards the stage, to which they made their way through the orchestra, and across the lights. Here they drew their swords, and then marched into the dressing-rooms, in search of Mr. Sheridan, to accuse him to their resentment. Not finding him, they thrust the points of their weapons through chests and clothes-presses, and every place where a man might be concealed—and this they facetiously called feeling for him. He had fortunately escaped, and the party proceeded in a body to his house in Dorset-street, with the murderous determination of stabbing him, declaring with the conspirators in "Venice Preserved," that each man might kill his share." For several nights they assembled at the theatre, exciting riots, and acting scenes of the same kind, till the patience of the manager and the public was exhausted. He then, with spirit and determination, proceeded legally against them. Such was the ascendancy of rank, and the terror those "bucks" inspired, that the general opinion was, it would be impossible that any jury could find a gentleman guilty of an assault upon a player. A barrister in court had remarked with a sneer, that he had never seen a "gentleman player." "Then, sir," says Sheridan, "I hope you see one now." Kelly was found guilty of a violent assault, sentenced to pay a fine of £500, and, to the surprise and dismay of all his gentlemen associates, sent to Newgate.

Of Power, the celebrated duellist, we are told:—

When travelling in England he had many encounters with persons who were attracted by his temper on a Tuesday evening. On one occasion, a group of gentlemen were sitting in a box at one end of the room, when Power entered at the other. The representative of Irish manners, at this time, on the English stage, was a tissue of ignorance, blunders, and absurdities, and when a real Irishman appeared on the stage he was always supposed to have the characteristics of his class, and so to be a fair butt for ridicule. When Power took his seat in the box, the waiter came to him with a gold watch, with a gentleman's compliments, and a request to know what o'clock it was by it. Power took the watch, and then directed the waiter to let him know the person that sent it; he pointed out one of the group. A sweet rang the bell for his servant, and directed him to bring his pistols and follow him. He put them under his arm, and with the watch in his hand, walked up to the box, and presenting the watch, begged to know to whom it belonged. When no one was willing to own it, he drew his own old silver one from his fob, and presented it to his servant, desiring him to keep it; and putting up the gold one, he gave his name and address, and assured the Cockney he would keep it safe till called for. It never was claimed.

We are tempted to give insertion to the following spirited translation of Frederica Brun's "Hymn on Chamouni at Sunrise," a piece well known from the use which Coleridge has made of it in one of his minor poems:—

CHAMOUNI AT SUNRISE.

FROM THE GERMAN OF FREDERICA BRUN.

From the still shadows of the tannen grove
Trembling I mark thee, as I gaze above,
Eternal mountain, dazzling summit, whence
My vagrely wandering sense
Departs upon its world-o'erpassing flight
Soaring aloft, away, into the infinite.

Who fixed into the earth
The old millennial pillars, fast and deep,
Which, in the lapse of centuries,
Hath borne thee since thy birth?
Who hath uppowered song you azure steep,
Thy bright, bold aspect, glorious to the skies?

Who poured ye out, ye jagged streams that roar
In your descending course, from the abode
Of Winter, all unchangeable and hoar?
Who hath pronounced abroad
The voice of the Omnipotent behest:
Here let these surgy shapes for ever rest!
Who gives its march unto the Morning Star?
Who wreathes the borders of eternal frost
With tenderest blooms? to whom, still near and far

O, Arvirron, while around is tost
Thy wave-like anarchy,—to whom arise
The accents of thy dreadful harmonies?

Jehovah! yes Jehovah sounds aloud,
Where the tall iceberg's massy form is rent,
And where the toppling avalanche is bowed
Sheer o'er the thundering mountain's steep descent.
Jehovah rustles in the light green trees,
And murmurs in the brooks and in the breeze.

There is less of the mere article-spinning of hack contributors in the "Dublin" than in some others, and that is one reason why we like it.

We have not yet said anything of a new magazine which has now reached its second number—we mean "The Illuminated," which is edited by Mr. Jerrold. We take some blame to ourselves for being so tardy, especially as we find our new acquaintance to have many claims on our esteem. If continued with the same spirit with which it has commenced, the new magazine will run some of the old ones hard. Its prose and poetry, tragic and comic, are of great excellence, and have a freshness about them which smacks of worth and novelty. Another merit is, that the bill of fare has great variety, from the circumstance of the contributors being apparently more anxious about the quality than length. The editor's papers are worthy of his reputation; he is well supported in his own vein of composition by Mr. Mark Lemon and Mr. R. B. Peake. "The Sisters of Berne" is one of the many instances in which the verity of the old axiom, that truth is stranger than fiction, has been demonstrated. We had marked many passages in the various articles for extraction, but must content ourselves with quoting a "Song for June:"—

SONG FOR JUNE.

Come, come, the ruddy rose
Is blushing on the tree;
And lily buds unclose
Their bosoms to the bee.
The gleesome world is young
In summer's laughing beam,
And sweet the silver tongue
Of ev'ry running stream.

Ah, come—ere Winter blows
With desolating breath
O'er lily and the rose,
And streams are dumb as death.
Yet then, e'en then, my sweet—
Ah, come,—for still in thee
Do roses, lilies meet,
And life-long melody.

The engravings (in wood) which illustrate the text are executed in a style of such combined delicacy and richness as in themselves to be worth the very moderate price of the magazine. This moderation is a thing to be commended, and shows a judgment and liberality in those who have set the magazine on foot which should be duly appreciated.

COUNTRY NEWS.

KENT.—The High Sheriff of Kent has, in pursuance of requisitions from various parts of the county, called a meeting to be held on Penenden Heath, on June 9, for the purpose of petitioning both Houses of Parliament on the proposed Canada Corn Bill, and on full and effectual protection to agriculture, and every branch of industry.

LIVERPOOL.—ANOTHER LARGE FIRE.—On Saturday evening, between five and six o'clock, another large fire broke out at the Duke's Dock Warehouses, used for the stowage of goods in transit by the trustees of the Duke of Bridgewater's Canal, when three large warehouses, containing cotton to a very considerable amount, were consumed. By great exertion the fire was got under about nine o'clock. In consequence of the fire having broken out under very suspicious circumstances, the magistrates of the borough instituted a lengthened and rigorous investigation into its origin on Monday last, which was held at the magistrates' room at the Sessions-house, was strictly private, and was attended by an unusually large number of the authorities. It commenced at two, and was adjourned at half-past five o'clock, for the purpose of affording time for further testimony to be obtained. We understand that several witnesses were examined, and that their evidence left no doubt upon the minds of the magistrates, that the fire was the work of an incendiary at present unknown.

MANCHESTER.—THE LATE OUTRAGE.—On Thursday week the soldiers appeared on the charge of assaulting the police, and attempting to demolish the station-house, were again taken to the Borough Court, twenty in number, along with ten civilians, three of whom were females, before Dandy Dale, Esq., and a full investigation into the case for the prosecution, which was conducted by Mr. Heron, the town-clerk, occupied the court from half-past twelve in the afternoon until half-past seven o'clock in the evening. It was elicited, in the course of the investigation, that several of the civilians who had been apprehended were severely beaten by the police after they had been taken to the station-house. Much stress was laid upon the evidence given by Mr. Bent, one of the solicitors who appeared for the prisoners, and Mr. Maude, the sitting magistrate, also expressed himself very strongly upon the point. All the prisoners were fully identified except four, and these were discharged. The remainder were remanded. By an order of the Duke of Wellington, a strict inquiry commenced at Manchester on Monday into the origin of the affray between the soldiers and police. Lord Charles Wellesley, the colonel of the regiment (15th Foot), has gone down for the express purpose of being present. Major-general Warre presided, and the Mayor of Manchester, the late mayor (W. Neild, Esq.), and the town-clerk, attended, but the reporters were excluded. The investigation was not expected to terminate for several days, and it is expected that ground will be laid for at least one court-martial.

SCOTLAND.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.—MONDAY.—The Assembly met at eleven o'clock. Dr. Cook intimated that the bill of which Lord Aberdeen had given notice was not in reference to the quoad sacra ministers, as stated in some of the newspapers, but related to the settlement and admission of ministers. There was not, however, the slightest departure on the part of Government from their intentions regarding these ministers. It was, however, thought proper that the two subjects should not be mixed up together, but taken up in separate bills. The Assembly (at five o'clock) adjourned till seven o'clock in the evening, when, after hearing one or two cases by counsel, of no general interest, the Moderator, in an eloquent address, dissolved the Assembly till May 1844.

THE CONVOCATION ASSEMBLY.—MONDAY.—At this meeting the adherents of several additional clergymen was given in, and a great deal of miscellaneous business was transacted, but none of it was of a nature to interest the English reader.

POLICE.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—On Monday Major Wnattington, who appeared on the ponce-sheet under the name of Mr. Simpson, was charged with an assault on one of the check-takers at the pit of the Opera-house.—The complainant stated the defendant presented himself at the pit entrance, on Saturday night, with a ticket which he had purchased in the neighbourhood. As the defendant was in surtout, cheeked trousers and waistcoat, he was refused admission, and made acquainted with the reason. The defendant insisted on being admitted, alleging that he had been passed without demur a few evenings ago in precisely the same dress as that which he wore. Complainant told him the regulation respecting dress, and recommended the defendant either to alter his costume or get his money back. The defendant went away, but returned in a few minutes, and said he could not obtain his money again, and he wished to know whether he was to be still refused admittance? Complainant said he could not pass him against the regulations; upon which the defendant struck him a blow on the face, and another blow on the head. The defendant was immediately taken into custody. He should not have pressed the charge had the defendant chosen to apologise at the time for the unprovoked assault. Had the gentleman purchased his ticket at the house the money would have been immediately returned.—The defendant, in explanation of his violence, remarked that he presumed the blow had been more severe than he intended, in consequence of some rings he wore.—Mr. Hardy said it was a pity that the regulations established as a condition of admittance to a place of public entertainment, it was proper for those regulations to be attended to. The defendant had acted wrong in attempting to break those regulations; and for the assault he had been committed he should inflict the fine of £5. The money was paid.—If the gallant major was refused admission on account of his trousers and waistcoat, we think the opera official should change the title of his calling, for he is evidently anything but a check-taker, and deserves to be ex-chequered!

QUEEN-SQUARE.—A lengthened investigation took place on Monday at this court, on the subject of the mysterious and daring robbery committed at the late Lord Fitzgerald's, and which has created considerable sensation from the fact of its having occurred only two days after his lordship's death. On the prisoners, William Cornelius Fuller and George Howes, his lordship's steward, being placed in the dock, several witnesses were examined in addition to those whose evidence we have already given; but the case being still incomplete, the prisoners were further remanded.

ANNIVERSARIES.

THE RESTORATION OF KING CHARLES II.

This important event in our national history has been so minutely described by the diarists of the time, and their accounts have been so often quoted, that we shall content ourselves with chronicling a few of the leading details.

Pepys, the quaint and garrulous secretary of the Admiralty, has left us the liveliest record of the incidents immediately preceding the Restoration. On this occasion he appears to have accompanied Sir Edward Montagu, afterwards Earl of Sandwich, as secretary, in the fleet which brought home the King. When the House of Commons voted his Restoration, they also voted that £50,000, "to be borrowed of the City," should be given to the Sovereign for the supply of his immediate necessities; and how greatly he stood in need of this supply may be gathered from the following entry of Pepys, under May 17, 1660:—"This afternoon Mr. Edward Pickering told me in what a sad poor condition for clothes and money the King was, and all his attendants, when he came to him first from my lord, their clothes not being worth forty shillings, the best of them; and how overjoyed the King was when Sir J. Grenville brought him some money—so joyful that he called the Princess Royal (Mary, eldest daughter of Charles I.) and the Duke of York to look upon it, as it lay in the portmanteaus before it was taken out."

Admiral Sir Edward Montagu had received orders from the Council of Parliament to bring over the King, and accordingly he sailed for the Hague, where, on the 21st of May, Charles and his suite were received on board Montagu's ship (the name of which, on the same day, he altered to the Charles), amidst "infinite shooting of guns;" and after dinner the fleet weighed anchor, and set sail for England. It is interesting to read how Pepys had previously been through the fleet to proclaim the King, and of the joyous reception he had met with from every ship; how the heart of the staunch Royalist must have then leaped with joy. Then, with what minuteness he relates the conduct of the King on the passage; how restlessly he walked up and down, "very active and stirring;" how, upon the quarter-deck, he fell into discourse of his escape from Worcester, where it made poor Pepys "ready to weep to hear the stories that he told of his difficulties that he had passed through; of his travelling four days and three nights on foot, every step up to his knees in dirt, with nothing but a green coat and a pair of country breeches on, and a pair of country shoes that made him so sore all over his feet that he could scarce stir; yet he was forced to run away from a miller and other company that took them for rogues." On the same evening Pepys heard some of the suite "talking of more of the King's difficulties, as how he was fain to eat a piece of bread and cheese out of a poor body's pocket," &c.

On the 25th Charles landed at Dover; "the King and the two dukes (of York and Gloucester) did eat their breakfast before they went, and there being nothing but ship's diet they eat of nothing else but peas and pork, and boiled beef." Pepys continues, "Dr. Clerke, who eat with me, told me how the king had given £50 to Mr. Shepley for my lord's servants, and £500 among the officers and common men of the ship. Great expectation of the king making some knights, but there was none. About noon (though the brigantine that Beale made was then ready to carry him), yet he, the king, would go in my lord's barge with the two dukes. Our captain steered, and my lord went along bare with him. I went, and Mr. Maunsell, and one of the king's footmen, and a dog that the king loved, in a boat by ourselves, and so got on shore when the king did, who was received by General Monk with all imaginable love and respect at his entrance upon the land at Dover," where he did not stay, but got into "a stately coach there set for him, and so away through the town towards Canterbury."

Two days afterwards Admiral Montagu was invested with the George and Garter on board his own ship, as General Monk had also been at Canterbury on the preceding day. The king entered London on his birthday, May the 29th, and "with him," says Evelyn, in his "Diary," under that date, "a triumph of about 20,000 horse and foote, brandishing their swords and shouting with inexpressible joy; the ways strewed with flowers, the bells ringing, the streetes hung with tapistry, fountaines running with wine; the maior, aldermen, and all the companies in their liveries, chaines of gold, and banners; lords and nobles clad in cloth of silver, gold and velvet; the windows and balconies all set with ladies; trumpets, musick, and myriads of people flocking even so far as from Rochester, so as they were seven hours in passing the city, even from two in the afternoon till nine at night." "I stood in the Strand and beheld it," continues Evelyn, "and blessed God." Such a scene of impressive pageantry our artist has attempted to represent in the above picturesque engraving.

Popular observances, commemorative of Restoration-day, are now comparatively "few and far between." Formerly, the statue of Charles in the Royal Exchange was decorated on this day with oak branches. The equestrian statue at Charing-cross was, however, thus decorated on Monday last; when, also, in conformity with the old usage, the chaplain of the House of Commons preached before "the house" at St. Margaret's Church, Westminster. The attendance of members was very limited, and "the house" consisted of the Speaker, the Sergeant-at-Arms, the clerks and other officers, and about eight members; amongst whom were Sir Robert Inglis, Mr. Brotherton, and Mr. John Round. The tomb of Pendrell, "the preserver of Charles II.," in the churchyard of St. Giles'-in-the-Fields, was restored about eight years since, when also the custom of decorating the tomb with oak branches was revived. The wearing of oak-apples on this day was, in the metropolis, on Monday last, restricted to the heads of a few horses.

Among the chief city companies the day is celebrated with what is termed the "Restoration Dinner. That at Grocers' Hall is, we believe, the most sumptuous banquet of the whole year; turtle and venison are provided in profusion, and the whole is a grand display of civic luxury. Grocers' Hall, in Grocers'-hall-court, Poultry, is, by the way, one of the noblest establishments of its class. The dining-hall is very spacious, and hung with portraits of Sir John Cutler, Lord Chatham, Mr. Pitt, and other eminent personages. At one end of the apartment is a music gallery, and not the least agreeable feature of the entertainments given here is the accompaniment of excellent music. The drawing-rooms, too, are very elegantly fitted up; and the company, in its general appointments, is not eclipsed in the city. It is very rich, has very large estates derived from different benefactors, and charged with very charitable uses. Deputations of the company visit its Irish and other estates, the several schools, and other charities, which produce the most beneficial effect upon their due administration. It is, indeed, a gratifying reflection, that the virtues of charity and hospitality are thus finely blended in the administration of the affairs of this opulent company, of whose benevolence their "loving cup" is but a truthful type.

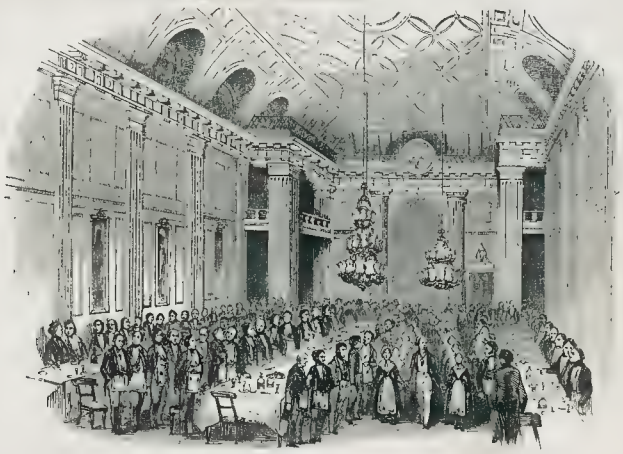
RESTORATION DINNER AT GROCERS' HALL.

THE FASHIONS.

Paris, Rue Chaussée d'Antin, May 29th, 1843.

Mon cher Monsieur,—In my last letter I gave you a description of one or two dresses for country wear, and which appeared to me to deserve notice; allow me now to call your attention to some town toilettes, which, I trust, you will think equally worthy of remark. Amongst the other fancies of our fair belles, I have remarked a robe in gitana plaid, with two deep frills, surmounted by others of similar material at the bottom of the skirt. The corsage is high, plain, and brought down to a point, with plain sleeves with gathers, forming jockeys. With this is worn a mantelet of black lace, very long and rounded behind, and trimmed completely round by a double lace flounce, gathered like a veil. Another dress which pleased me much was a robe of Colibri Pekin, trimmed with a flounce about one third of its depth, scalloped and slightly frilled. The corsage, which is plain, is very long in the waist, rounded at the point, and open in front; the sleeves are plain, and the mantelet worn with it was of lilac Italian taffety, trimmed with a plaiting of similar stuff, but infinitely the most elegant dress, according to my taste, was a barège robe, shot rose-coloured and white, with the facings lined with rose taffety. The corsage high, loosely gathered; the sleeves moderately wide, gathered at the top and at the wrists, and a scarf in white barège, with large satin stripes. To this last dress I must add one more, which was a delicious peignoir in muslin, trimmed en tablier with three puffings, lined with straw-coloured taffety; the under petticoat was in batiste, embroidered throughout the whole length of the seam in front, and trimmed behind with three little falls of lace, somewhat slightly gathered. The corsage half high over the shoulders, and open in front, trimmed with puffings arranged fan shape, and meeting those on the robe; the sleeves are loose the whole of their length. In describing dresses let me not forget to mention a new accessory to the toilette, which has met with general adoption here amongst those whose approbation at once fixes the seal of distinction on everything they patronise. It is a sort of under corsage, which is meant to be interposed between the corsage of the robe and the corsage itself in such manner as to protect the latter from being stained by means of the perspiration acting upon the colours of the dresses worn, and which, by rendering frequent cleaning absolutely necessary, very soon works a complete change in the original form of the corset. Amongst other advantages which it is alleged this under corsage possesses, is that of completely hiding the thickness of the seams and gathers, so that trimmings of any sort to which ladies are frequently obliged to have recourse will replace with infinite advantage under petticoats, and thus procure at the same time a great economy both in corsets and robes, and a considerable lightness in the articles worn, a consideration which, in the dog days, is one that should not be overlooked. This under corsage, which is made in Gros de Naples, reproduces the form of the corset, upon which, in point of fact, it is moulded, and it is closed in front by means of little buttons so small as to be almost imperceptible. There can be no doubt that this under corsage is a very valuable improvement; and the proof that our Parisian dames think so is to be found in the fact of its general adoption, although it has been publicly known but a very short time. I trust in my next I shall be able to give you some hints upon the head-dresses most usually worn. Want of space, however, hints to me that I must now defer my description of these until my next letter, until which time I must say adieu.

HENRIETTE DE B.



ANNIVERSARY DINNER OF THE ROYAL FREEMASONS' SCHOOL FOR FEMALE CHILDREN, FREEMASON'S HALL.

The anniversary festival of this excellent charity was celebrated in Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday, the 24th ult., the Right Hon. Lord Viscount Ingestre, P.S.G.W., in the chair. After the customary loyal toasts had been drunk, the noble chairman introduced in terms of touching eulogy, the memory of H. R. H. the Duke of Sussex, late M.W.G.M.; his lordship reminding the company that his royal highness had been upwards of thirty years at the head of the craft, and had warmly supported the charity. In proposing the toast of "Success to the Royal Freemasons' School for Female Children," the noble lord emphatically stated that the education afforded by this institution was grounded upon the principles of religion, morality, and industry; and that whilst upwards of 550 children had, by their character in after life, added a lustre to freemasonry, there had been but one blot on the bright escutcheon, and in that case there was much more to pity than blame. His lordship alluded also to the circumstance that in the school of 65 children there is but one servant, and that the appearance of the objects of the society's bounty was a fair prototype of that which he found at home. His lordship then highly commended the matron and her two assistants, and requested the ladies present to visit the school establishment, and to trust no men, not even masons, when the welfare of so many children depended upon the instruction they might receive.

Sixty-four of the children were then introduced, wearing their usual dress, a black ribbon round their necks, the masonic arms on their sleeves, bound with black, and a black ribbon on their bonnets. Their appearance excited deep interest in the company, and many a bright eye was suffused with tears of affection and pity. The children sang an appropriate hymn composed by Sir George Smart, grand organist, who kindly gave his services of directing the youthful choir. The gallery was occupied by nearly a hundred elegantly-dressed ladies, to whom the children were introduced after leaving the hall, and it was truly gratifying to witness the many endearing marks of affection shown towards the younglings.

The noble Chairman next proposed "The Boys' School, and the President and Board of Stewards;" in returning thanks for which the President reminded the meeting that a granddaughter of the founder of the institution had just passed before them as one of the recipients of their bounty. He added that a child had been recently admitted whose father very lately had sat at that table, and who had been a life governor, steward, and annual contributor to the charity during his lifetime.

The company numbered 170, and the sum of £560 was subscribed.

The annexed engraving shows the neat façade of the school-house, erected by the governors in 1793, near the Obelisk, in St. George's, Southwark, at the expense of more than £3000, it being calculated to accommodate nearly one hundred children. The charity was founded in 1788, for maintaining, clothing, and educating an unlimited number of female orphans and children of reduced Freemasons. The establishment has been munificently supported, so as to have enabled the governors to augment the number of children received into the institution from 15 to 65: they are received into the school between the ages of eight and eleven, and are educated, clothed, and wholly supported till they attain the age of fifteen years.

ROYAL FREEMASONS' SCHOOL FOR FEMALE CHILDREN.

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.

We here present our readers with an engraving of the building about to be erected for the use of this institution at New-cross. The site is on an eminence overlooking the public road to the right, at no great distance from the railway station. It will be 170 feet long and 280 feet deep when completed. A contract has been entered into for the erection of half the edifice, at an expense of £13,635; and the other will doubtless follow in due time, as soon as the funds of the establishment will bear the expense. That no long time may elapse before this may be the case we fervently trust, for there are few institutions whose sphere of action is more important, and whose objects are of greater public utility, than the Royal Naval School. It was established to provide a thoroughly good education for the children of naval officers, most of them destined to follow the profession of their fathers. If there are any of our youth who have a peculiar right to be entitled "the children of the state," it is the offspring of naval and military men who have grown grey in the service of their country, and many of them laid down their lives for its honour and interests. The style of the edifice which has called forth these few remarks is plain and unpretending, its prevailing character being that of elegant simplicity. The proportions, we understand, are modelled on a design of the great Sir Christopher Wren. The architect is Mr. Shaw. The foundation-stone of this building was laid on Thursday last, in a temporary pavilion erected for the purpose, and gaily decorated with flowers and flags, by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, in presence of a distinguished company, which included several officers of the highest rank in the service. A great proportion of the company being ladies, the parterre of beauty displayed was such as we have never seen surpassed. The boys of the school, in blue jackets and caps and white trowsers, formed a prominent and interesting feature of the scene.

PERTH.—THE MILITARY AND INHABITANTS.—The following is an extract of a letter from Perth, dated on Friday. We should hope the statements which it contains are exaggerated:—"Last night, a dreadful riot took place in this town, in consequence of a quarrel between some of the trades-lads and the soldiers. A party of the military sallied out of the barracks, and in revenge attacked the people with sticks, when a fearful commotion ensued. The constables were called out, and the Provost had the Riot Act read. The riot, however, was not quelled before the soldiers and a number of constables were severely beaten."

CAMILLO SIVORI.—AFTER DANTAN.

The appearance of M. Sivori, the pupil of the great Paganini, at her Majesty's Theatre, having excited intense interest in musical circles throughout the kingdom, we have been at some pains to present to our readers the annexed accurate portrait of this sole inheritor of Paganini's genius. His career over the Continent has been one of triumph, and he has already gathered fresh laurels in this country.

It was almost from his infancy that Sivori was a pupil of Paganini, since he commenced studying under him at his native city, Genoa, in 1823, when he was but six years of age. So rapid was his progress, that Paganini made him play in public after a study of two months, the compositions he executed being those of his great master. On Paganini quitting Genoa Sivori continued his studies under other masters, and travelled through France and England at the age of ten. On his return to his native country, the study of composition chiefly occupied his attention. In 1838 he again travelled, visiting different parts of Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Poland, and Russia, and playing at the courts both of Vienna and St. Petersburgh. He is a member of several academies; the Conservatoire at Paris awarded him a medal; and at Brussels he was publicly crowned. The possession of one of Paganini's violins has almost as much contributed to render him an object of interest as the fact of his being his pupil. It was a gift to him from Paganini shortly before his death, and is the violin on which he plays in public. The subjoined portrait represents the young artist, sketched in a caricature style, which originated, we believe, with the Parisians, and has become very popular in this country as well as in France. The first thing that strikes the eye is, that the young débutant is the complete reproduction of Paganini himself; the face is different, but otherwise it is the great artist resuscitated. There is the same peculiar manner of holding the violin, with the elbow completely turned in, the same position of the legs, the same swing of the whole body from the hips, and the same commanding jerk with the bow. Since the time of Paganini many performers have imitated his mechanism with more or less success, with more or less refinement, but none of them have caught up his spirit, and one by one they have dropped into oblivion. With Sivori it is otherwise: he has not only inherited the arm and fingers of his preceptor, but he has caught his spirit also.

Of the style of Sivori as a violinist, and of his pretensions to be considered the first of his day, we must say as to the former, that it is unquestionably modelled upon that of his inspired master, but without any servile imitation; and, with respect to his claims to be now looked upon as the greatest, the only worthy representative of that gifted genius, we believe that even the most emulous rivalry has admitted them. In fact, he is Paganini idem et alter. But let us first consider in what points of superlative excellence he has identified himself with his magician tutor; and next regard him per se, and inquire if he have any genius beyond that of the mocking-bird; and again, if so, how does that genius develope itself. In the first place, his TONE (we do not mean that of his fiddle, which happens to have been his master's favourite instrument)—his power over the modulation of sound, is, in every respect, equal to Paganini's, from the rich swells of organic fulness, to

> Such as the melting soul may pierce
> In notes with many a winding bout
> Of linked sweetness, long drawn out
> With wanton heed and giddy cunning!

PORTRAIT OF CAMILLO SIVORI.

The words we have italicized show how prophetic Milton was of the advent of such performers—no pictures could more faithfully depict the manners of Paganini and his familiar! In the next place, Sivori's wand-like influence with his bow—at one time non-visibly vibrating a thousand delicate tremblings upon the ear; at another, "tearing out of the sanguine strings" superhuman sounds, with all the frenzied gesticulation of "one possessed!" again mocking difficulty (we had almost said impossibility) with a host of graceful and, to him, facile realities; in a word,

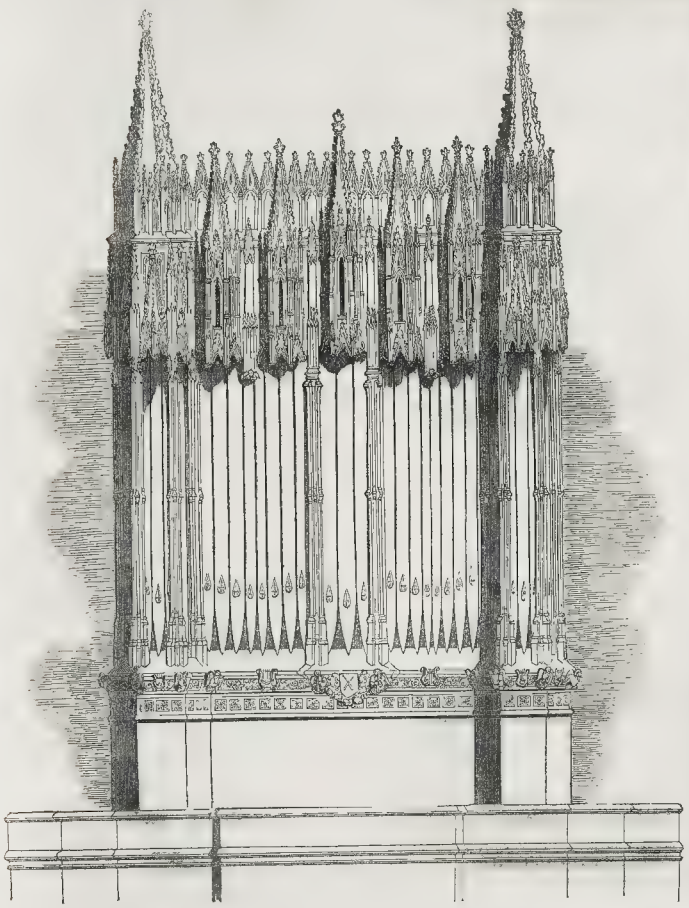
Unwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony!

In each and all of these Sivori is quite equal to Paganini! But yet some will say, "With all this, although he is decidedly the first now, he is not Paganini yet!" No—perhaps not. But why is this conclusion arrived at? Simply because a great wonder, in any view of creation, must be succeeded by a far greater one before we can allow it to be even on equality with its predecessor! We heard Paganini in the height of his glory, we hear Sivori in the very outset of his fame, and yet we have difficulty to decide which, "at times ripe for competition," shall be estimated as the greater genius. Had there been no Tintoretto perhaps there would have been no Titian; and, so far, we admit the obligations the present youth is under to the seer his master. But if he were not possessed of a master mind of his own he could not have distinguished himself in that walk which belongs not to the servile pecus, namely, original composition. His concerto is a most pure and classical production, and does great honour to his head, if his digitals were no more than those of ordinary first-rate violinists. This, by far the most classical part of his performance, was received with comparative indifference by those who were anxiously waiting for the bizzarreries promised subsequently. A word or two here on that wonder-exciting announcement "on one string." There is really nothing in it, many passages for the violin could not otherwise be played so effectively; and as to its novelty, only turn back to the solos of Scaramelli, upwards of a century ago, not to say anything of the concertos and airs of Rode, Rosquellas, &c., in more modern times, but anterior to Paganini, and it will be found that occasional use of the "one string" was much in vogue, although perhaps it was never carried to such perfection as by Paganini and his pupil. One word at parting for the present with Sivori: let anybody else attempt to play Paganini's music and they become contemptible; on the other hand, let him perform it, and it is worthy of the maestro himself, involving us in "A pleasant dream of past, mixt up with present joy."

CONSECRATION OF ST. PAUL'S, KNIGHTSBRIDGE.

On Tuesday morning this beautiful structure was consecrated by the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of London, in the presence of a large number of the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood; amongst whom were the Duke of Beaufort, the Marquis of Westminster, the Earl of Burlington, and Earl Brownlow. His lordship, with his chaplain, the Rev. C. B. Dalton, M.A., arrived shortly before eleven o'clock, and was received by the chancellor, registrar, minister, churchwardens, and trustees, and by them conducted to the vestry-room. Having proceeded in his robes to the front of the communion-table (upon which the vessels for the holy communion were placed), the minister presented to him the petition, praying him to consecrate the above sacred edifice. His lordship, accompanied by the Venerable Archdeacon Lonsdale, the Rev. Dr. Cuthbert, the Rev. A. M. Campbell, and other clergymen, then walked from the east side to the west end of the church and back again, repeating alternately the 24th Psalm, the bishop beginning "The earth is the Lord's," &c. The usual prayer of the church and those specially appointed for the occasion having been read, the right rev. prelate ascended the pulpit, and selected for his text the 4th chapter of St. John's Gospel, verse 14, "God is a spirit, and they that worship must worship him in spirit and in truth."

The case of the instrument, which is designed by Mr. Cundy,



ORGAN, ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, KNIGHTSBRIDGE.

the architect of the church, is exceedingly rich and in the style of the architecture of the church: it is composed from the best existing models of canopy-work of that date. Its outline is a square, with large octagonal turrets at each angle, and delicate buttresses and angle canopies surmounted by lofty and richly crochetted pinnacles. The space between the turrets is filled by a series of five beautiful canopies. The lower part is a solid box, from which the buttresses and gilded pipes rise. On the impost is a series of angels bearing lutes, harps, &c., the various symbols of music. The whole organ covers an area of 14 ft. square by 30 ft. in height. It is a noble instrument, and merits illustration, as well for its interior construction as for the novel design of its case, which is in correct taste.

The church contains 1000 paid and 600 free seats. The cost of the building has been £11,000, exclusive of fittings. Towards the organ, the Marquis of Westminster has munificently subscribed £500. Service is to be performed in this church three times on Sundays, and twice on Wednesdays and Fridays. There will also be a litany service at 11 o'clock, and full service on all holydays. It has been determined that the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper shall be administered on every Sunday and on every festival of the church throughout the year. The Rev. W. Bennett, M.A., of Christ Church, Oxford, has been appointed to the incumbency.

DEATH OF THE DOWAGER LADY PETRE.—We have to announce the death of the Dowager Lady Petre, who expired on Tuesday last at her residence in Harley-street. The deceased lady was eldest daughter of Mr. Henry Howard, and sister of the late and aunt of the present Duke of Norfolk. Her ladyship was born 29th September, 1767, and married, 14th February, 1786, the late Lord Petre, by whom her ladyship had a family of thirteen children, eight of whom are living.

A public dinner was given on Sunday at the British-hotel, Cockspur-street, to the Hon. Thomas Norton, one of her Majesty's justices of British Guiana, previous to his departure for that colony to resume his judicial functions. Morgan John O'Connell, Esq., M.P., presided, and was supported by upwards of fifty gentlemen, chiefly professional friends of the guest.

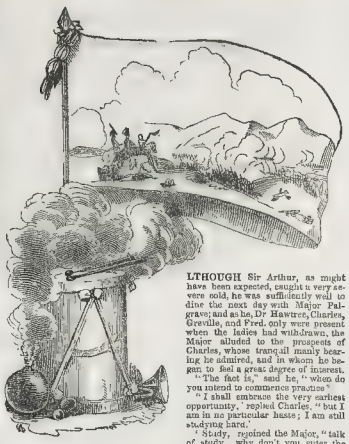
PROBATE DUTY UPON WILLS.—The duties paid upon the personal properties of the late Sir R. Peel, Mr. Coutts, and Mr. Rundell were deemed extraordinary enough, each of them being upwards of one million sterling. The probate on Mr. Arkwright's property surpasses them all. The personal property is sworn to be under £6,000,000! Besides this he is said to have left real property to the amount of £40,000 a year.

ENGLAND AND FRANCE;
OR
THE SISTERS.
A ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.

By HENRY COCKTON,

AUTHOR OF "VALENTINE VOX," "STANLEY THORN," ETC.

CHAPTER XII.
THE DEPARTURE.



ALTHOUGH Sir Arthur, as might have been expected, caught a very severe cold, he was sufficiently well to dine the next day with Major Palgrave; and as he, Dr. Hawtree, Charles, Greville, and Fred. only were present when the ladies had withdrawn, the Major alluded to the prospects of Charles, whose tranquil manly bearing he admired, and in whom he began to feel a great degree of interest.

"The fact is," said he, "when do you intend to commence practice?"

"I shall embrace the very earliest opportunity," replied Charles, "but I am in no particular hasse; I am still studying hard."

"Study, rejoined the Major, "talk of study, why don't you enter the service! The glorious field of battle's the place for study! You'd have more limbs to amputate there in one day than you'd have the chance of lopping off at home in twenty years!"

"Do you not forget that I am married?" suggested Charles.

"Certainly not; but the fact is what has that to do with it? Take your wife with you. It'll be a change for her, and a glorious change, too. Take her with you!—the fact of your being married, amounts to nothing at all! What say you, Doctor, eh? Would you ever have been the man you are, if you had never seen a glorious field of battle?"

"Why, I don't suppose that I ever should have been in my present position."

"Certainly not! Isn't it better than all the hospitals in the universe? What does a man who has been at home all his life know about gun-shot wounds, for example? Would I go to such a man to have a ball extracted? And when was there ever a finer chance for a young man of talent than now? The fact is, now is the very time! If I were you, I'd be off at once. There's no necessity for spending a whole life abroad! a few years will do it; we shall soon settle this war!—we shall soon have Bonaparte fast!—and when we have him secure, mark my words, you'll never have another chance; for the fact is neither you nor I, nor any one here, will ever live to see another great war in Europe. I therefore say, go by all means! You would come back with practical experience sufficient to carry all before you."

"Well," returned Charles, "I feel obliged by the suggestion: I'll think of it. But how am I to get an appointment?"

"Oh, I can manage that," said Dr. Hawtree, "without the slightest trouble. You have out to make up your mind and the thing is done."

"Well, if you go," said Fred., addressing Charles, "I should like to go with you."

"Nonsense!" cried Greville, "how are you to get a commision? There are hundreds on the List at the present time."

"And there always will be hundreds on the List," said the Major, "but the fact is, the List has nothing at all to do with it. It's all very well to have a List, but what is it?—Why the means whereby those who are in a position to be importuned may make importunity dumb. They oblige their friends by getting youths placed upon the List; and a pretty obligation it is; they may be upon the List till they are bald. The fact is, I could get your son a commission to-morrow."

"You could?"

"Of course—but not by placing him on the List. If he is anxious to enter the service he shall not wait long for a commission. And he can't do better. What can be more honourable, more exciting, or more glorious than the life of a soldier? If I had fifty sons I'd make soldiers of them all. A fellow of spirit is sure to rise now."

"Or fall," suggested Greville.

"Or fall, as you observe," added the Major, "but a soldier is never apprehensive of falling."

"And he is wise," rejoined Greville, "for as things must take their course, apprehension is folly."

The Major blew out his cheeks, and not wishing for that point to be dwelt upon, waived it by commencing a most spirited description of the last battle in which he had been engaged. To this description all attentively listened, and so deep an impression did it make upon Charles and Fred., that they felt an irresistible desire to adopt the Major's suggestion that they also might witness those glorious scenes which had been with so much animation described.

There were, however, two other persons to be consulted before any step could be taken, for while Fred. could not think of moving without the sanction of Alice, Charles had to obtain the consent of Laurece.

"I wish," said Fred. on the following morning, "I wish you would mention this matter to Alice."

"Modesty," replied Charles smiling, "is at all times an admirable quality, but in you it inspires special admiration."

"Nay, it isn't modesty—but I wish you'd just name it!"

"Well! I will if you particularly wish me to do so, but it would have more effect if you were to name it yourself. There's no difficulty now. The Doctor's prohibition has been removed."

"I don't know how it is, Charles; I used to be able to speak to any woman, and upon any subject with which I happened to be conversant, without the slightest hesitation; but now, upon my honour, in the society of women I can scarcely speak at all!"

"You mean when in the society of one!" But you had far better mention the subject yourself. You understand each other now, and I am sure that Alice would like it much better."

"Do you think so?"

"I am certain of it!"

"Well, if you think that she would like it better, I'll do it at once. But then, how shall I begin."

"She and Laurece you perceive are now walking on the lawn. Tell Laurece I want her, and when you have drawn the arm of Alice in yours, ask her playfully how she imagines you would look in uniform, and all the rest will follow as a matter of course."

Fred. accordingly left Charles at once, and having delivered the message to Laurece, took the hand of Alice and led her into the garden.

"Alice," said he, after having walked for some time in silence, for it is an extraordinary fact that she felt that he was about to communicate something, "Alice, how do you think that I should look as a General for instance, or as a Colonel, or a Captain—or in fact, without reference to rank, as a military man?"

"Oh, elegant!" exclaimed Alice, "you are just the very figure!"

"Would you like to see me in uniform?"

"Dearly! if your face were not buried in one of those odious black bear-skin caps, nothing could delight me more. I love to see an elegant man in uniform!"

"I beg to assure you that I appreciate the compliment!"

"Oh, but I did not intend it in a compliment. I merely meant to say that I thought you would look extremely elegant in uniform."

"And that you would like to see me in uniform?"

"Exactly."

"Well, I am very glad of that, for Major Palgrave has offered to get me a commission!"

"But not to enter the army in reality?—no to go abroad or to fight?—not to go into battle?"

"Why, in the army there are no other means of becoming distinguished!"

"This I'm sure I shouldn't like at all all! no; I should love to see you in an officer's dress, but the idea of your going into battle is horrible. You may be killed! or you may, like the Major, lose an arm, and a leg, and an eye! No, I shouldn't like that. Oh, no!"

"But it does not, my love, of necessity follow that I should be either killed or wounded!'

"No; but if you should, how dreadful it would be!

"But if I should not'—if I should return to you covered with honours, what joy you would feel! Who can tell what I may be? General Greville'—how well that would sound; or Major-General, or Colonel, or even Captain Greville! The lady of Captain Greville!—Captain Greville and his lady! Do you not think that it would look extremely well in the papers?"

"Oh, yes; but then the risk, dear, is terrible. If you should be wounded, I should die."

"Oh! I have no fear of that, my love! Do not think of it. Be sure that I shall soon acquire rank and distinction."

"Of that, dear, I do feel sure. I am certain that if you live, no one will surpass you. But it is a frightful thought that in an instant you may fall."

"My dearest Alice, I need not remind you that under any circumstances life is uncertain. Let a man be placed in any position, and in an instant he may fall. But I have no fear of falling. I feel that I shall escape every evil, and soon return with my object attained, that object being to prove myself worthy of you."

"But what does papa say? Does he approve of it?"

"The subject was mentioned last evening in his presence, and I am led to believe that he does."

"And your father?"

"Oh, he makes very short work of it. In his view things must take their course. If I am to be a soldier I must be a soldier, and if I am not to be, why I shall not. But I have not told you all: I shall not go alone: Charles will go with me and Lucrece"

"Indeed! And Lucrece! Is it possible! Oh, how dearly I should love to go too! I should not care so much if I were with you all.'

"When I get a regiment, dear Alice, you shall be with me."

"Oh, but I should like to go now! It would be delightful! But do not say another word now. I must run away and speak to Lucrece."

"Before you give me your consent?

"Will you not go, then, without my consent?'

"I would not for the world."

"Then you are a dear! and I'll see about it; I'll think the matter over; but don't detain me now. I must speak to Lucrece."

At that moment Lucrece and Charles approached, and Alice flew to her gentle and affectionate friend, and drew her aside, while Charles and Fred. explained to each other the progress they had made.

Charles had, however, but little to explain, for he had scarcely mentioned the subject to Lucrece when sh8 urged him with smiles to set upon his own judgment. She was sure that it would be highly advantageous if he thought so, for she always felt happy to encourage him in the pursuit of any course which he imagined would tend to his advancement. Opposition, even tacit acquiescence, was with her out of the question; she would paint his every project in the brightest colours Hope could supply, and inspire him with the conviction that it must be successful.

Caroline, too, when she heard of the proposal, felt happy in urging him to accept it; for having become extremely jealous of the influence which he possessed over that uncle, she imagined that if he were thus got rid of her reign would be in reality absolute.

The Doctor, however, as far as Fred. was concerned, knew not whether to countenance the step or to oppose it. He had watched the growth of the child's affection for Fred.: he knew how deeply rooted it had become; and hence feared that if anything fatal should occur her happiness would be for ever blasted.

"Why should he go?" he anxiously inquired of himself. "Why should he brave the chances of war? His object is laudable; but then what necessity is there for its being thus attained? He need not seek a fortune. He has one already; I have amply sufficient for them both. Why then should he go?"

Upon this point he dwelt with the most earnest anxiety until the expected arrival of the Mayor, who, on being consulted on the subject, so far removed his paternal fears as to induce him to offer no opposition; and as the matter was then decided, they started for town the next day.

"Now, my dear Frederick," said Alice, when they had left, "I do not know yet that I can allow you to go; but if I do consent, you must faithfully promise that you will not any account rush into danger. Think of me, Frederick, when you are in the field: consider what would become of me if anything dreadful were to happen."

"My dearest girl, do not be apprehens.ve that anything of the kind will occur. You would not have a coward for a husband."

"No, dear Frederick, not for the world! I love a brave man; and I know that you are brave; and hence it is that I fear that you will attempt too much and—fall in the attempt. Remember, dear, that your life is mine: and if ever I hear that you have undertaken any of those horrible 'forlorn hopes' of which I have heard Papa speak, I'll never forgive you. Promise me, Frederick—upon your honour promise me—that you never will!"

"I do, my love, promise: I never will, upon my honour."

"And do not be impetuous, there's a dear. Always keep back if you can; and never fear but another day's discretion is the better part of valour,' albert Shakspeare has not placed the sentiment in the mouth of a brave man.

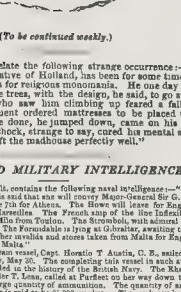
"Alice, be assured that, for your dear sake, I shall take all possible care of myself.

"Yes, do, there's a love!—because there is no necessity for being reckless. But you will not—no, I see assured that you will not."

"Comfort me, my love, to obtain that feeling till I return. The war will soon be over, and then, dear Alice, we part no more."

The success of Dr. Hawtree and the Major in town fully realized their anticipations. for, by working together, they not only obtained the commissions, but managed to attach Charles and Fred. to the same regiment.

The outfits were therefore immediately ordered, and, when all had been prepared to their entire satisfaction but more especially to that of Alice, who, when she saw Fred. in his full dress, pronounced it to be her unbiassed opinion that no one ever yet looked half so handsome!—Dr. Cleveland and Ensign Greville left England with the amiable, happy Lucrece.



(To be continued weekly.)

The Belgian journals relate the following strange occurrence:—"A gentleman named B——, a native of Holland, has been for some time confined in a madhouse at Brussels for religious monomania. He one day got loose, and climbed up one of the trees, with the design, he said, to go straight to heaven. Those below who saw him climbing up feared a fall, and the director of the establishment ordered mattresses to be placed under the tree. Before this could be done, he jumped down, came on his feet, and was but little hurt. The shock, strange to say, cured his mental alienation, and a few days since he left the madhouse perfectly well."

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Malta Times of the 9th ult. contains the following naval intelligence:—"The Locust left for Corfu on the 6th. It is said that a steamer will be ordered to Smyrna to Ragusa. The Snake left on the 7th for Athens. The Howe will leave for England on the arrival of the Acheron from Marseilles. The French ship of the line Inflexible and the brig Alcibiade have arrived at Milo from Toulon. The Stromboli, with admiral Sir J. Louis, is expected to sail on the 15th. The Formidable is lying at Gibraltar, awaiting the arrival of the Howe to transfer on board her invalids and stores taken from Malta for England. The Formidable will then return to Malta."

WOOLWICH.—The Cyclops steam vessel, Capt. Horatio T Austin, C. B., sailed for Ireland at two o'clock, A.M., on Tuesday, May 30. The completing this vessel is such an incredibly short space of time is unexampled in the history of the British Navy. The Rhadamanthus steam-vessel, Master Commander T. Lean, called at Purfleet on her way down the river on Sunday, and took on board a large quantity of ammunition. The quantity of arms shipped on board of her from the Tower is said to be 24,000 muskets. The workmen in the loading department of the royal arsenal were employed a considerable time in shipping stores to be conveyed to Ireland, and the laboratory workmen are to be engaged extra hours during the week.

THE 72ND HIGHLAND.—On Sunday morning last, we believe quite unexpectedly, the 2nd Dragoon Guards (or Queen's Bays), then stationed in the cavalry barrack, Hulme, received the "route" for Ireland, and they marched from Manchester, on Monday, for Liverpool. It is said that their present destination is Mullingar.

PORTSMOUTH, May 30.—Rhadamanthus this morning moved from the eastward, and, at one o'clock, P.M., Major Casteau, Lieutenants Tate, Farke, and Dare, with sixty gunners, four six pounders, and two howitzers, embarked in her and sailed immediately, it is supposed for Dublin The entire number, including officers and privates, on this occasion, will be about 320. Rear-Admiral Bowles, it is said, will hoist his flag in the Malabar, 72, and be stationed on the Irish coast.

We have the highest authority to state that if any of the Chelsea or Kilmainham pensioners connect themselves with the repeal movement, directly or indirectly, their names will instantly be struck off the list.

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

The Montrose arrived at Falmouth on Saturday with the mails from Gibraltar of the 18th inst., Malta 10th, Lisbon 22nd, Oporto 23rd, and Vigo 24th; met the Royal Tar at Gibraltar, and received the passengers for England from Madeira, which island she left on the 12th inst. There is not a word of news by this arrival. Besides the passengers, the Montrose had on board several of the crew of the barque Bridget Timmins, lost at Barcelona. The transport barque Boyne arrived at Gibraltar from Cork, on the 13th of May, and the Tory sailed thence for England, on the 12th. The Tagus steamer passed up for Malta on the same day. The French ships of war Marengo and Friedland sailed on the 13th for Brest. Off Cape St. Vincent saw the Peninsular Company's steamer Pasha, and off Cape Finisterre the Lady Mary Wood, both bound southward.

FIUME.—From letters received at Lloyd's from their agents at Massaulle, dated April 6, and from New York of the 19th ult., it appears that a Sakrenian, arrived at the former port and reported the barque Kerry, reported that a pirate had brought a hermaphrodite brig close into the Keys, on or about the 14th of March, and burnt her in the course of the night, and the Adelaide, Captain Adams, arrived at New York, previous to the 14th ult., from Matanzas, reported that a Spanish vessel arrived there about the 29th of April, which had been chased by a brig the day off the Bahama-banks by a piratical-looking schooner.

WICK, May 26.—The Friendship, master Cleasa, from Liverpool to Leith, put into Ramdale, 14th inst., with damage, having struck on a rock, and proceeded on the 16th for Olsea, to repair

PARIS, May 26.—The Union, from Batavia to Havre, put into Mauritius, Feb. 26, leaky, and must spring. An armed brig, supposed to be English, was seen to founder, 20th inst., four leagues off Dartmouth, by the Nouvelle Intrépide, arrived at Peramp.

WEST INDIES, May 5.—The Nathaniel Hooper, Murchell, from Liverpool to Havannah, put into Norfolk, last inst., with loss of spars, sails, rigging, &c., having been in contact with the Jane, from Liverpool to Charleston. A large ship, with painted ports, and displaced, was in that neighbourhood the day before. Sail as good terms as if she had been in contact with nothing has been transacted. Barley and malt have gone off at about previous currences. Good sound oats, as well as beans and peas, have met with a brisk demand, without alteration in price. The flour trade has ruled inactive, but the quotations have been supported.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 10,870 qrs; barley, 2160; oats, 7780; and malt, 5170 quarters, flour, 5790 sacks. Irish: barley, 32 , and oats, 9680 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 2830; and barley, 1500 quarters.

English. Wheat, Essex and Kent, 2nd, 46s to 50s; ditto white, 52s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 38s to 45s; ditto, white, 42s to 50s; rye, 34s to 38s; grinding barley, 27s to 29s, malting ditto, 30s to 32s. Chevalier, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 62s; brown ditto, 50s to 54s. Kingston and Ware, 54s to 65s; Chevalier, 62s; Lincolnshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s to 21s; potato ditto, 19s to 23s, Tandoff and Cork, black, 17s to 18s; ditto, white, 19s to 20s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s, ditto, old, 34s to 38s, grey peas, 33s to 35s, maple, 32s to 34s; white, 30s to 32s; boilers, 32s to 37s per quarter. Town-made flour, 47s to 49s; Suffolk, 38s to 40s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 36s to 38s per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 50s to 52s. In Bond.—Barley, 29s; oats, new, 17s; ditto feed, 14s to 15s, beans, 30s to 32s; peas, 32s to 37s per quarter. Flour, America, 22s to 24s; Baltic, 22s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Canary seed has gone off steadily, at full prices; but, in all other kinds of seeds, exceedingly little has been passing

The following are the present rates:—English, sowing, 42s to 57s, Baltic, crushing, 42s to 45s, Mediterranean and Odessa, 45s to 46s, hempseed, 35s to 46s per quarter coriander, 10s to 15s per cwt; brown mustard seed, 10s to 12s per bushel; white ditto, 12s to 14s; tares, 5s to 8s per bushel, English rapeseed, new, £32 to £37 per last of ten quarters. Linseed, English, £10 to £10 10s; ditto foreign, £7 to £7 10s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 per ton, canary, 64s to 68s per quarter

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 5½d per 4 lbs loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 47s 8d; barley, 27s 8d; oats, 17s 11d, rye, 29s 2d; beans, 27s 4d; peas, 32s 1d.

Imperial Average of the seven weeks which govern Duty.—Wheat, 46s 10d, barley, 28s 1d oats, 17s 1d rye, 30s 1d; beans, 28s 7d; peas, 32s 2d per quarter

Duty on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 23s 10d barley 9s 8d oats, 6s 0d, rye, 11s 6d, beans, 11s 6d peas 11s 6d

Tea.—At public sale on Tuesday 14,250 packages of tea were offered, out of which 2000 were bought in at about previous rates About 1,200,000 pounds have been imported this week For private contract demand is steady at full prices

Sugar.—All kinds of raw sugars continue in good request, consumption are very dull of sale, and a further decline of 6d per cwt. has taken place in the quotations

Coffee.—The market still remains inactive, at prices unaltered from last quotations.

Spices.—Very little has been doing in this market at late rates.

Rice.—The demand continues very limited, but there is ample supply on offer, and prices are going away. The price on the spot is 47s 3d to 47s 6d; for autumn delivery, 42s.

Oils.—We have but a moderate business doing in oils, yet prices are supported.

Wool.—About 2000 packages of wool have reached us from London this week, while privately we have had a fair inquiry at full quotations

Hops.—This market is brisk, and the prices may be called 3s per cwt higher.

Coals. Tanfield Moor, 15s 6d. Wylam, 15s, Hewicke and Co., 15s 6d, Killingworth, 17s 6d; Lambton, 20s 6d; Hetton, 20s; Stanley, 19s; Sunniside, 17s 6d.

Smithfield.—Owing to the supplies of fat stock being more than adequate to meet the wants of the buyers, the general demand is heavy, at drooping prices.—Beef, from 2s 6d to 3s 10d., mutton, 3s 8d to 4s; lamb, 4s 6d to 5s 4d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d., and pork, 3s to 3s 10d per 8 lbs. to sink the offa.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—There has been a large quantity of slaughtered meat on offer this week, while the demand has ruled dull, on the following terms.—Beef, from 2s 6d to 3s 6d., mutton, 3s 8d to 4s; lamb, 4s 6d to 5s 4d.; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d.; and pork, 3s to 3s 10d per 8 lbs. by the carcass.

ROBERT HERBERT.

COMMERCE AND MONEY.

The information which we have received from the manufacturing districts since our last publication although actually not unfavourable, still it is not of that cheering description which for some time past we have had the satisfaction to place before our readers. At Manchester in particular some dulness has been occasioned by a slight falling away during the last ten days in the amount of orders which had previously been received for manufactured cotton goods, and fears consequently were beginning to have themselves amongst the artisans and productive labourers that the late activity in trade has, for the present at all events, reached its maxim. That the activity was the consequence of the increase of demand from our colonies and foreign possessions chiefly we believe little doubt can be entertained, because excepting for the cotton manufactures, and woollen goods, in the home markets generally, if any improvement at all latterly occurred it has not been of so much importance as to have produced any influence whatever on the demand for common cotton goods. The fact, after all, is by far the best criterion to be anticipated of manufactured goods, and for the payment of fair wages to the productive classes; but, in the present most deplorable state of the agricultural interest, it is utterly impossible that the people can reap the numerous and important advantages which, when agriculture flourishes, the home consumption universally confers on them. It is considered that the farmers' capital alone invested in their agricultural pursuits has during the last twelve months been deteriorated more than can third, or upwards of seventy millions sterling, by the fall which has occurred during that interval in the value of all descriptions of agricultural property, little wonder can be entertained as the considerable decrease which now unfortunately exists in the consumption of all descriptions of manufactures of life as the great home markets; but still the renewal of demand for our colonies, foreign possessions, and late conquests in the Indies and Chinese Oceans, as well as remote parts, remained the commercial and manufacturing evils which have arisen from the very material falling away which circumstances have occasioned not only in the value but likewise in the amount of our internal consumption. Combinations in trade, however, are the natural consequences of temporary circumstances. They clear the trading atmosphere of numerous obstacles to national prosperity, and, although they may be attended by present inconveniences, still their future consequences are always advantageous to the community in general, and in the present instance their results will probably be the same.

In the money market great agitation has prevailed during this week, and at one time Consols were three per cent. lower than they were on Saturday last. Many reasons exist for this depression in the value of our national securities, but one more serious than all is actually has been. The chief cause, however, we conceive to be the deficiency which is actually on the increase in the public revenue, and which may mainly be attributed to the want of means amongst the great body of consumers to pay for their wonted quantities of the varying articles. The falling away in the malt duty to the extent of one hundred thousand pounds in the financial year ending in the beginning of April last most forcibly exhibits the reduced means of the people, nor can any other remedy be applied to the present crisis now in the fields, still much injury has been sustained, should a favourable change in it not speedily occur. The idea of another drain on our capital being necessitated by the present state of society in Scotland and in Ireland; but agitation there will pass away when agricultural produce is better paid for than it has been for the twelve months past: and whatever influence, therefore, the present aspect of affairs in these kingdoms may have on the value of the funds, it must disappear with the causes in which it has its origin; for the capital and well-accustomed energy of the British and Irish characters eventually will remove the present obstacles to general prosperity, were they even ten times more weighty than they really are. The scale of the weather also creates an unfavourable feeling in the minds of the money market. Too much rain has latterly fallen, and although it has not actually as yet damaged the crops now in the fields, still much injury may be sustained GLACIARUM, BAKER-STREET BAZAAR, Portman-square. — The small specimen of ARTIFICIAL ICE is REMOVED from the Colosseum, and a surface of 3000 square feet is now established, and open to the Public for Skating on, at all seasons, on which skaters may be seen performing their elegant evolutions, amidst Alpine scenery, covered with snow and hoar frost, forming a beautiful and faithful Panorama of Lucerne and its lake fronts, taken on the spot expressly by Mr. F. Phillips. From 8 even till Dusk; and, in the Evening, beautifully Illuminated from Seven till Ten o'clock; with the addition of a Promenade Illusion, under the direction of Mr. A. Sedgwick. Admission, 1s.; Chargefor Skating 1s. per hour, without additional charge for skates and attendance, which are provided.

CZERNY'S GRAND FANTASIA for SIXTEEN PIANISTS, in his QUARTET by Mr. HOLMES, and Twelve Performers more, Messrs. Distin, Glover, and Catches will be performed at Mr. W. H. HOLMES' MORNING CONCERT, at the Hanover-square Rooms, on SATURDAY, JUNE 10. Vocalists—Mesdames Caradori Allan, Lasky, and Mr. Lockey. Instrumentalists—Mr. Bristol, Chipp, Ferrero, John Parry, Herr Staudigl Instruments.—Pianoforte, Mr. W. H. Holmes: Harp, Mr J. Balsir Chatterton; Violin, Mr. Willy, Flute, Mr. Card; Violoncello, Mr. Hausmann. Conductor, Mr. Lucas.—Stalls, One Guinea each, and Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each, to be had of all the principal music-sellers, and of Mr. Holmes, 36, Beaumont-street.

THE HAND-BOOK OF NEEDLEWORK.
By MISS LAMBERT (of New Burlington street)
CAUTION TO BOOKSELLERS.—It is hereby given that the works entitled "The Ladies' Hand-Book of Knitting, Netting, and Crochet," and the "Ladies' Work Table Book," have been withdrawn from publication, and cannot be supplied by the booksellers and publishers thereof, and that any future piracy of the work entitled "THE HAND-BOOK OF NEEDLEWORK," by MISS LAMBERT, of which a New Edition has just been published by Mr. Murray of Albemarle-street, will be visited with the utmost severity of the law.—Dated this 27th day of May, 1849.

Just Published, price 8s.,
THE DUBLIN REVIEW. No. XXVII.—Contents: 1. Laing's Travels. 2. Is Ranke an Historian? 3. The Reformation and its Consequences. 4. Cardinal Mai's Spicilegium Romanum. 5. The Persecution of Slander—Edinburgh Review: Borrow's Bible in Spain. 6. National Holydays. 7. Recollections of the Life of Mendez. 8. Russia in 1842.—London: Published by C. Dolman, 61, New Bond-street; Booker and Co., Liverpool; J. Cumming, Dublin; Tait, Edinburgh.

CHEAP EDITIONS of CATHOLIC WORKS. — Catholic Christian instructed in the Sacraments, Observances, &c. of the Church, 6d. Poor Man's Catechism; or, the Christian Child and Religious explained, is. Milner's End of Religious Controversy, 2s. Milner's Letters to a Prebendary, 1s. Catechetical Instructions, by Dr. Lingard, 2s. 6d. Rudiments of Christian Doctrine, 1s. 6d. And many others in every variety of instructive, controversial, and devotional Catholic works, among which are many rare ones written about the 15th century
F. A. Little, 34, Henrietta-street, Convent Garden, London

THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE, for JUNE (No. II.)
Sixty four pages, 4to. Price One Shilling. Edited by DOUGLAS JERROLD
With Engravings from Designs by Kenny Meadows, Leech, Hine, Sargent, Brown, and Timbrell.
CONTENTS
1. The Sisters of Berne: A true story.
2. Characteristics of Art. With the Passage of the Red Sea. By Mrs. Poetaus.
3. The Boys of London. The Jew Boy. By Mark Lemon.
4. Hopes.
5. The Two Tomkinsons. By R. B. Peake.
6. "We."
7. Arthur Evelyn: the Decayed Gentleman.
8. Jupiter's Junket.
9. Sonnet, to C. Pembroke.
10. Death in the Drawing-room. Be a Lady
11. Pictorial Passages in the Life of Thomas Thumbrill.
12. The Demon Bird. By F. P. Palmer.
13. The Mysterious Lover. By the Editor.
14. Light and Shadow. By Catherine Farr.
15. Song for June.
16. The Modern Crusoe of the Indian Ocean: By Robert Postans.
17. Bateman's Ordnance of Mexico and Guatemala.
18. Fine Arts.
19. Reviews, &c
Office, 3, Crane court, Fleet street: and may be had of all booksellers in town and country

CLARK'S TALES OF THE WARS; or, Naval and Military Chronicle. Containing true and faithful Accounts of all the celebrated Battles fought by sea and by land, with Biographical Sketches of Naval and Military Commanders, and Interesting Narratives, Adventures, and Daring Exploits which occur in a life of warfare. Vol I contains Fifty-two splendid Wood Engravings, with a superior Steel Portrait of his late Majesty William the Fourth, with an interesting Memoir. Price 5s. 6d. Vol. II. contains Seventy Engravings, with a faithful Account of the Battle of Waterloo, and a superior Steel Portrait of the Duke of Wellington, with an interesting Memoir of his Life Price 5s. 6d. Vol. III. contains Sixty six Engravings, with a faithful Account of the French Revolution of 1830, and the Reigning Monarch of 1830; a splendid Steel Portrait of the ever-renowned Lord Viscount Nelson, with an interesting Memoir of his Life. Price 5s. 6d. Vol. IV., which concludes the series, contains Fifty-three Engravings, with a superior Steel Portrait of Napoleon Bonaparte. Price 5s. 6d, or complete in 4 Parts, Fourpence each. In Two Parts, Supreme each, or complete in two handsome 8vo. Vols., price 18s., illustrated with 128 Engravings, TALES OF TRAVELLERS; or, a View of the World. Giving Accounts of Wonderful Incidents, Extraordinary Narratives, Strange Adventures, and Interesting Passages in the Lives of celebrated Travellers.
Complete in Twenty-six Parts, Supreme each, illustrated with 120 Engravings, or Two Volumes, 18s., cloth.
CHRONICLES OF THE SEA. Being a collection of Narratives of Shipwrecks, Fires, Famines, and Disasters, incident to Maritime Life
In One Volume, neatly bound, with five Steel Plates, price 5s. 6d.
WILL WATCH; a Tale of the Coast.
By a highly popular writer, illustrated with fine engravings, founded on fact, entire.
Neatly bound, price One Shilling and Sixpence.
THE YOUNG SCHOLAR'S MANUAL OF ARITHMETIC, by THOMAS CARPENTER, Author of the "Scholar's Spelling Assistant," &c.
THE TRIPP.
THE MARK-LANE EXPRESS gives a Return Weekly of the number of Foreign Cattle of every description imported, and furnishes all information that can be procured, calculated to throw a light on this subject, of vital importance to the farmer. As an Agricultural Journal it will be found valuable to the farmer, corn, seed, hop, and provision merchant, miller, brewer, and all parties interested in the correctness of British and foreign corn and cattle market information, which is brought down to the latest moment of going to Press.
The Monthly Agricultural and Commercial Reports, Correspondence, and other valuable articles on Agricultural and Horticultural Subjects, are obtained from effective sources.
The "Mark Lane Express" is the largest Agricultural and Commercial Newspaper, published in London every Monday evening, as time for post. May be had by order of all booksellers and newsmens throughout the kingdom.
II.
PORTRAITS OF EMINENT BRITISH FARMERS.
A series of highly finished Steel Engravings, accurate Likenesses of the most Eminent British Farmers, will be given periodically in the FARMER'S MAGAZINE, price One Shilling and Sixpence.
The following is a list of some of those whose portraits will speedily appear:—
DEPARTED.

Earl of Leicester	J. Bakewell	C. Colling
Duke of Bedford	J. Tull	C. Ellman
LIVING.
Earl Spencer	H. Handley	C. Hillyard
Duke of Richmond	F. Pusey, M.P.	T. Bates
Earl Talbot	S. Grantham	H. Chamberlain
Lord Western	Jonas Webb	Col. Le Couteur
Sir C. Morgan, Bart.	J. Price	J. Smith, Deanston.

The "Farmer's Magazine," Vol. IV., New Series, price 10s. 6d., cloth boards, may be had of all booksellers.
III.
THE MOST POPULAR SPORTING MAGAZINE EXTANT.—Price 2s.
THE SPORTSMAN is Published Monthly, beautifully illustrated with superb Steel Engravings, exquisitely finished, from Original Designs, by the first artists of the age.
The "Sportsman" is a candidate for the favour of the sporting world, not on mere professions or unsupported pretensions, but on known merits, and on a reputation of which the proprietors honestly avow themselves proud.
"This is the cheapest, but certainly not the least talented, of the sporting magazines. The illustrations are both very beautifully engraved."—Bell's Life in London
"The 'Sportsman' we recommend as the most decidedly cheap publication extant."—York Herald.
The "Sportsman," Vol. VI., new series, illustrated with Twelve Steel Engravings, price 12s. 6d., in 8vo., cloth, may be had, by order, of all booksellers.
THE NEW MONTHLY
BELLE ASSEMBLÉE, a Fashionable and Literary Magazine, under the immediate patronage of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, beautifully illustrated with highly-finished Portraits of the Nobility, and contains Six Coloured Plates of the Fashions, finished in the first style, as they arrive from Paris. Price 1s. 6d. per number.
"Late magazine should find its way into every drawing-room in the kingdom."—News
"In every respect well worthy the distinguished patronage conferred on the work."—Exeter Gazette.
"A great acquisition to the fashionable world."—Reading Mercury.
"This elegant and amusing periodical deserves well the patronage of the female sex."—Newcastle Courant.
May be had, by order, of all booksellers.
Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.
—No. 10, Chatham-place, Blackfriars, London Established January, 1819.
PRESIDENT—SIR JAMES HYETT CARNAC, Bart., Rock Ulif, Lymington.
VICE PRESIDENT—GEO. FORBES, Esq., Finsbury-square.—With Twelve Directors.
FACILITIES are offered by this long-established Society to suit the views and the means of every class of Insurers, in Copyhold, Leasehold, or Freehold property, or against the decay or increasing or decreasing scale. The insured for life participate septennially in the profits realised. A liberal commission is allowed to Solicitors and Agents.
DAVID FOGO, Secretary.
N.B.—Agents are wanted in towns where none have been yet appointed.

PANCLIBANON IRON WORKS, 58, BAKER-STREET, PORTMAN-SQUARE.—Kitchen Ranges, Stove Grates, Furnishing Ironmongery.—The stock of this well established Establishment has been renewed, with an entirely fresh selection of every description of domestic furniture usually found in the ironmongery department. Every requisite for the Kitchen, in Copper, Tinned Iron, or Iron of first-rate quality, with Kitchen Ranges and Cooking Apparatus upon approved principles, including useful and modern improvements. Register Stove Grates, in steel and bronze, with Tender and fire-irons to correspond, suitable to drawing and dining rooms, libraries, halls, and chambers, in various styles of ornamental embellishment now in vogue, and of improved modes of construction, calculated to ensure safety with economy. Baths, adapted to all purposes of health and comfort; shower, plunge, and vapour, nursery, with hip, foot, and knee baths. Paper mache and iron tea trays. Tea and coffee urns and coffee machines of the best quality, of London make, comprising every useful improvement. Tea services in Britannia metal, enriched Polish paste of peculiar elegance of design and execution, chiefly worked from silver models; spoons, tongs, and caddies, knives and forks en suite; table and gravy spoons, soup ladles, fish knives, skates; tinbut and venison dishes and covers, corner dishes, epergnes, cruet stands, &c. &c. The stock of wire-work is the largest in the Kingdom, for the hall or veranda, conservatory, terrace, or room window. Trellis-work, trainers, baskets, arches, temples, and alcoves, of new and beautiful designs, and of first-class workmanship. Every article is plainly exhibited, with the ready money price affixed, and warranted of the best make.

THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The NINTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of this Society is NOW OPEN at their Gallery, Five-sheds, Pall-mall, next the British Institution.—Admittance, One Shilling; Catalogue, Sixpence. Open from Nine till Dusk. JAMES FAHEY, Secretary.

ROYAL SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.—The Nobility and Gentry, Subscribers, and the Public are respectfully informed that the vast preparations which have been in progress throughout the entire winter for the reception of the visitors to this highly favoured resort being now completed, the first of a grand series of FETES & FETE will be given on Wednesday, Thursday, and Tuesday, on a scale of unprecedented magnificence, combining the following unique attractions:—The unrivalled Menagerie, with all its recently added treasures, the fine beautiful Garden, with their Nubian and Abyssinian keepers! The first Grand Concert Champêtre, by the celebrated Band of the establishment, conducted by Mr. Godfrey—The first exhibition of Dioramic new stupendous Panorama Model al fresco of the far-famed excavated TEMPLES OF ELLORA, the greatest wonder of India—The first display of Southby's indescribably magnificent Pyro-Scenic Spectacles, Featuring their splendours of a Storm Ship-wreck, or Hindu Festival, introducing extraordinary Allegories. Tableaux de fete, and for the first time in Europe, the matchless effects of Indian Pyrotechny!!!. Admission One Shilling. Open from Ten in the Morning. Feeding of the Carnivora at Five, Concert at Half-past Five, and Tarantbah at Dusk.

THE LADIES GAZETTE of FASHION, Published Monthly, Price 1s., is the best and cheapest Book of Fashions ever published. It contains the latest Fashions direct from Paris, and generally a month before they appear in any other work. The Number for June contains Three large and superbly coloured Plates of French and English Costume, Engravings of Dresses, Mantelets, Caps, and Cloaks of every description, 22 Walking Dresses, 33 Bonnets, 8 Caps, and an almost endless variety of Summer novelties. With ample descriptions. Post free, 1s. 4d.
G. Berger, Holywell-street, Strand, and all Booksellers and Newsmen.

DOMESTIC HAND-BOOKS FOR INVALIDS.—
Is. each; by post, 1s. 6d.
On INDIGESTION, NERVOUSNESS, and DIET, with Diet Tables for all invalids, By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., Member of the Royal College of Surgeons
Also, by the Same Author,
On CONSTIPATION and HEMORRHOIDS, with twenty-six engravings.
Sherwood, 23, Paternoster-row; Garnalde, 147, Fleet-street; Hannay, 63, Oxford-street; Mann, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 51, Arundel-street, Strand.

REDUCED FARES TO RICHMOND.—The unrivalled Fast Steam-boat MINERVA, Captain Faure, leaves the OLD SWAN PIER, Londonbridge, at a Quarter past Ten, Waterloo-bridge, Hungerford Stairs, Adelphi, Strand, o'Clock, Lambeth Palace, Ten Minutes past Eleven; Vauxhall Railway Pier, Quarter past Eleven; Chelsea Church, Twenty Minutes, Half-past Eleven; returning at Half-past Six from Richmond. Fare, 1s.; Sundays, 1s. 6d.

GOVERNESS.—A Young Lady, who has been accustomed to teach the younger pupils in a school French and Music, is desirous of meeting with a family where she can have the care and instruction of four or five children under twelve years of age. She can have the best recommendations, and is highly respectably connected. Salary not so much an object as a comfortable home.—Address, M. G., at Mr. White's, 24, Cornhill, London.

DANCING TAUGHT in the most fashionable style by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private lessons at all hours to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age wishing privacy and expedition. An Evening Academy on Mondays and Fridays; a Juvenile Academy on Wednesdays and Saturdays. LESSONS in the VALSE & DEUX TEMPS every day.—A card of terms may be had on application as above

SKINNER'S DRIVING CROPS.
W. and J. SAUGSTER beg to inform the Nobility and Public that they have on Sale a Fashionable Assortment of these prime natural Hollies, Yews, and Thorns, mounted and unmounted.—140, Regent-street.

STAMFORD-HILL.—To be LET a genteel COTTAGE RESIDENCE, with good garden, and with or without coachhouse and stable, in Stamford-grove. Apply to view at the lodge; or at the office of Mr. William Bromley, Solicitor, Grey's-inn-square

THE PARISIAN DETERGENTS.—Gilding Detergent, 2s. 6d. per Bottle. Lacquer ditto, 1s. 6d. The first instantly restores the splendour of Gilding, and is applicable to picture-frames and all gilded decorations. The second revives the lustre of Or-molu, Bronze, Ormolu, Lacquer, Plated or Japanned Goods. Tea urns, pillars, and all lacquered articles. Both are perfectly innocuous, easily applied, and trifling as to cost.—Sold by Crosse and Co., 25, George-street, Hanover-square.—N. B. A Trial given without Charge.

BONNETS.—Paris Chips, Leghorns, Tuscan, Fancy, Dunstable, and Silk Bonnets and Caps, from Paris, in all the New Shapes for the Season, possessing the advantage of giving a youthful and graceful appearance—a peculiarity entirely confined to this house. The Prices are extremely low. Allowing the Public the full benefit of the New Tariff. Children's Leghorn Hats, 3s. to 12s.; Ladies' Leghorns, 7s.; Paris Chips, for Bridal Dresses, 10s. 6d. to 21s.; Sewn Paris Chips, from 12s. 6d.; Fancy Bonnets, 4s. to 18s.; Tuscans, 6s. to 16s.; Dunstables, 1s. 6d. to 10s.; Gentlemen's Garden or Cricket Hats, 2s. to 5s.; French Shapes, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 6s. 6d., 8s. 6d., 9s. 6d. per doz. The Trade supplied.—J. Simmons, 20, King William-street, London Bridge, corner of Cannon-street.

FURTHER REDUCTION IN TEA.—The East India Tea Company have again reduced the price of the poor man's tea: that which was 3s. per lb. may now be obtained at 2s. 11d.—2s. 6d. for 6lb. bag; other sorts, 3s. 6d. and 3s. 10d., 4s. 2d. and 4s. 6d.—No. 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate street.

ALE of very superior quality, brewed entirely from the very best Malt and Hops, and in such proportions as persons of nice palate will be sure to appreciate. Sold in imperial measure, 4 gallons each, at 1s. per gallon. Sent to any part of town carriage free. Orders by post punctually attended to. Address to the John Bull brewery office, 20, Philpot-lane, City.

BACON.—J. CRAFT, Philpot-lane, City, offers to the Public Bacon of excellent quality, which he receives weekly from a farmer in Wiltshire, who attends to the feeding of a number of pigs for the sole purpose of supplying him with the most delicious flavour, and which will be sure to suit the most delicate stomach.—Sold by the side or half side, 6d. per lb.—Sent to any part of town carriage free.

GINGER BRANDY.—This invaluable Liqueur continues to be manufactured by VINCENT EVANS PUGH, wine merchant, at their Distillery, 15, New Park-street, Borough, and 10, Rood-lane, City, and may be obtained of all the principal retail dealers in the metropolis, in bottles neatly sealed and labelled.
TO CONNOISSEURS IN BRANDY.—The Proprietors also fully succeeded in bringing to public notice the most perfect article ever yet offered, possessing both the delicacy of the taster and richness of bouquet natural to Cognac. They being supported in their assertion by the opinions of both the French growers, and the keenest judges in the English market.
The PALE BRANDY is particularly recommended as something extremely curious.

A WATCH, AS A GIFT, from its particular properties, is the best expression of the truth and warmth of friendship, as it is always with the owner, and always doing him service.—J. Jones, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, Watchmaker to the Admiralty, has on sale a great variety of Watches, suitable for all classes. The elegant gold horizontal watches, at £7 each, are admirable for ladies and gentlemen.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watch Work, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

SHIRTS AND STOCKS.—W. E. WHITELOCK, No. 166, Strand (established 70 years), solicits the attention of gentlemen to the SHIRTS he supplies for 6s. 6d. each, including washing; they are made in the latest fashion, the very best work, from Marsland's patent long cloth, with fine linen collars, fronts, and wrists, and are superior to those usually sold at 8s. 6d. Fine flannel shirts, 4s. 6d. each; the best made he got elsewhere for 12s. 6d. Samples sent, carriage paid, to any part of the Kingdom, upon receipt of a Post office order. Gentlemen's Stocks, in every variety of tie, neck, chest, and wrist, tigent. W. E. W.'s Stocks are unequalled in variety and prices, from 1s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. also, in coloured German Cravats, in rich silk, 4s. 6d., satin 3s. 6d., so much approved by the nobility.

CHASTON'S PATENT INDIAN-RUBBER ELASTIC CORN PLASTERS are now generally admitted to be the most unique and best to eradicate either HARD or SOFT CORNS. From their elastic quality they can be worn with perfect ease, however tight the boot may be, and will last for months. Invented and sold by B. Chaston, Chemist, Station, Norfolk, and sold in Boxes 1s. 1½d. each. N.B.—On receipt of Thirteen Stamps (free) a box will be forwarded (also free, to any part of the kingdom.

ELASTIC BOOTS.—THE QUEEN'S BOOTS.
SPARKES HALL'S PATENT ELASTIC ANKLE BOOTS require neither lacing, buttoning, nor tying; they can be put on and off in a moment, without trouble to the wearer, and are recommended to those gentlemen who are becoming off, holes wearing out, and many other imperfections in the ordinary modes of fastening, suggested the improvement which is now submitted to the public. No boots are afforded such variety of play and motion to the feet and ankles, or corresponded so exactly to their natural and anatomical form.—308, Regent-street, Langham-place, opposite the Polytechnic Institution.
Ladies and Gentlemen at a distance can be fitted by forwarding a pattern boot.

PROFESSOR BROWNE'S VENTILATING INVISIBLE PERUKE so closely resembles the real head of hair that sceptics and connoisseurs have pronounced it the most perfect and extraordinary invention of the day. The great advantage of this novel and unique peruke is, its being made without sewing or weaving causes its appearance so closely to resemble the natural hair, and in lightness and natural appearance, as to defy detection: its texture being so beautiful, so porous, and so free, that in all cases of perspiration or exercise it is impervious to the acrid evils of all other perukes entirely avoided. The sceptic and connoisseur are alike invited to inspect this novel and beautiful peruke, and the peculiar method of fitting the head, at the sole invention and manufactory, F. Browne, 47, Princes-street, between Mark-lane and Mincing-lane.

OH MY CORNS!
An almost universal exclamation, though quite unnecessary, since HOOPER'S FRENCH CORN PLASTERS never fail to relieve and pare the instant they are applied, and with little care and attention will effectually remove these petty torturers. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. each, by Hooper, Chemist, 43, London Bridge, City side; and by all Druggists. N.B. On receipt of a Shilling, and a postage stamp free, a box will be sent free to any part of the kingdom.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is universally acknowledged to be the only article that will effectually produce and restore hair, prevent it from falling off or turning grey, free it from scurf and dandriff, and will render it delightfully soft and flexible. It will also preserve the coiffure in the heated atmosphere of crowded assemblies
Caution. Ask for ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, and see that those words are on the Wrapper; all others are gross impositions.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s. Family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.
Sold at 20, Hatton-garden; and by Chemists and Perfumers.

SEA BATHING.
BOGNOR has always been a favourite resort for SEA BATHING.—Her gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, with her Royal Mother, resided at Bognor during her infancy; and the late Princess Charlotte delighted to honour this agreeable bathing place with her presence. Owing to its mild and balmy air, Bognor has always been considered, by the most eminent of the faculty, a truly desirable spot for the invalid. Of late years the town has been greatly improved: a promenade and carriage drive have been completed, commodious lodging houses erected, a large hotel added to the former number, and the streets newly paved. The beach and sands present a gradual and easy ingress and plane for bathing; so that the most timid need not be alarmed. Rocks, at a short distance, run parallel to the shore, breaking the swell of the sea, and rendering bathing at all times practicable. The rides and drives are very pleasant and numerous, and without a terrapike for miles. Horses, carriages, and invalid chairs of all forms are ready for hire. Well-assorted libraries afford intellectual amusement. Shops of all kinds supply every commodity at the most reasonable rates. House rent is also very moderate. There are coaches to and from London daily, also to Chichester, Brighton, Portsmouth, &c. To those who value health, and as a retired and select sea-side resort, Bognor stands second to none; or to those who, through pressure of business or from illness, may desire a change a more delightful spot can hardly be found in the south of England

MORISONIAN PIZES of £30, £20, and £10, for the Three best Essays on the Medical Liberty of the Subject.—Notice is hereby given that the last day for receiving the Essays is the 1st of July next. (Signed)
British College of Health, New Road, London, May, 1849. Morison and Mont.

GRADUATION in ARTS, &c.—The Advertiser continues to assist gentlemen of liberal education and pursuits in obtaining degrees in any faculty for which they may be qualified. The exercises, amount of fees, &c. will be communicated on receipt of letters addressed to A. M. Advertiser's station and education; and addressed (pre-paid) to M. D, at Messrs. Norks, 15, Tottenham-court, New-road.

CHESTER-TERRACE, REGENT'S-PARK.—To be SOLD or LET, the Lease, Fixtures, and Furniture of a HOUSE in the most eligible part of the above desirable terrace for a term of 17 or 21 years, at a low annual rental, in substantial condition, and may be entered upon immediately The furniture modern, and in excellent order. A 3-stall stable, coachman's-room, and coach-house connected therewith. For terms and cards to view, apply to Mr. G. B. Thompson, messenger, 36, Oxford-street or Mr. Fuller, 141, Albany-street, Regent's-park.

WAITHMAN'S SHAWLS and SILKS.—Mr. WAITHMAN, No. 104, Fleet-street, corner of Bridge-street, has submitted and sold, at a considerable sacrifice, his valuable and elegant Stock of Embroidered Gold and Silver Court Robes and Trains
Striped Satinets and Chené Silks.
Printed Shawls and Mantlets.
The whole has been removed, and is now selling off by Messrs. BAILEY and Co., Albion-house, 77, St. Paul's Church-yard, near Ludgate-hill.

Shawl Borders and Fringes.
Indian Printed Muslins and Lawns.
Cambric Handkerchiefs and Table Linen.
Irish Points and Genoa Velvets.

THE HEIR AT LAW SOCIETY, established in 1839, for the purpose of providing Professional Advice, aided by adequate funds, to assist and enable Heirs at Law, Personal Representatives, Legatees, and others, to assert their rights in cases where it can clearly be made to appear that they are wrongfully deprived of property, or kept out of possession by other parties claiming adversely. Applications, by or from persons desirous of the assistance of the Society, as above.—N.B. Good Freehold Security in Ireland not required for a part, but not to exceed one-fifth part of the whole premium

MOULD CANDLES TO BURN WITHOUT SNUFFING.—KEMPTON'S PATENT.—These Candles do not require snuffing; they burn longer and are cheaper than any other candle; the flame is steady and brilliant. No acrid or deleterious matter is used in the manufacture. Price, 8d. per lb. Sold by G. J. Parish, Agent for Exportation, 2½, Broad-street, City, and by Sheldon and Stocking, 12, High-street, Marylebone. W. Gethen, Broadley-terrace, Blandford-square; W. Evans, Talbot Warehouse, Greenwich. Jones, Oxford-street, Hoxton. John Hawkins, grocer, High-street, Whitechapel; S. Game, Fish-street-hill; J. Pain, grocer, Bethnal-green-road; and G. H. Reed, Fish-street-hill. Sold over the kitchen dresser, in Nottingham, Walworth, and at the Manufactory, Old Bargehouse, Christchurch, Surrey.

GRAVESEND.—TIVOLI HOTEL, TAVERN, and TEA GARDENS, top of Windmill-street, and adjoining Windmill-hill.—CHARLES LITTLETT begs to return his sincere thanks to his Friends and the Public for the kind support he received during the last summer, and trusts that by an unremitting attention to those patronising him with their orders during the ensuing season, together with the superior qualities of his wines and spirits, which have been selected with the greatest care, he will ensure a continuance of that distinguished patronage the Tivoli Tavern has hitherto received, and for which he begs to tender his most sincere desire to merit. Dinners provided for large or small parties at moderate charges. The Hotel contains thirty bed and ten sitting rooms, with the choicest wines in the neighbourhood. Joints provided from one till six o'clock. An ordinary daily at half-past one o'clock, at 1s. 6d. each, a cold collation at 1s. each; tea or coffee 1s. each, without restriction. The gardens are now open to the public from ten in the morning till dusk, and capable of holding 2000 persons comfortably. No charge for admission.

COALS, 20s. 6d. per TON.—THE SUNDERLAND AND STOCKTON COAL COMPANY are delivering the best Sunderland Wallsend—viewers Brown, Herron, and Lambton, at 20s. 6d. per ton. Newcastle and Stockton ditto, from 20s. 6d. to 24s. 6d., for cash on delivery only. Every sack warranted full weight of 224 lbs.—Orders addressed to the Office, No. 76, Newgate-street, City, will receive prompt attention.—A few respectable Agents wanted.

H. WALKER'S NEEDLES (by authority "The Queen's Own"), in the illustrated Chinese boxes, are now in course of delivery to the trade. These needles have large eyes, highly polished (even by blind persons) and work with great ease, having improved points, temper, and finish. The labels are protected likewise by the Royal Letters Patent granted to Prince Albert, in relief, on coloured grounds. H. Walker's improved fish-hooks, steel pens, hooks and eyes, are recommended. For the Sunday trade are packets of pins or pens, from 1s. to 10s. value, can be sent free by post by any respectable dealer, on receipt of 18 penny stamps for every shilling value. Every quality, &c., for shipping.—H. Walker, Manufacturer to the Queen, 30, Maiden lane, Wood-street, Cheapside.

H. Walker's Needles

CHUBB'S LOCKS, FIRE PROOF SAFES AND CHESTS, CASH BOXES, &c.
FIRE-PROOF SAFES.—In consequence of the great destruction of books, papers, &c., through deposting them in common iron safes and tin boxes, which afford no security however constructed, C. CHUBB and SON beg to call the notice of the Public to their Patent Fire-proof Street Room, Chests, Safes, Boxes, and Iron Doors, which are perfectly secure against the force and ingenuity of the most skilful and determined burglar, and are also subjected to several severe tests from fire
PATENT DETECTOR LOCKS.—Chubb's New Patent Detector Locks give perfect security from false keys, and also detect any attempt to open them. They are made of all sizes, and for every purpose to which locks are applied. These Locks are strong secure, neat, and durable
LATCHES FOR STREET DOORS.—The Patent Combination Latches for street doors are simple in construction, low in price, and quite secure. The keys of the latches are particularly neat and portable
CHUBB'S CASH BOXES are made of every size and are much stronger and more durable than those usually sold, and are fitted with the Detector Locks.
Japan Deed Boxes fitted up in every variety of form.
C. CHUBB and SON, Patentees and Manufacturers to her Majesty and H.R.H. Prince Albert, 57, St. Paul's Church-yard, London, and 28, Lord street, Liverpool.

PARR'S LIFE PILLS.—The sale of this wonderful medicine has extended all over the world; and the benefit resulting from their use is experienced by persons in all climes and countries. The immense increase that they experience it will be seen that, in North America, PARR'S LIFE PILLS are producing their undoubted results—the restoration of the afflicted to health. Extract of a letter received by Messrs. Savage and Co., Boston, from a respectable gentleman, in Niagara, British North America:—
"Indeed I send you each, being the amount of first supply of PARR'S LIFE PILLS I am now entirely out of the Pills, and could have sold many more on Saturday evening, as they are required for every day, and no small disappointment prevails in the town and neighbourhood in consequence of your not having arrived. I have sold some few boxes to a country merchant who has been afflicted with an affection of the Diaphragm and Liver, and he has found much benefit from the Pills, and has determined upon introducing them to his neighbourhood. I have been visited by persons who have travelled upwards of thirty miles to obtain them. The demand for them has exceeded my most sanguine expectations; several persons in this town have been cured of different disorders by their use.—one woman was confined to the house for six weeks under one of our most able physicians with a liver complaint, and was told by him that she could never recover. This gentleman capped her and said if the pain returned he must be sent for immediately The pain did return, and she took PARR'S LIFE PILLS, and was able to attend church the following Sabbath she was able—for the first time in six weeks—to attend at church. Her husband told me that his wife is now in better health than she has been for the last seven years. One case more before I use. An old woman living with my father for the last fifteen years has, to my knowledge, been afflicted for that length of time with inflammation of the eyelids—to look at times as to deprive her of sight. She has by awards of 50 years of age, and for years could eat nothing but cream kinds of food. She has been taking PARR'S LIFE PILLS.—her eyes are well, and she can eat anything with a good appetite. These are but a few of the many cases that have been in my eye-witness to.
(Signed) George Varey, Jun.
Sold wholesale by Edwards, 67, St. Paul's; Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Sutton and Co., Bow Churchyard. Mortershead and Co.; Manchester; and J. and R. Raimes and Co., Edinburgh; and retail by all respectable dealers in medicine in town and country. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and family boxes 11s each. Full directions given with each box. Beware of imitations. See that the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS" are engraved on the government stamp, pasted round each box. Also the signature of the proprietors, T. Roberts and Co., on the directions.

London: Printed by Robert Palmer (at the office of Palmer and Clayton), 3d, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and published by William Little, at 196, Strand, where all communications are requested to be addressed.—Saturday, June 3, 1843.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 58.—Vol. II.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1843. [Sixpence.

OFFICE, 198, STRAND.

THE LAW OF LIBEL.

No part of the English system of jurisprudence is open to more grave objections, or has been the subject of juster complaint, than that which relates to the class of offences known under the name of libel. Whether as regards the preservation of public peace and order, the maintenance of that august privilege of free discussion which is essential to the working of the machinery of the constitution, or to the keeping sacred that reverence for private character and reputation to which Englishmen have at all times affixed such deserved value, as to make this principle the very keystone on which the social edifice reposes—it is impossible to overrate the extent and importance of the bearings with which this subject divides itself. It must be said, to the reproach of our legislators, that on no subject is the law more vague, obscure, or inconsistent—more powerless for the protection of good and well-disposed citizens, or more inefficient for the detection and punishment of wrong-doers.

This state of the law has not resulted from any lulling of ministerial vigilance, or defect of legislatorial attention—and may rather be attributed to a rooted jealousy and aversion on the part of ministers and legislators to any decided interference with a subject which, in one of its branches—that of public libel—so closely and immediately affects those powers and dignities which men in high station are apt to guard with the most timorous and mistrustful watchfulness. In 1833, 1834, 1835, and on a later occasion, to which we shall by-and-by advert, the law of libel was the subject of investigation before parliamentary committees, or of discussion by the House of Commons, but without any result towards its amendment. The debates and inquiries to which it gave rise passed away without fruits, and left it in the same condition as before. At length, however, an effort is being made from which it is to be hoped some beneficial consequence will follow. A committee of the House of Lords, to which the consideration of the subject had been referred, have presented their report, and the results of their labours were last week stated by Lord Campbell, in an address characterised by that power of clear analysis which distinguishes him. On that occasion the noble and learned lord announced his intention of bringing in a bill to give effect to the recommendations of the committee.

Some of these recommendations lay the ground for important improvements in the present law, which will mitigate its severity as regards some classes more peculiarly exposed to its operation. The defendant is in all cases, civil and criminal, to have the power of proving, if he can, the truth of the libel. Hitherto the law on this point has been marked by a strange anomaly, truth being an absolute bar to a civil action, while in a proceeding by criminal information, or indictment, the jury were absolutely debarred from taking the truth of the subject-matter into their consideration at all. An effectual shield is thus thrown over all the abuses and malversations of men in authority. Under the law as it at present stands, a minister of the crown may have secretly forfeited his allegiance to the crown, and betrayed his duty to his country; he may have held correspondence with the enemy in time of war; he may have bartered the offices of the state for money, or conferred them on unworthy possessors, in order to forward purposes of private ambition or passion; he may have appointed a governor-general to remove an opponent from his path, or given away a seat in the cabinet to purchase the favours of a mistress; and yet the public writer who proclaims his infamy to the world, may, while he is in possession of the fullest means of establishing his charges, be sent to languish in a jail. He is denied the right of bringing his witnesses, and proving the truth of his accusations. He is thus treated with incomparably greater hardship, and with a far more complete want of consideration, than the arraigned felon, to whom the law allows the right, if he has the power, of establishing his own innocence. This is no imaginary case. The late Mr. Perry, the editor, and Mr. Lambert, the publisher of the Morning Chronicle, were visited by Lord Ellenborough, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, with the utmost severity of this barbarous law, for telling the world, on the accession of George IV., that the new King would have an opportunity of effacing, by his public conduct, the recollection of the unpopularity of George III. In our days, no doubt, an English jury would reject with contempt any imputation of criminality for holding language such as this; but, so long as the law remains stable, while public opinion is in its nature fluctuating and mutable, there can be no security for the honest Journalist against equal or greater injustice. Thus immunity is secured for public traitors, whom the indignant spirit of liberty is ever forward to denounce.

TEMPLES OF ELORA.—AT THE SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.—See page 396.

Vendidit hic auro patriam, dominum que potentem
Imposuit.

Strafford or Buckingham may go free, but a Marvel or a Junius is consigned to an imprisonment of months or years.

Other excellent provisions of Lord Campbell's plan are those by which it is proposed that "where an apology is offered, and a sum paid into court, if the plaintiff still goes on with the action, unless the jury shall be of opinion that the tender was insufficient, the verdict shall be for the defendant;" and that, "in cases where the publication was contrary to the defendant's orders, and was made under circumstances which rendered it impossible that he could direct or sanction it," evidence of these facts may be given. Cases have occurred, under the present law, in which only one copy of a newspaper containing a libel has been sold, when the publisher or proprietor was absent from his establishment and ignorant of the fact, and on returning, and discovering the libel, immediately put a stop to the sale, and yet, on criminal proceeding, he was punished by fine and imprisonment. It is also proposed that when the defendant is acquitted or gains the action he shall be allowed his costs. This provision is most important for the protection of journalists, who might under the present law be ruined by proceedings brought against them for having performed an important service. An action might be brought, for instance, by a convicted swindler, to defend which would cost thousands of pounds, yet he is saddled with the amount. An indictment might be brought by some public functionary whose misdemeanours he had exposed, and, even if the evidence on the other side were insufficient to establish his connection with the case at all, he must pay the costs of the proceedings, which might be repeated ad infinitum.

There are, however, some important omissions in the proposed scheme which will go far to impair its utility. All attempt at defining a libel is abandoned. The opinion of both Lord Brougham and Lord Campbell, we believe, is adverse to attempting a definition; but we cannot help thinking that, though it may be impossible to fix all the logical strictures, the object may be so far accomplished as to satisfy all the requirements of juridical purposes. Mr. O'Connell, in the bill which he introduced in 1837, proposed to extend to libel the definition of slander, which includes all words that impute an indictable crime, an incapacity to conduct business. This, however, does not include cases in which the imputation, if unfounded, would be not less prejudicial to the character and prospects of the person attacked. At present anything is a libel "which renders a man ridiculous, or lowers him in the esteem and opinion of the world." This may include everything or nothing, and, if acted upon, would put a stop to political discussion. We incline to think that a middle course might be found, and that it would be easy to frame a clause comprehending cases in which grave moral criminality, sufficient to exclude a man from the society of his equals, or to destroy his prospects in life, should be imputed. Another important emendation, which Lord Campbell does not attempt, would be the due regulation of the power possessed by the Attorney-General of filing ex officio informations. We are of opinion that it would be most advisable to give to the grand jury the control of this power, by leaving it to them to say, whether or not, in any case, it should be exercised. Again, in the trying of public libels before special juries, which are composed of men whose feelings and sympathies are all on the side of power, should most assuredly be abolished. If a petty jury is competent to try the most serious offences against life and property, why should it not also be competent to say whether a certain publication is calculated to disturb the peace of society? Leaving the option of a special jury will be to leave a power which can only be used for purposes of abuse.

Lord Campbell proposes to take a security against newspapers established by infamous persons for purposes of libel, by requiring all journals to give security at the Stamp-office for meeting the expenses of any action which may be brought against them. This is a provision which we need not say will little affect established journals of respectability; but unless the security to be required be limited to a moderate sum, it will bear with great hardship, in many cases, where the capital of the parties concerned may be small, although, at the same time, their characters and objects are irreproachable.

We have thus gone through the chief provisions of the proposed plan, as well as other points on which the law seems to us to call equally for amendment. We congratulate Lord Campbell on the good he will effect, and the reputation he will establish by his bill, but if he wishes to go down to posterity by the side of Fox and Erskine, as one who, by ameliorating the law of public libel, has extended and confirmed the liberties of his countrymen, he must take a larger scope than he has yet announced. His influence and rank, his profound knowledge of the law, his acquaintance derived by personal experience with the press, seem to point him out as the man who is called upon to undertake the mighty labour, and achieve the crowning triumph of giving wider usefulness and augmented facilities to the operations of that great power which forms the bulwark of English liberty, and ventilate by its wholesome and salutary influences, all the channels of English society.

NEW PICTURE-MODEL AT THE SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

The Whitsun fêtes at this very intellectual place of amusement, in addition to the menagerie (including the five giraffes lately engraved in our paper), and an al fresco concert, have introduced a pictorial novelty of great merit, on the same extensive scale as the panoramas of Vesuvius, Hecla, and Rome, in former seasons. The new picture, by the same artist as its predecessors, Mr. Danson, is a stupendous representation of "the Wonders of Elora;" perhaps the most extensive and surprising monuments of ancient Hindoo architecture. They are situated about a mile to the east of Elora, a town near the ancient city of Deelabad, in the East Indies; and the design has been executed by Mr. Danson, from a series of sketches taken on the spot by an officer of the Indian army. It is a vast mountain range, wrought into temples and palaces, partly subterraneous and partly isolated, hewn out of the solid granite rock, highly sculptured and profusely decorated. "The number and magnificence of the subterraneous temples," says Mr. Erskine, "the extent and loftiness of some, the endless diversity of sculpture in others, the variety of curious foliage, of minute tracery, highly-wrought pillars, rich mythological designs, sacred shrines, and colossal statues, all but distract the mind. It appeared truly wonderful that such prodigious efforts of labour and skill should remain, from times certainly not barbarous, without a trace to tell us the hand by which they were designed, or the populous and powerful nation by which they were completed."

The great central object in the view is the gorgeous Temple of "Keylas the Proud." It is an enormous excavated block, 500 feet in circumference, and 100 feet high, in the midst of a vast area cut down through the hill, the boundary scarp of which is hewn into magnificent colonnades, containing gigantic figures of the deities of Hindoo mythology. Every portion of this fabric of rock is profusely carved into columns, pilasters, friezes, and pediments, embellished with sculptured groups of men, animals, and chimeras of the wildest and most fanciful design. These decorations are all perfectly proportioned, executed in high relief, and bear a most brilliant polish. Near to Keylas, and scarcely inferior in the richness of their details, are the splendid Pagoda of Nandi, "The Sacred Bull," the great Cave of "Teen-Tal," and the superb Temple of "Das Avatar," or the Ten Incarnations! partly hollowed out of the mountain and partly insulated, but connected with each other by natural bridges of rock. In the open court stand two colossal elephants and elegant quadrangular obelisks, exquisitely sculptured, which serve as accessories to the grandeur of the whole. This enchanting scene is mirrored in the limpid waters of a sumptuous tank, surrounded by handsome flights of steps, with pedestals carved with bas-reliefs surmounted by figures of the Brahmin gods.

Several years since these wonders were explored by Captain Seeley, who thus describes the effect of Keylas. "Conceive," says he, "the burst of surprise at suddenly coming upon a stupendous temple, with a large court before it, hewn out of the solid rock, with all its parts perfect and beautiful, standing proudly alone upon its native bed, and detached from the neighbouring mountain by a spacious area all round, nearly 250 feet deep, and 150 broad; this unrivalled face rearing its rocky head to a height of nearly 100 feet, its length about 145 feet, by 92 broad, having well-formed doorways, windows, staircases to its upper floor, containing five large rooms of a smooth and polished surface, regularly divided by rows of pillars; the whole bulk of this immense block of isolated excavation being upwards of 500 feet in circumference, and, extraordinary as it may appear, having beyond its area three handsome figured galleries, or verandahs, supported by regular pillars, with compartments hewn out of the boundary scarp, containing 42 curious gigantic figures of the Hindoo mythology, the whole three galleries in continuity, enclosing the area, and occupying the almost incredible space of nearly 420 feet of excavated rock; being, upon the average, about 13 feet 2 inches broad all round, and in height 14½ feet; while, positively, above these again are excavated five large rooms. Within the court, and opposite these galleries, or verandahs, stands Keylas the Proud, wonderfully towering in hoary majesty,—a mighty fabric of rock, surpassed by no relic of antiquity in the known world." * * * "To build the Pantheon, the Parthenon at Athens, St. Peter's at Rome, or our own St. Paul's, is a task of science and labour; but we understand how it is done, how it proceeds, and how it is finished; but to conceive, for a moment, a body of men, however numerous, with a spirit however invincible, and resources however great, to attack a solid mountain of rock, in most parts 100 feet high, and excavating, by the slow process of the chisel, a temple like the one I have faintly described, with its galleries or pantheon, its vast area, and indescribable mass of sculpture and carving in endless profusion, the work appears beyond belief, and the mind is bewildered in amazement."

Such is the wondrous scene which Mr. Danson has attempted to represent in his new model or set scene. It is cleverly painted throughout, has nothing gaudy or gairish in its colouring, which occasionally reminds one of Daniell's exquisite drawings of Oriental scenery. The model is placed at the extremity of the lake in the garden, which thus serves up "the sumptuous tank:" it is backed by a romantic ridge of unwrought mountains, in which the distance is admirably managed. At dusk, a brilliant display of pyrotechny was fired by Southby: it consisted of jerks of golden fire springing from the surface of the lake, together with water-rockets, floating fire-work temples, terminating with what appeared to be a representation of Keylas the Proud, enveloped in fire-works, and upon a floating throne. One of the most striking effects, however, was that of instantaneously lighting up, with vivid blue fire, the whole range of colonnades, by means of the voltaic battery. We understand that, during the entire day, the gardens were visited by upwards of 8000 persons.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.—(From our own Correspondent.)—PARIS, June 6.—Ireland and Spain, and the praises of the agitators in both those countries, are the grand subject of controversy of the Parisian journals and the general conversation in the now thinly-attended saloons and cafés. Were our political guidesnose to be believed, England is in a most dreadful condition, and nothing less than a miracle can save her from a revolution. "Ireland," they prophesy, "is lost for ever—Scotland is on the eve of a separation—commerce destroyed, and the revenue desperate!" I am afraid that our French friends would not greatly lament were England really in the position they picture. In the mean time let me repeat that which I stated in my last correspondence—"Be on your guard shoals of French agitators and manufacturers of Irish grievances are their readiest cry." Only yesterday most confidently informed that Irish agents are now in Paris in daily communication with the chief of the Republican party. With respect to Spain she forms a portion of the grand panorama of Lopez—not so much because they really desire a truly liberal government, as the great wish to thwart England, whom they suppose to be the great friend and adviser of Espartero. In short, the greater portion of the press and a great number of politicians hate England. Better would it be for them "to look at home and mind their own affairs," for they truly are far from being flourishing, and this owing to the many foolish and ambitious politicians, who take a pride in opposing all the measures of the ministers. In all questions of peace or war the ministers can calculate on a majority, but no sooner is a question of politics, economy agitated than each deputy has his particular views—discusses them from day to day, and almost invariably the minister, abandoned by his party, is in a minority. It was thus with the coinage question, railroads, and several other minor matters. The budget alone passes; all parties have a direct interest in it. The sessions have nearly closed, and it will be then seen that not a single law of public utility has been carried.

The French continue their victorious march in Algeria, and daily bulletins are published of important advantages, &c. To appreciate them justly, the following bulletin published in the Moniteur need only be read:—

"Algiers, May 30.

"The column under the orders of the Duke D'Aumale entered Medeah on the 26th, with its prize, not having burnt a cartouche since the action of the 16th. 3000 prisoners arrive, yesterday, at the Maison Carrée, near Algiers, composed of women, old men, and children."

Now for the French boast of their fait d'armes. Abdel Kader might also publish his bulletins, in which he could give accounts of the continual losses sustained by his enemy in officers of distinction—the last was General Mustapha, who since 1836 has been in the French service, and commanded one of the most active and important divisions.

The following copy of a letter from the coast of Africa, written by a most intelligent Frenchman, will be found interesting:—

"Tunis, May 15.

"In my last I noticed the departure of an expedition from Tripoli for Gubel. I can now inform you that the Turks were beaten and obliged to retreat. It is a remarkable circumstance that in all parts of Africa the natives are striving to recover their nationality. Committees are organized for this purpose in Algeria, Tunis, Morocco, and Egypt. An attempt will soon be made to drive the Turks from Tripoli, and such is the weakness of the Sultan that there is a great chance of success. English agents, I am certain, are at the head of this conspiracy. They are in constant communication with the chiefs, particularly of Ghadamia and Fezza. They are striving to form an establishment on the coast.

"As to the French Government, it seems to have abandoned the regency, and permits the English to do whatever they please. It cares little for our political or commercial interests."

The Brazilian fleet, under the orders of Admiral Porpiere, arrived off Naples on the 20th of May, after 75 days' sail from Rio Janeiro. The admiral will conduct the newly-married Empress, sister of the King of the Two Sicilies, to Brazil.

The Versailles races on Sunday were well attended, and offered good sport. The Versailles prize for 1200 francs was won easily by Spark, the property of Mr. Hurat; the Gallipoy sweepstakes of 1000 francs by Capharnaüm, the property of Count Cambis; the prize given by the Minister of Commerce of 2000 francs by Mlle. Amanda, a so the property of Count Cambis; the June sweepstakes of 500 francs by Lanterne, the property of Prince Beauveau; the Orleans prize of 1000 francs was won by Roulette, the property of Mr. J. Riviere. There was also a race for 4000 francs between Reponse, the property of M. de Pontalba, and Karaghease, be onging to M. Sabatier, coming in next to each other. The owners, not to fatigue their horses, withdrew them. Before starting the odds were 2 to 1 in favour of Reponse.

The railroad from Padua to Venice is in full activity; that from Milan to Venice is far advanced; a line is traced for a road from Genoa to Venice.

On Saturday last I had the pleasure of being in the company of Rossini. The illustrious maestro was in good spirits, and looking extremely well. I am inclined to believe that Rossini has not come to Paris for the purpose of consulting our doctors.

The third concert of religious and classical music went off most brilliantly on Monday last; Allegri's "Miserere" was most admirably executed. At the head of the programme which followed, the announcement of which was forbidden, under the most severe penalties, for any maestro or singer of the Pontifical chapel to give or permit to be taken a copy of the celebrated "Miserere," which, for upwards of two hundred years, had been annually sung at Rome during the holy week. Mozart, having heard it only twice, wrote it down from memory without missing a single note. From this curious fact the interdiction was removed, and this remarkable work became public property."

It appears that Meyerbeer's opera, "The Prophet," will not be brought out so soon as was expected—at earliest in 1845, the director being under engagements with Donizetti until that period. The new ballet, "La Peri," is announced for the month of July: I much doubt whether it will be ready for the winter. It is currently reported that we are to have a second Opera Comique, and that ground has been purchased for building on the theatre near to the Château d'Eau. Duprez will leave Paris next week on a professional tour into the interior. Berlioz has returned to Paris from Germany. Fioravanti's opera, "The Venetian Lottery," has been badly received at Naples. A great musical festival, under the direction of Messrs. Reissiger, Wagner, and Müller, is preparing in Dresden. A grand chorus, sung by men only, is in repetition, and is the subject of much conversation. Berlioz intends bringing out a grand five act opera, the libretto by Scribe. It is said that the first act is already written. No name, as yet, has been given to it. Lesur, who is now in Moscow, has been sent 1000 francs by the Parisian Musical Fund. Tamburini is making a most profitable pilgrimage through our northern departments. The last accounts state that his spirits were light and his coffers heavy. Report speaks highly of an opera by Mr. Nutt, called "Genovera," brought out lately, and with most enthusiastic success, at Sondershausen. Lindpaentner's "Sicilian Vespers" has met with very indifferent success at Stuttgard. The report that Mendelssohn was writing music for Shakspere's "Tempest" appears not to be true.

The following anecdote is not, perhaps, generally known:—Rubini's first attempt at singing was at the theatre of Bergamo, in an air of Lambrei, introduced into a comedy. He was most enthusiastically applauded, and received as a recompense a piaster from the director. His concerts now produce upwards of £2000.

We had a most violent storm on the 3rd, which has done much damage to the environs of Paris.

SPAIN.—By the Madrid papers of the 27th ult. it appears that MM. Cortina and Madoz had just resigned their commands in the National Guard, and many other resignations had been tendered in that corps and in various civil departments. The Opposition prints continue to assert that the communications between Espartero and our Government are most frequent. M. Mendizabal is the principal object of their resentment. That he relies on a loan from England is the conclusion of most of them on seeing him, in the exhausted condition of the Treasury, abolish the puertas duties, declare the payment of the taxes optional, and yet engage to provide for the wants of the Government.

Barcelona continued undisturbed on the 28th, when some Carlist bands were reported to have entered Catalonia.

The Madrid journals of the 29th ultimo contain details of the attempted insurrection at Malaga (which we have already given here). On the arrival on the 23rd of the news of the resignation of the Lopez Cabinet, the National Guard and Municipality assembled, and a Junta was formed, which forthwith issued a proclamation, urging the inhabitants not to acknowledge Espartero's Government until the restoration of the Lopez Administration, and the accomplishment of their programme. This movement was, fortunately, checked by a reaction which took place on the 26th, when the Junta was dissolved, and the authorities recovered their ascendancy.

"According to well-informed persons," says one of our Madrid letters, "if this movement had obtained any success, it would have immediately spread to Seville, Grenada, Jaen, and other parts of Andalusia, with the exception of Cadiz. It is said that, in order to prevent another attempt of this description, the Government has ordered a corps of eight thousand men to be concentrated in the direction of Malaga. Letters from the Deputy, Prim, gave rise to apprehensions as to serious disturbances breaking out at Reus, Tarragona, and in other parts of Catalonia. It is feared that if a rising take place at Saragossa, another will soon follow in Galicia. Such is, en résumé, this day's news, and it is not satisfactory. All must now depend on the fidelity and devotedness of the army."

Some of the papers announce that a camp is also about to be formed in the vicinity of Madrid, and add, that nine battalions have been ordered to proceed to Saragossa by forced marches. On the other hand, great efforts were being made to a pply the troops with money, and we find, by the Phare des Pyrénées of the 3rd instant, that the corps stationed in the Basque provinces had, like those cantoned in Navarre and Catalonia, just received a month's pay.

Madrid, according to the Indicateur de Bordeaux of the 3rd instant, was perfectly quiet on the morning of the 30th ult., and no fresh disturbances had been heard of in the provinces.

Don Pedro Berrogui, an ex deputy, has been unanimously appointed first alcalde of Madrid, in lieu of M. Mendizabal, who has relinquished that office by his accession to the cabinet.

The Débats of Tuesday week contains a proclamation issued by Colonel Prim at Reuss, raising the standard of revolt. He marched with 3000 artisans on Tarragona, the gates of which were closed against him.

The Ayuntamiento of Barcelona published an address on the 31st ult., announcing the overthrow of the Lopez Ministry, and adding that it would have great pleasure in following the example; but, having the guns of the citadel in view, it advised the people to be quiet.

A decree of Mendizabal's assigns £50,000 out of the advance paid by Rothschild on Almaden to London, to pay the dividend of the Three per Cents.

It is rumoured that Cadiz, Alicante, and Corunna are to be declared free ports.

AMERICA.—DINNER OF ST GEORGE'S SOCIETY, IN NEW YORK.—The annual festival, or dinner of this benevolent society, for the benevolent purpose of extending the hand of charity to the destitute stranger, passed off with remarkable éclat. The chair was occupied by the president of the society, Mr. Bowers. About three hundred gentlemen sat down to dinner; amongst them were almost all the distinguished British subjects, and many well-known and influential citizens of America. Above the chair was a splendid display of the royal arms of England, the union jack and the stars and stripes waving in harmony by its sides. At the foot of the table was another transparency, of the arms of the Prince of Wales. On the right side was St. George and the dragon, and the motto of the society—

"Let mercy be our boast,
And shame our only fear!"

At the left side, the arms of the Queen of Great Britain. The recesses between the windows were occupied by tablets, bearing the following names of distinguished heroes, statesmen, and writers of Great Britain:—Wellington, Fox, Byron, Fielding, Canning, Howe, Nelson, Pitt, Scott, Smollett, Chatham, and Peel. The first toast of the day, and all who honour it St. George and Merry England." The toast was received with three times three hearty cheers. The chairman next gave "The Queen, God bless her!" with three times three and one cheer more. The national anthem, "God save the Queen," was received with appropriate enthusiasm. The next toasts were—"The Prince of Wales"—"Prince Albert, and the royal family." The "President of the United States" was next toasted with great applause. "The United Service—Wooden walls and British grenadiers—China and Affghanistan have added to their laurels." Lord John Hay, in replying to the toast, took an opportunity of referring to the accomplishment of the Ashburton treaty, which, he said, had laid the foundation of a lasting peace between the two countries, by conciliating the difficulties which might otherwise have led to a long and unnatural war. The health of Lord Ashburton and Dan Webster were next drunk with great enthusiasm. Mr. Reyburn, president of the St. Patrick's Society, gave—"The Angel visit of her Majesty to Ireland: may its fruits be love and joy!" (Great applause.) Several other toasts, in the same loyal and amicable spirit were given and responded to during the evening, which was one of the most unmixed gratification to all present that could be desired.

THE INSURRECTION AT MANILLA.—On the 21st of January the 3rd battalion of the Line revolted, when some of them were mounting guard at the palace. Several officers and several of the guard were killed and wounded. On the purpose of the mutineers being made known to the loyal artillerymen within the fort they immediately attacked them. The mutineers at first fought with courage, but they soon gave way to greater part of those who survived on that part of the building which is next to the river, threw themselves into the water, having in vain called on the peaceful people to join them in their cause. It is supposed that the explosion of the provisional magazine of powder in the fort, which took place during the height of the affray, and destroyed many of them by burying them under its ruins, contributed much to disheartien the rest. On the 5th of February upwards of 80 of the rebels were sentenced to die the death of traitors; 41 were executed on the 9th of February, and the others on the 11th, each day at 7 A.M. The spectacle was most awful. Previous to the execution of the criminals, the day previous to their execution, were imprisoned in barrack in the neighbourhood of the Artillery-ground, accompanied by their confessors, and their executioners were placed as guards over them.

THE OVERLAND MAIL.

CHINA AND INDIA.

The express from Marseilles, in anticipation of the mail from Bombay, of the 1st of May, brings the important details of the victory gained by Sir Charles Napier, on the 24th of March, near the river Tulsiki, in which the last effort was made by the natives, who, during six years, have ruled the fertile districts a ong the Indus. These details will be read with intense interest by the British public; and, as it will materially assist the reader in forming a correct idea of the topography of the country thus added to our glorious conquests in the East, we beg to refer to numbers 45, 50, and 54 of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for authentic portraits of the principal officers who have been employed in Scinde, and from Bombay, and avail Lord Ellenborough's pleasure concerning them, and for a map of Scinde, which, it is a knowledged, is minutely correct.

It will be remembered that the news of this second splendid victory had reached Bombay on the morning of the last despatch, but the particulars of the two actions were jumbled together in such a confused manner, that it was impossible to render it intelligible. The following, however, is a succinct narrative of this brilliant affair—

Major Stack, in charge of the Sukkur brigade, having received orders to join Sir C. Napier, then lying at Hyderabad, left Roree for that purpose on the 21st March. At Mutiaree he was fortunately reinforced by the Poonah Horse, under Lieutenant Tait, who had been despatched by Sir C. Napier, in case of emergency. On arriving at Mearoree, where the former action was fought, he observed large numbers of the Beloochees bearing down upon his left, and, having directed a party to reconnoitre, and finding their numbers increasing, he sent a message to Sir C. Napier, who immediately despatched the Scinde Horse, under Captain Jacob, and the bunse.f arrived on the ground within an hour, bringing a troop of the 9th Cavalry, the remainder of which were following with the cannon. The enemy, however, were soon forced to retreat, for, on crossing the dry bed of the river (Fulaili), to attack us, they were intercepted by a well-directed fire from Captain Rowan's guns, and in the course of half an hour not an enemy was to be seen. Sir C. Napier and Captain Jacob, however, arrived too late, and the whole party, having set out for Hyderabad, arrived in the camp on the evening of the 22nd, without experiencing any loss.

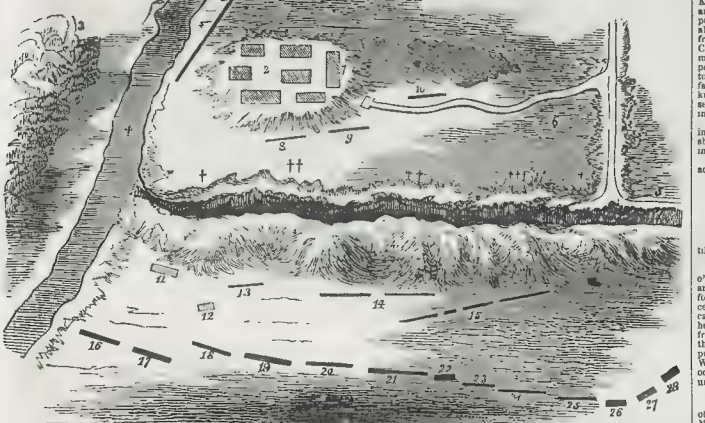
At daybreak, on the morning of the 24th, Sir C. Napier, with a force of 5,000, set out in pursuit of the enemy. He came up with them about eight o'clock the same morning, and, forming his troops into order of battle, on the personal command of Sheere Mahomed Khan, of Meerpoor, occupying a position much stronger than that taken up at the battle of Meeanee. They were drawn up always in a straight line, having the village of Dubba in rear, with two parallel ditches cut out in one of those huge nullahs which traverse their country—one eight feet deep by twenty wide, the other seventeen by forty-two feet wide; these ditches appeared to have been recently formed, and the earth being heaped up behind the original embankment, thus formed two considerable barriers. On the right lay their favourite stream, the Fulaile; and, at a short distance from its opposite bank, a dense thicket-kurgah, or jungle. Indeed, from the nicety shown in the selection of their position, and the ingenuity displayed in rendering it as formidable, their men have been impressed with an accurate idea of their acquaintance at least with the arts of war; and found that they had profited in no slight degree by former reverses. The enemy having opened fire on our approach, Major Leslie, with a troop of horse artillery, moved forward and attempted to take the nullah; while the 9th Light Cavalry and Poonah Horse, on his left, advanced in lines, his right being supported by her Majesty's 22nd Regiment. The latter, however, being too far in advance to allow of the oblique range of Leslie's guns, a partial stop was put to operations, but, on this being remedied, the artillery opened a terrific fire, and the troops advanced in echelons of regiments, the 22nd leading the attack. The enemy, shortly after, being observed to give way in the midst of their line, and to retreat by their left flank, Major Stack, with the 3rd Cavalry, under Captain Delamain, and the Scinde Horse, under Captain Jacob, immediately crossed the nullah, charged their left, and pursued the fugitives for several miles. Major Poole, at the head of the brigade, and Captain George the corps of her Majesty's 22nd Regiment, attacked the nullah on the left; but being desired to reserve their fire until within forty paces of the entrenchment, and being completely exposed in this manner to the face of the enemy's matchlockmen, suffered severely in consequence, having 23 killed and 131 wounded, ultimately succeeded in carrying the entrenchment in the most gallant style. Lieut. Cooke, who was the first to mount the rampart, succeeded in seizing one of the enemy's standards, and, while waving it and cheering his men onwards, was severely wounded. The Poonah Horse, under Captain Tait, and Major Story, in command of the 9th Cavalry, turned the enemy's right flank, and pursued them for a considerable distance. Meanwhile, the remaining brigade, under Brigadier Pennasy of the 25th, 21st, and 12th Regiments, under Captains Jackson, Stephens, and Fisher, and protected by the fires from Whitley's battery, bore down all before them; and on the right of these again the 4th and 1st Regiments, under Majors Browne and Clibborn, and who, while advancing towards the entrenchments, observed a portion of the Scinde Horse and the 3rd Cavalry, who had, when charging the enemy, got directly in front of the 2nd Brigade, and within range of our own fire. Not a moment was lost in checking the firing, and when all was adjusted they carried on in the most gallant manner, driving off the enemy at every point. The Horse Artillery and her Majesty's 22d Regiment completed the work by scouring the villages and jungles. No quarter was asked or given, and, as a proof of the deadly nature of the strife, only five prisoners were taken. Our loss has been rather severe, and particularly among the 22nd, who certainly bore the brunt of the fight. We had 39 killed and 231 wounded; among the former are Capt. Garrett, of the 9th Cavalry, and Lieut. Smith, of the Horse Artillery. Lieut. F. Burr, of the 21st Native Infantry, died shortly after of his wounds. Between 500 and 600 of the enemy were counted dead on the field, and as many more in the villages and jungles. Three of their chiefs fell in action; but Sheere



1. British line after the Action.
2. Village of Dubba, five miles east of Hyderabad.
3. Jungle.
4. Fulaie or River.
5. 22nd deep trenches.
6. Enemy's Camp, &c.
7. Mugal.
8. 22nd Regiment, third position.
9. 25th, fourth ditto.
10. 25th, third ditto.
11. Horse Artillery, third ditto.
12. Horse Art llery, second ditto.
13. 22nd, second ditto.
14. 25th and 21st, second ditto.
15. 12th, 8th, and 1st, second ditto.
16. 9th Cavalry.
17. Tait's Horse.
18. 22nd, first position.
19. Hutt's and Willoughby's Guns.
20. 25th, first position.
21. 21st, ditto.
22. Whittie's Battery, ditto.
23. 12th, ditto.
24. 8th, ditto.
25. 1st Grenadiers, ditto.
26. Horse Artillery, ditto.
27. 3rd Cavalry, ditto.
28. Scinde Horse, ditto.

PLAN OF THE BATTLE OF DUBBA.

Mahomed had escaped in the direction of the desert. Sir C. Napier, with a small detachment, shortly after penetrated about eighty miles into the desert, and took possession of the forts of Meerpoor and Omercote, which he found deserted. The Native Captain Fitzgerald, with a single company of the 21st, were left in the latter; but from its unhealthy and dangerous nature as an outpost, it is thought it will be destroyed. A company of the 8th Native Infantry were likewise left in charge of Meerpoor. General Napier has recommended the division of the country into so many military stations, the officers doing duty receiving from £1200 to £1400 a year. Captain Jacob is to have about sixty miles of the most disturbed portion assigned to him, and his force raised to 1000 strong; Captain Pone has been appointed collector and magistrate at Sukkurr; Captain Rathbourne at Hyderabad; Lieut. Brown, formerly assistant to Major Outram, commissioner and collector for the whole of the conquered territory: and Captain Preedy at Kurrachee. The debts due to the Ameers are not to be touched, and Sir Charles has recommended that no changes be made but what are really indispensable.

The following is a list of our casualties, and guns taken from the enemy:—

1st Troop Bombay Horse Artillery.—1 lieutenant killed, and 3 troopers wounded.
2nd Company 1st Battalion Foot Artillery.—No casualties
4 Company 2nd Battalion Foot Artillery.—1 camel killed, and 2 wounded
1 Company Golundauze.—1 lieutenant, 1 sepoy, and 1 horse wounded
3rd Regiment Bombay Light Cavalry.—1 trooper killed and 8 wounded; 3 horses killed, and 12 wounded.
9th Regiment Bengal Light Cavalry.—1 captain killed; 3 troopers, 1 syce, and 9 horses wounded.
Poonah Horse.—3 troopers killed, 1 lieutenant, and 17 troopers wounded; 7 horses killed, and 8 wounded
Scinde Horse.—1 trumpeter and 17 troopers wounded; 13 horses killed.
Civil Commissariat Meerut Sappers.—1 private wounded.
Her Majesty's 22nd Regiment.—23 rank and file killed; 4 lieutenants, 1 ensign, 6 sergeants, 2 drummers, and 111 rank and file wounded.
1st Grenadier Regiment Bombay Native Infantry.—2 sepoys killed, and 1 wounded.
8th Regiment Native Infantry. 1 sepoy wounded.
11th Regiment Native Infantry.—1 sepoy killed, and 1 wounded.
— Regiment Native Infantry. 1 drummer, and 3 sepoys killed; 2 lieutenants, 1 subaltern, 1 sergeant, 1 havildar, and 21 sepoys wounded.
25th Regiment Native Infantry.—3 sepoys killed; 3 jemadars, 3 havildars, and 16 sepoys wounded — Regiment Native Infantry. 1 lieutenant wounded.
Total killed, 39; wounded, 231; grand total of casualties, 270. Horses—killed, 23, wounded, 30. Camels killed, 1, wounded, 2.

GUNS TAKEN FROM THE ENEMY.

1 Troop Horse Artillery.—Lieut. J. C. Smith, killed.
3rd Company Golundauze.—Lieut. J. C. Powell, wounded slightly.
9th Regiment Light Cavalry.—Captain Garrett, killed.
Poonah Horse. Lieut. Tait, wounded severely.
Her Majesty's 22nd Regiment.—Lieuts. Clarke, Evans, Brenan, and Ensign Pratt severely wounded.
1st Regiment Native Infantry.—Lieut. Burr, severely wounded, and Lieut. Wilkinson, dead.
Lieut. M'Murdo, Acting Assistant Quartermaster General, wounded.
(Signed) H. J. Pennasy, Acting Assistant Adjutant General.
(Signed) C. J. Napier, Major General, Commanding in Scinde and Beloochistan.
(True Copy) (Signed) P. M'Pherson, Major, Military Secretary.

STRIKING.—A disturbance had broken out in the district of Khytal, attended with rather serious consequences. The Rajah having but recently died, and without heirs, the political agent (Mr. Gresthead) immediately set out to take possession in the name of the Government. Little expecting any opposition in the furtherance of the object of his mission, he set out, accompanied only with two companies of the 72nd Native Infantry, and having posted a few at the seven gates of the town, he intimated to the Ranee the object of his visit. The Ranee (or widow of Raja), highly incensed at the hurried and rather unceremonious manner in which Mr. Gresthead had come to order her to quit, immediately called upon her people to resent the injury she offered to the memory of her lately deceased husband. This was as readily responded to, and the soldiers at the gates were assailed with a shower of stones and, other missiles; three of them were killed in consequence. The Ranee, perceiving the party to be reinforced, immediately collected her forces together, amounting to about 6000 cavalry and a considerable number of matchlockmen, and placing herself at the head of this force, she compelled them to retreat with the loss of about 40 men. Having pursued them a distance of 14 miles, she deemed it expedient to return, having first plundered and burned the camp occupied by the Sepoys. Colonel Palmer, with the remainder of the 72nd Native Infantry, and Captain Horsford's nine-pounder battery, were ordered to march out from Kurnaul on the 12th, and the half of her Majesty's 31st Regiment, with Tait's horse, were directed to hold themselves in readiness. On the 14th, two 18-pounder guns and two mortars were ordered from Delhi, with the 15th Native Infantry, and were directed to join the Kurnaul detachment. Further troops, to the amount of 5000, were collected, but the Ranee fled, and the town was taken possession of. Lieutenants Whistler and Farre have been severely wounded.

JAYPORE.—An affair somewhat similar, but different in its results, has thrown the district into the utmost confusion. The Government having suggested to the Queen Regent of this district the propriety of installing her son on the throne of his father, the late Rajah, and that, consequently, her regency was not further required, the son being considered, with the aid of proper advisers, capable of using the responsibility thus imposed on him efficiently, without her further aid, this the lady did not relish, and immediately set about organising a conspiracy for the overthrow of those ministers and chiefs whom she thought inimical to her interests, or obnoxious to her in other respects. Having seen the utter impracticability of carrying out her views with the limited number of supporters she had willed over to her side, she immediately changed her object, and, apprehensive of the punishment under which she knew her conduct placed her in our Government if these were divulged, she adopted the expedient of turning accuser against the deluded victims who had come so readily forward to espouse her own cause. The young Rajah has in the interim died, and it is strongly suspected that he has been murdered. Thus the matter at present stands, until Government shall have thoroughly investigated these affairs.

The Court of Lucknow has likewise been disturbed by another lady, the Ranee of Burdha, who, having collected about 6000 men, with five guns, attacked Nowrus Ali Khan, the governor of that place, in consequence of some old disagreement between them. The engagement is said to have lasted for three hours, and the governor had been forced to retreat, with the loss of his ammunition and baggage.

Dost Mahomed had arrived at Peshawur, where he was preparing to enter the Khyber. He would be met on his arrival at Jellalabad by his son Ukbar, who had brought a large force for the purpose of escorting him home. Ukbar's authority and influence at Cabul is no. to be wanted, a reaction having taken place, it is said, in favour of the Newaub Zemaun Khan, who has been placed on the throne.

COLONEL STODDART AND CAPTAIN CONOLLY.—The following paragraph is given on the authority of a Loodiana letter, and though it certainly forms a striking contrast to the information which was stated to have been sent home by Government, on the authority of our Persian envoy, to the friends of these unfortunate gentlemen, still too much reliance need not be placed on it:—

Loodiana, March 23, 1843.

The report last month was, that Colonel Stoddart and Captain Conolly and been murdered, but I see in a few days that they are still alive, and that no head from a brother of his at Bokhara, who took him a Greek interpreter and a slave, who had been for months confined in the same well with them, were taken out and executed, and the populace made to believe that they were Colonel Stoddart and Captain Conolly. The man has very good testimonials of character, and has offered (without reward) to convey a chit to them and bring back an answer in the course of five months.

Bundlekund is again resuming its former unsettled appearance, despite the sanguine hopes which have been entertained for its pacification. Orders have been received for the immediate reinforcement of all the outposts, by the addition of detachments of cavalry, reports being rife of large bodies of the insurgents collecting in the neighbourhood of Mahoba and Jeitpore. The Boondelah bandits were still carrying on their unlawful avocations of cutting down the standing crops, puckerlowing the cattle, and committing robberies of all kinds upon their better-disposed neighbours. Jeitpore itself was shortly expected to be attacked; but no disturbance had yet taken place.

The remains of the late Sir W. Macnaghten have been recovered by his lady. The body had been recognised by the absence of the head and the arm, which had been cut off by his assassins. The body is now on its way to Calcutta for interment, having been recovered, by the payment of a large price, from the well in which it had been cast. Several smart shocks of an earthquake have been felt in the Deccan, but attended with nothing serious. The Governor-General continues at Agra, and has expressed a wish for visiting Hyderabad, the capital of Scinde.

The Ameers who surrendered themselves on the evening of the 17th, after the battle at Meesnee, have arrived in Bombay, the ports of Assurghur and Ahmednugger being considered rather unsafe, from their proximity to the seat of the disturbances in Scinde. They were received on landing by most of the principal authorities, and received every attention which the nature of circumstances permitted. They appeared downcast, and seemed to feel most keenly their sudden reverse of fortune. They expressed their thankfulness for the kindness shown them in no measured terms, and particularly to Captain Glasse, of her Majesty's sloop-of-war Nimrod, in which vessel they had been conveyed to Bombay. The meeting between Meer Roostum and Captain De la Hoste, was very touching—the captain having been a constant guest at his table while at the height of authority, and little dreaming of the sudden fall which had now overtaken him. Butcher's island, Mahir Fort, and Fort George had been severally surveyed by the Governor in person, for their future residence; but being considered unhealthy, and from their unhealthiness, the governor, Sir George Arthur, has kindly granted them the use of his delightful residence at Malabar Point, until the further intentions of Government are known. One of the Ameers, however, is supposed to have been instrumental in the murder of Capt. Ennis, has been sent to Fort George. Of 200 ladies composing their zenana, only 30 have volunteered to follow the future fortunes of their masters.

CHINA.

The news from China reaches to the 12th of March. The most important item is the death of Elepoo, the Imperial Commissioner, who expired at Canton on the 4th. From his advanced age, and the harassing duties which had been imposed upon him, his health had gradually declined. A partial delay has been occasioned, therefore, in the settlement of the details of the treaty, at least until the new commissioner shall have been appointed. Keying is mentioned as being the individual most likely to be nominated; and upon the very doubtful character of this personage, and with a view to push matters forward, Sir Henry has left for the north, where it is supposed all necessary steps for the future will be transacted. He had arrived at Macao from Hong-Kong, on his route thitherward. Messrs. Morrison, Thom, and Captain Balfour, had, therefore, returned from Canton, business, in the meantime, not requiring their presence there. An accident having happened to the steamer Phlegethon, the admiral found it impossible to proceed to Foo chow-loo, as he intended, but despatched Mr Coverley and Dr Playfair with a message to that effect to the authorities. On his passage up the kindliest feeling was manifested towards him, and cards of invitation were sent to him, which he respectfully declined, on the grounds of his presence in the city admitting of no delay.

In Canton some slight indications of hostility had been manifested, but no interruption to business had been experienced in consequence, and large shipments of teas were being made, trade generally having considerably improved of late Admiral Sir William Parker arrived at Hong-Kong in H.M.S. Cornwallis, accompanied by H.M.S. Wanderer.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The house did not meet.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

There being only 38 members present at four o'clock, the house adjourned till to-morrow.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

The Lord Chancellor took his seat on the Woolsack shortly before four o'clock.—The King of Hanover, as Duke of Cumberland, took the oaths and his seat. His Majesty appeared in excellent health and spirits, and sat for some time on the Woolsack, conversing familiarly with the Lord Chancellor, Lord Kenyon, Lord Strangford, &c. The appearance of his Majesty caused no small sensation in the house.—A message from her Majesty, giving her consent to the marriage of the Princess Augusta of Cambridge was read from the Woolsack.—An animated conversation took place with regard to the dismissal of magistrates by the Irish Lord Chancellor, on a question put by the Marquis of Clanricarde, which elicited from the Duke of Wellington a repetition or the declaration made by him on a former occasion to discountenance by every means the repeal of the legislative union.—Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

An immense number of petitions were presented by Mr. Hindley, and other hon members, against the educational clauses of the Factories Bill.—Mr. Hume gave notice that on Tuesday next, or on the earliest possible day after, he should propose a resolution to the effect, that the payment of a pension to an independent foreign sovereign from the taxes of the United kingdom was a waste of the public money and an injustice to the people of this country (cheers), and therefore that the pension of £21,000 a-year granted to the Duke of Cumberland ought to be discontinued while he remained King of Hanover. (Cheers.)—A number of questions were put to the Home Secretary on various matters regarding the Church of Scotland, illegal meetings, and poor-laws, but the answers were so vague that a perusal would fail to repay the attention of the reader.

IRELAND.

THE REPEAL MOVEMENT.—The usual weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place at the Corn Exchange-rooms Dublin, on Monday, when Alderman Keshan presided. In the course of the proceedings Mr. Clements, the barrister, detailed the particulars of an outrage which took place on the 30th ult., between the Repealers and the Orangemen near Dungannon, in the north of Ireland. He said, "As far as he could ascertain the facts, they were simply these:—The repealers of Carland had been in the habit of holding a repeal meeting on every second Tuesday, but the 30th ult. would have been one of the regular days, but some time previously they resolved to change the day to Sunday, and accordingly no meeting was to be held near Dungannon on the 30th ult. There was, therefore, no excuse whatever for any collection of anti-repealers, unless they wished to select a chairman and form a regular meeting for the adoption of resolutions of their own. There were some fourteen or fifteen men at work in a quarry, by which a lodge of Orangemen, amounting to fifty or sixty, passed; they were playing 'Croppies, lie down,' and some dispute took place between them and the quarrymen, which ended by the latter taking their drum and hunting the Orangemen away towards their place of rendezvous. This occurred between one and two o'clock on the day. At four o'clock, when the Dungannon had been collected to the amount of upwards of 4000, they marched out to the village of Carland, and broke the houses and furniture of all the Roman Catholics who resided there. The hostility of these rioters was not confined to men; they wrecked the houses of the old men as well as the young, and the widows' houses were not excepted (Here Mr. Clements exhibited the handkerchief of one of the female sufferers, which elicited groans for "the Orangemen of Dungannon"). He said he had no doubt that this riot was got up at the instigation of higher parties, and it was ludicrous to see Mr. Lucas offering £100 reward for the conviction of the parties that committed this outrage, a thing which the dominant faction actually wished to take place, to justify measures for the suspension of the constitution."—Notwithstanding the absence of Mr. O'Connell, the meeting was most densely crowded from the opening to the close of the proceedings at six o'clock, when the amount of repeal rent was announced to be £904 11s. 4d. This announcement was received with vehemence and long-continued cheering, and the meeting adjourned until next day, when Mr. O'Connell was expected to arrive from Drogheda.

HOAX ON THE GOVERNMENT.—A Dublin paper contains the following extract from the letter of a Waterford correspondent:—

"Waterford, Sunday Evening.—A steam-frigate, the Rhadamanthus, with 350 men of the 61st Regiment, arrived here at one o'clock this day. Some hoax must have been played off on the vigilant geese of the Roman capitol in Dublin. I have been just hearing a party of the officers say, in the Commercial Hotel, that they fully expected to be brought into action with the insurgents the very instant of their arrival, as a report of nothing less than open insurrection had reached the Castle! The soldiers were disembarked in a dreadful shower of rain."

The 18th instant is the day fixed for the public dinner to Mr. O'Connell, in Ailhous, at which Lord Ffrench is to preside.

FURTHER AFFRAY BETWEEN THE CONSTABULARY AND PEASANTRY.—The following is an extract from a letter which appears in the Evening Freeman, of Tuesday last. "Carrickmacross, June 5.—A most melancholy circumstance occurred here this day. The police force (which is now concentrated here)

PRINCE CHARLES EDWARD AFTER THE BATTLE OF CULLODEN. PAINTED BY J. DUNCAN.

EXHIBITION AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

(Continued from page 306.)

163. "A Festa Day." J. Uwins, R.A. This pretty picture, glowing with primitive colours, exhibits a Neapolitan mother in the act of teaching her child to dance the Tarantella. It is the best of several of the same class of subjects which are distributed through the rooms, and whose chief attractions are found in an artificial gaiety, instead of the more durable, and, to our minds, not less attractive charms, of unexaggerated truth. But in the beautiful little picture No. 485, Mr. Uwins has left the beaten path, and shown himself capable of those higher walks which excite and purify our best affections. A sailor, engaged to marry after his next voyage, returns with a sickness that carries him to the grave. The story is told with touching simplicity:—

Still long she nurseth him: tender thoughts meantime
Were interchanged, and hopes and views sublime—
To her he came to die.
* * * * *
She gazed affrighted'd; but she caught a last,
A dying look of love.

The concluding lines are those on which the picture is founded; but although it is thus, like all pictures, limited to a single moment of time, yet the accessories are so managed as to convey a clear idea of all the preliminary joys and sorrows—the "long nursings" of the poet's history. The colouring is clear, chaste, and natural: altogether it does great credit to the painter, and may be taken to be his best picture since the "Floral Girl," exhibited in 1838.

169. "In the Greenwood Shade." W. Etty, R.A. A slumbering nymph, with one of those poetic acknowledgments of frailty, a sleeping Cupid, nestling in an umbrageous labyrinth. As an academic study this masterly production leaves nothing to be desired.

172. "Portrait of a Child." J. Wood. "Ye did run well—what did hinder you?" is an inquiry to which we fear Mr. Wood would find it as difficult to give a satisfactory answer as those to whom it was first addressed. His works have always given sweet promise of future excellence; but we warn him that years have an end. With the greatest powers at command, and possessing especially an eye for the nicest delicacies of colour, he nevertheless halts on the threshold of extreme excellence. The "Portrait of a Child" corroborates these opinions.

177. "Portrait of Mrs. Chas. Wood, with her Infant Son." G. Patten, A. Another of Mr. Patten's carefully-executed portraits, and characterized by his usual excellence—well drawn extremities. The leg and foot of the high-spirited boy is as fresh and healthful as the life itself. The face of the lady is, perhaps, a little too much "made out."

182. "The Upper Part of the River Teign, near Dartmoor." F. R. Lee, R.A. If Mr. Lee were to paint less in the broad and undiscriminating manner of De Loutherberg, his verdant landscapes would be more truthful representations of that rugged nature which it appears to be his single aim to imitate. His views on the river Teign need greater variety in their colours, and more of those intermediate tones which the grey atmosphere of Britain spreads upon all our blending scenery. There is also a sameness in the touch by which the foliage is expressed which is very injurious to his works as pictures. It is true the individual leaves of different species of trees are not to be copied in the style of the early German and Italian masters; but yet, as every tree has a character by which it is distinguished, and as that character is found in an abridged delineation of the leading forms visible in masses of its leaves, it should be the business of the painter to devise a mode of touching his copies of them calculated to raise in the mind of the spectator an idea, and a correct one, of the general character of the originals. And as of leaves, so of all other objects in the landscape. Once impress the imagination with a sense of the truth, and the memory and its powers of association will instantly supply the minutiæ.

185. "Portrait of Viscount Eastnor." H. W. Pickersgill, R.A. We dislike portraits painted with so thin a vehicle that the grain of the canvass actually throws a tone of shadow over the whole of the light surfaces of the picture, and this is one of them. Besides, such painting will not stand. Mr. Pickersgill is also guilty of using his purple grey too liberally; many of his portraits, like the present, have the complexion of those unfortunate persons in whom the venous and arterial systems are confounded, and who are known in the medical profession as "blue patients."

191. "Portrait of a Lady." J. Watson Gordon, A. This portrait is remarkable for general refinement of colour and effect. The reflected lights on the face are very sweetly managed, and tend, by a delicate artifice of the painter, to produce harmony between the flesh tints and the white of the satin drapery. Sir Thomas Lawrence would have admired this picture.

193. "The Cotter's Saturday Night." C. W. Cope.

But hark! a rap comes gently to the door.
Jenny, who kens the meaning o' the same,
Tells how a neebor lad cam o'er the moor,
To do some errands, and convoy her hame.
The wily mother sees the conscious flame
Sparkle in Jenny's ee and flush her cheek,
With heart-struck anxious care inquires his name,
While Jenny haflins is afraid to speak;
Weel pleas'd the mother hears its nae wild, worthless rake.

A faulty picture, like an erroneous system, is seldom wholly wrong: some one excellence, some captivating truth or graceful sentiment, is seen in juxtaposition with much that is bad; but it is very unfortunate when that redeeming quality is not found in the principal person or the main point of interest in the composition, but is made to invest an incident of secondary importance. This is exactly the fault of Mr. Cope's picture: "blythe Jenny," "sweet Jenny," and her "strappan youth" are crude, commonplace, uninteresting personages; the "toil-worn cotter" is a mere clodpole, destitute of nationality; the "elder bairns" are not the brothers and sisters who, "wi' joy unfeign'd," spier for each other's welfare—who

Ca' the plough, or herd, or tentie rin
A cannie errand—

but, on the other hand, the "frugal wifie"—the "wily mother"—is, indeed, an admirable portrait of a Scotch house-

WATERFALL AT ST. NIGHTON'S KEIVE. PAINTED BY D. MACLISE, R.A.

SOLOMON EAGLE PREACHING REPENTANCE DURING THE PLAGUE, 1665. PAINTED BY F. F. POOLE.

wife, and an equally admirable personation of the poet's unequalled delineation. This, however is not enough to save the picture from condemnation. Jenny,

In youthfu' bloom, love sparkling in her ee,

the centre of poetic interest, is an unsightly, insipid blank; no minor excellences can atone for so capital an error, and we can only lament that a work which, in one respect at least, exhibits such undoubted evidence of national genius, should, in all its main points, so signally and singularly fail. Another time we would recommend the painter to avoid a brown and dirty habit of colouring into which he is falling.

198. "Portrait of Sir William Burnett, K.C.H. Painted at the request of the Medical Officers of the Royal Navy." Sir M. A. Shee, P.R.A. Good old Gerard Lairesse, in speaking of "portraits in general," says, "As in musick and singing a good ear is requisite, so in portraiture it's impossible to excel without a good eye; such an one, I mean, as is governed by sedate and sober sensation, and not by self-love or passion. Next is required a regular design, containing an exact proportion or division of the parts, not only of the face, but of the whole body, that the sitter may be known by his picture; which may be most agreeably done by mixing the fashion with what is painter-like; as the great Lely did, and which is called the painter-like or antique manner, but by the ignorant commonalty the Roman manner. Next, we must be thoroughly judicious in the graceful choice of the light, and the place where the person is to sit, that the face may appear to the best advantage; and then the body is to be disposed to the most natural and becoming posture. The next business, and which gives it the greatest lustre, is the colouring, that each person and his parts may have their proper colour, and such as appears in his daily converse, not such as proceeds from extraordinary emotions."

"The painter," he further says, "should discover, and know as much as possible, the nature and temper of the person sitting, and in which circumstance lies his favourite pleasure, that he may, when sitting, be entertained with talk pleasing to him, and his air thereby be kept steady and his posture natural."

Now, if the great author of "Rhymes on Art" had chosen to give an example of implicit obedience to a set of rules like the above, he could not more perfectly have done it than in the portrait before us. The proprieties of the art have been observed with the nicest exactness: the design is regular, the fashion is mixed with what is painter-like, the light is gracefully chosen, the place is suitable, the colouring is perfect, and the nature and temper of the man are sufficiently apparent. Yet does it lack fire; the Promethean spark, if there, is latent; it is a likeness, a correct and admirable likeness; but it is an artificial one—a work of skill, and not an emanation of that high-souled genius which the president is known to possess.

203. "Portrait of the Right Hon. Viscountess Glentworth." J. Phillips, R.A. A charming portrait of an intensely English gentlewoman, painted in the fine free spirit of Gainsborough. While "sweet majesty and awful love sit smiling on her brow," there is mingled with them an expression of domestic virtue and motherly affection which subdues the heart and unites its best sympathies with the object of admiration. We are not in love, but we are fairly captivated with the painter's power of making that which is lovely of universal and, we trust, obvious interest to the dullest and most wordly imagination. It will be perceived we set a high value on genuine portraiture.

204. "A Windy Day—Sussex." W. Collins, R.A. "Richard is himself again" conveys a sentiment which all who know Mr. Collin's forte must reciprocate with the recovering painter, as they behold him in this picture returning once more to his original and unrivalled strength as the sea-coast painter of Britain. Here the marine beauties of our sea-girt isle are accumulated with a power and beauty which bring the health-inspiring localities of our southern shores strongly to mind, and make our regrets deeper, that ever his pencil should have been for a moment expatriated from their native home. Are the British sands, the shady lanes, the national usages of our peasantry exhausted, that they should give place—but mark, not victory—to foreign affectations? We trow not; and this "Windy Day" is an uncontradicted witness of the truth of our opinion.

206. "Portrait of the Right Hon. Gen. Sir George Murray, Master-Gen. of the Ordnance." J. P. Knight. Again have we the goodly task of giving thanks—it would be ungrateful to be otherwise in the sight of this noble picture. There is no impudence of the pencil here; the colours are solidly laid, evenly worked, and "complexionally pleasant" in their blending. It may be that the light is not well distributed, that the forehead is illuminated at the expense of the face, and that it is even strangely focalized in two bright spots on the supercilliary regions, yet there is a compensating power of character, of expression, of general execution, which seems to absorb detraction, however just, and leave the critic nothing more to do but to record his heart-felt congratulations.

211. "Lord Wharncliffe, President of the Council." F. Grant, A. A grand characteristic portrait of this active and benevolent nobleman.

215. "Portrait of Joshua Jebb, Esq." S. Laurence. The abstraction of a mathematician is ably rendered in this very promising picture. No one can doubt its being a biographical epitome of the man.

217. "A Sultry Day—Naples." W. Collins, R.A. A clumsy misnomer—neither the scene nor the atmosphere are Neapolitan; and as to the day being sultry, we never saw an effect of greater or more refreshing coolness.

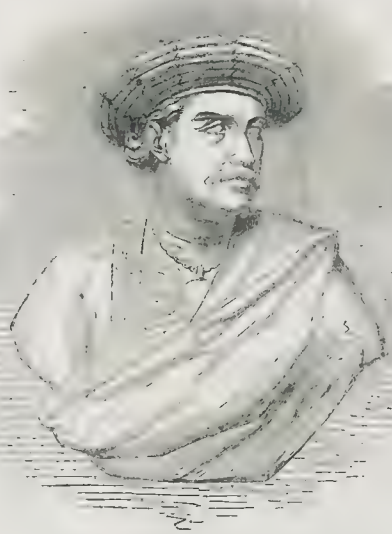
218. "Dr. Johnson perusing the Manuscript of 'The Vicar of Wakefield,' as the last Resource for rescuing Goldsmith from the Hands of the Bailiffs." E. M. Ward.

"I received one morning a message from poor Goldsmith that he was in great distress, and begging that I would come to him as soon as possible. I sent him a guinea, and promised to come to him directly. I accordingly went as soon as I was dressed, and found that his landlady had arrested him for his rent, at which he was in a violent passion. I perceived that he had already changed my guinea, and had got a bottle of Madeira and a glass before him. I put the cork into the bottle, desired he would be calm, and began to talk with him of the means by which he might be extricated. He then told me that he had a novel ready for the press, which he produced to me. I looked into it, and saw its merit; told the landlady I should soon return; and, having gone to a bookseller, sold it for £60."—Boswell's Life of Johnson.

It is the chief recommendation of this picture that it records an event common in the light-hearted and improvident lives of our early and ill-paid authors, that it affords a well-selected view of their homes and circumstances, and that it adds many particulars to our previous knowledge of their characters and peculiarities. Of Johnson and Goldsmith, in particular, it gives but little beyond their well-known portraits; but of their everyday existence, the outline and colouring of their times, it presents us with a vivid and truthful resemblance. The painting is carefully executed, but in drawing and composition and effect it is weak and inefficient.

219. "Gateway of the Great Temple at Baalbec." Mr. Wood's elaborate drawings of the temple do not possess the mind with half so grand an idea of the ruined city as this simple and unpretending picture. The mightiness of its proportions, the delicacy and beauty of its enrichments, the chasteness of its general aspect, are all epitomized in this beautiful gateway, and give us at the same time a very favourable view of Mr. Roberts's power of selection, a point in which the rank of the painter is as much seen as in his execution itself. The picture is remarkable for its truth of drawing and clearness of shadow.

226. "Portrait of John Gibson, Esq., R.A." Painted in Rome. E. D. Leahy. A welcome sight of our great sculptor.



DWARKANATH TAGORE.

cleverly painted, but too much in the modern Italian manner to command respect at home.

263. "Prince Charles Edward asleep in one of his Hiding-places after the Battle of Culloden, protected by Flora Macdonald and Highland Outlaws, who are alarmed on their Watch." J. Duncan. Here, in the mouth of a Highland cave, sheltered from the "shrewd and biting air of night," by a rude curtain of tattered sheep-skins, we behold the recent victor, Prince Charles Edward, a broken and despairing fugitive; his gallant spirit dissipated, and his well-knit limbs strained, and bruised, and soiled by urgent journeys and perilous encounters. He rests in fitful and affrighted slumbers, on a bed of heather, spread for him by his mountain followers; and beside him sits a sleepless guardian, the brave—the beautiful—the heroic Flora Macdonald. A deer-hound, who had couched at his feet, has given an alarm of coming danger, a sound indefinite and horrible has whispered through the solitary hills, the dreaded "sidier roy," or red soldiers, have climbed to the very portals of the lastness. The peril is imminent, but the foe is invisible. What shall be done? Shall that writhing and constrained sleeper be awakened? His devoted protector, prompt as the occasion, and wise beyond the emergency, counsels on the instant—silence, caution, self-possession. Thereupon the Highlanders draw together, and restraining the frenzy of their first emotions, wait, with desperate resolution, the first tangible manifestation of the coming danger. A smothered fire of turf and pine-sticks flashes on the group a gleam of light, and exhibits the scale-like action of the figures to great advantage.

As a painting it is highly creditable to the Scottish school; it is executed in a rich free style, and with much of the fluency of Wilkie's later works. We hear that it has been purchased by Mr. Hill of Edinburgh, and that it will be forthwith engraved for publication by Mr. Ryall, when there is no doubt it will, as it deserves, command an extensive circulation. No Scotsman should be without it.

423. "Solomon Eagle exhorting the People to Repentance during the Plague of the Year 1665." F. F. Poole.

"I suppose the world has heard of the famous Solomon Eagle, an enthusiast, he, though not intended study, with his head, very boldly denouncing judgment upon the city in a fruitful manner, sometimes quite naked, and with a pan of burning charcoal on his head."—Defoe's Narrative of the Plague in London.

The sun has just sunk beneath a hazy miasmatic shroud, and left a hectic flush of light behind him. A solemn calm rests on the lurid twilight. The tumultuous city has closed its labours, both of business and pleasure; but it is not the rest of wearied health, but the anticipations of despair and terror that have stilled its mighty heart. The night has come, but it brings not rest to London. The destroying angel—the plague—sits like a nightmare upon its atmosphere. Weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth are in her streets; the house-fronts and door-ways are painted with an uplifted cross, and that prayer of extremity, "Lord have mercy upon us." Commerce is at a stand. The ministers of religion are dead. The affections of the heart are dried up. The labourer, maddened with despair and drink, forgets his toil. The madman, touched by sorrows greater than his own, stalks through a series of emaciated. The mother, bereaved of her children, frantic and friendless, turns her neighbour to the streets. The death-cart rolls through the crowded thoroughfare and gathers up its load from the dead upon its pathways. A great cry bewails the tremendous execution, but no sounds can express the bitterness of the blow which the pride and the shame of the nation with an equal hand, and destroys the comfort of every family. Words cannot pourtray the immense calamity; but that which language fails to convey, or the wail of misery to express, the painter—speaking to the eye—has fearfully accomplished. Mr. Poole has painted the horrors of the plague.

In this terrific picture the circumstances of the great judgment are grouped together, and their effects accumulated and concentrated with a sublimity of treatment which has no parallel in the arts. It is all drawn, badly proportioned, and full of minor faults; but the grand idea of the plague is triumphantly given; the poet's task is achieved, despite the irregularities of his composition. This has been accomplished by taking, as it were, an average of the good and bad feelings of nature, and personifying them in separate individuals: each figure stands as the moral representative of a class of many specific natures. The working out of this principle has also been effected with consummate power. Light beams upon the hopeful; darkness veils the despairing and the desperate; the fool shrinks in idiotic stupor from the horrors of the unusual and unlooked, infatuated age finds death in the safeguards of its way. The whole scene is lighted by a cadaverous illumination, which is reflected from the pale green hues which form the prevailing colours of the draperies, and these, again, are revived and distributed again and again, as the eye crosses and re-crosses the picture, by spots of green, blue, and other cold colours.

We claim Mr. Poole for the nation as a great man; and we are persuaded that no has only to follow the bent of his vast genius to achieve the topmost honours of the art.

427. "Waterial at St. Nighton's Keive, near Tintagel, Cornwall." D. Maclise, R.A. An engraved sketch of this picture will make its description unnecessary. It is remarkable for the richness and truth of its execution, and is a charming specimen of the painter's best manner. In the botany of the rocks we recognise the Mycoris, Erica, Sparrium, Aspienium, &c.; but they are misplaced, and neither grow nor flower together. Nothing, however, can be more beautiful than the style in which they are pencilled; and they serve a good purpose in giving lightness to the gorgeous painting of the draperies. The girl is a noble specimen of the ancient Saxon of Cornwall.

Here we should, for this week, have closed our review; but recent intelligence from the East having brought our friend Dwarkanauth Tagore again before the public eye, we are induced to anticipate our notice of the ruptured Bank, by giving an engraving from Mr. Weekes's very beautiful bust of that celebrated and enlightened personage. We learn that on his arrival at Calcutta he was attacked by the priests and their adherents for having, during his residence in England, contrary to the rules of his caste, eaten and drunken with "pariahs and strangers," for which he was adjudged to lose his rank in the Brahminical aristocracy. This, however, he can very well afford to lose; and we trust that, profiting by his European experience, and following the lessons of civilization he has learned amongst us, he will become the instrument of emancipating his countrymen from all tribal and superstitious distinctions. Mr. Weekes's bust is admirably characteristic of the man, and, apart from merits of resemblance, is a noble piece of work. It was done, we believe, under circumstances of much difficulty, from Dwarkanauth's impatience of the restraint necessarily imposed on a sitter.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 11.—Trinity-Sunday.
MONDAY, 12.—
TUESDAY, 13.—
WEDNESDAY, 14.—Battle of Naseby, 1645.
THURSDAY, 15.—London Bridge commenced, 1825.
FRIDAY, 16.—Battle of Dettingen, 1743.
SATURDAY, 17.—St. Alban.

HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE JUNE 10.

Morning.....54 minutes after 11 | Evening.....0 minutes after 12

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Elh."—Under consideration.
"Mr. T. Horn."—Newcastle.—We cannot find room for the sketch of his tasteful house-front, as it would lead to so many similar applications.
"S. C.," North Walsham.—Apply to a magistrate. We should think the pounisture charge of the asitrea be out of the town.
"A. Z."—We have already given the substance of the factory question.
"P. L. L."—Landseer's "Horses," and Allan's "Battle of Waterloo."
"Thom."—1. No. 2. We do not know without the context. 3. Winchester is in Berkshire.
"J. B."—We think the enclosure of waste lands generally infringes on the rural sports, and frequently the rights, of the poor; and only under peculiar circumstances should we advocate the scheme. We have a settled opinion of the allotment system.
"A. S." and letter be content with the portion he has received, as we think he has but a poor chance of getting the balance.
"W. E. K."—At present we cannot find room for his new plan of heating horticultural buildings.
"Verax."—Thanks for her (?) letter. See the memoir in our present paper.
"Mr. John Dodge," Bradford.—Thanks for the suggestion, but we cannot read room.
"The Vicar who wrote to us" is thanked, and he will always find us advocating the great cause.
"A True Briton," Shepton Mallet.—Send the portrait.
"A. Z."—Yes.
"E. S. W.," Carlisle.—We have already engraved the exterior of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge.
"Odi Profanum," and "J. B. N."—We admit the fairness of their objections.
"E. D."—The father is liable, if the goods supplied are necessary.
"A. B.," Greenock.—Vol. II. will be completed on June 24. Vol. I. is now reprinted.
CHESS.—"S. H. G.," "Clarionet," "J. R.," "A Chess Player," "Chirurgus," "G. R.," "Gwent," "Veritas."—See our chess article.
"Phillidor."—Thanks for the contribution; we prefer problems of four or more moves.
"A. G. C."—Stalemate is a drawn game.
"S. James."—We do not think your method of marking the chessboard is a good one.
Chess correspondents not answered this week will be answered in our next.
"Edgar" is thanked, although his suggestions had been anticipated.
"J. S. H. E."—The charge is 5s.
"F. N.," Shepton Mallet.—If he finds any difficulty in procuring the paper, he should send 13s. 6d. to our office, and it shall be supplied for six months.
"Patricius."—We cordially agree with him.
A correspondent writes that the installations of the ball-rooms at Willis's, Hanover-square, the London Tavern, and Freemasons' Tavern.
"N. M."—The cup, or great day, at Ascot will be next Thursday.
"Centaur."—We have not room for the verses.
"C."—The queen of Stephen was named Maud, an abbreviation of Matilda.
"An Original Subscriber."—The subject shall be illustrated in our "Old English Sports"
"A Subscriber," Lynn, has mistaken our meaning.
"A Subscriber," Carlow.—Several illustrations of Irish scenery are in progress.
"Louisa."—The army takes precedence.
"E. V. R."—The subject of "Design" shall receive our early attention.
"W. M.," Kimbolton.—See the memoir of Dr. Pusey in our present journal. The communication respecting the Odd Fellows Society reached us too late.
"W. W.," Dublin.—The birthplace shall appear.
"G. H." Epworth, should apply to the Commissioners of the Income Tax.
"G. D.," Southampton.—We cannot, at present, notice the chart sent.
ERRATUM, at p. 366 of SUPPLEMENT.—For "Salvitur aeria hyenis," read "Salvitur aeria hyena." Thanks to "Horatius."
"G. J. M."—The first gratis Supplement this year was No. 40, Feb. 4th; the second, No. 46, March 18th; the two Anniversary Supplements were charged 6d.; the next Supplement will be presented, gratis, on July 1st.
"J. H." should apply to a banker or solicitor.
"J. C. D."—The sponsors for the Princess Royal were the Queen Dowager, the Duchesses of Gloucester and Kent, the King of the Belgians, the Duke of Sussex, and the Duke of Saxe Coburg and Gotha, for whom the Duke of Wellington appeared as proxy. The sponsors for the Prince of Wales were the King of Prussia, the Duchess of Kent, proxy for the Duchess of Saxe Coburg; the Duchess of Cambridge, proxy for the Duchess of Saxe Gotha; the Princess Augusta of Cambridge, proxy for the Princess Sophia; the Duke of Cambridge, and Prince Ferdinand of Coburg.
"W. H. C."—The colour of Cotheratone is a fine bright bay, with black legs, and one white heel behind; stands somewhat over fifteen hands two inches; head, large; shoulders, deep; splendid quarters and wide hips, denoting great power; strong arms, thighs, and necks, and sound clean legs and feet; in appearance, a powerful racer-like nag.
Ineligible.—"Lines on After Tuition," "On a Stream near Studley," "The Funeral," "by J. H.," "Lines on a Married Lady." Erratum of the Printer.—"Milner's End of Religious Controversy," advertised in our last at 2s., should be 1s.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.—We have, for a time, to request the forbearance of our friends towards the newsmen in cases of delay, as our present circulation is considerably above what can possibly be supplied on the publishing day. This inconvenience or delay will be remedied when our new machines are completed by Messrs. Middleton, Southwark. In the meantime, it is necessary for us to caution the public against inferior publications being substituted for our journal.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1843.

Another glorious achievement has been added to the long line of our Indian triumphs. The conquest of Scinde has been completed by a victory equal, in all respects, to that of the 17th February, which gained us a footing in the country, and still more decisive in its results: 19 standards, 11 pieces of cannon, and some thousands of killed and wounded are the trophies of an engagement in which the victors were one to five, as is the former they had been only one to eight. The battle of Meanee will long be remembered as worthy to rank with Plassey and Assaye, or any other of those memorable battles which laid the foundation or consolidated the edifice of our Indian power. If any one ever doubted the bravery of our native Indian troops, when commanded by generals who treat them with fairness, and respect their opinions and prejudices, that doubt must have been dispelled by the events of the last three months. They have proved themselves superior to the bravest enemy whom they could encounter in Asia, and capable of meeting a European army, should any continental power be found possessed of ambition, daring, and resources sufficient to instigate it to dispute with us the empire of India. They have shown by their steady bravery, their cool discipline, their physical powers of endurance, that they are worthy to stand in battle by the side of Britons, and to contend for the palm of valour with those who have ever been foremost in the strife, whether in Europe or Asia, at Badajoz and Salamanca, or on the blood-stained ramparts of Bhurtpore, and at the blazing gate of Ghuznee.

The selection of Sir Charles Napier by Lord Ellenborough for the command-in-chief of the army of Scinde, and for the government of the conquered province, has been most fortunate. We has he justified the confidence reposed in him, and upheld the great interests intrusted to his charge. His campaign has demonstrated that he possesses military genius of the highest order, for in no quality of a great commander has he shown himself deficient. The promptitude and vigour of his operations, the decision with which, on hearing of the treacherous attack on the British residency at Hyderabad, he pushed forward, without losing a moment, avenged the outrage, and overwhelmed his opponents in a great battle—the celerity of his advance from his entrenched camp to the scene of the recent action, where the Scindian chiefs had again collected their shattered forces, and resolved to risk a fresh contest—his energy in battle, now exercising the careful and vigilant superintendence of a cautious commander, now exposing his person to the storm of shot like the meanest soldier in his army, and leading his gallant followers to the charge which swept the foe from his path, are all that could be wished in the ideal of a great man. To say yet more sung of his talents for war is the enthusiastic confidence with which he has inspired his troops, and which, we are told by those who write from the information of eye-witnesses, was such, that "his army might have been cut to pieces, but could never have been defeated." It is in securing the attachment of their men that many commanders, otherwise great, have failed, and in this object, so difficult of attainment, Napier has been successful. His conquest of that country has been represented in the light of an unprovoked aggression; and we are told that at no distant day we shall be driven out from Scinde in disgrace, and that the disasters of Afghanistan will be acted over again. Those who hold this language forget that the Ameers drew upon themselves the retribution which has fallen upon them; that, after intriguing with our enemies, and being in consequence compelled to sign a treaty, acceding to certain demands of the British Government, they violated that treaty when the wax of its seal had scarcely cooled, and made an attack on the life of our envoy, in which, although he escaped unmjured, the British residence was destroyed. In no punishment to be awarded for a gross breach of faith, and a flagrant insult to the Majesty of England in the person of its ambassador? When has this country acted so pusillanimous and mean-spirited a part? Again, the invasion of Affghanistan is no just precedent by which to pronounce on the present case. The most experienced observers have declared that we might have retained our hold in that country but for the mismanagement of the agents to whom we intrusted its government. However this may be, we shall have the benefit of our experience there to guide us in dealing with the newly-conquered population of Scinde, and it we are true to ourselves, we shall avoid the blunders which led in the former case to so fatal a result. For ourselves, it is our unvarying maxim to view all questions of public policy in a light totally irrespective of party consideration, and with reference only to the general interests of the nation. Under any government to which the people of Great Britain may intrust their destinies, we should rejoice at the annexation of a new province to their widely-extended empire. We should hail it as a pledge of equal benefits for the conquerors and the conquered. For the conquered Scindians, we rejoice to see them exchange the tyranny of their native despots for the mild and paternal rule of the British Government. For our conquering countrymen, we anticipate a new development of their commerce, as well as an increase of general strength from the acquisition of the Delta of the Indus, a territory as fertile as that of the Nile. We gladly see in the abolition of slavery and remission of arrears of tribute, which has already taken place, a cheering token of the spirit of justice and benevolence in which, we trust, the Government of Scinde will be conducted. The policy of Sir C. Napier, and the directions which he has issued to the officers in whose hands he has placed the administration of Scinde, do equal honour to his head and heart. If these directions were acted upon in the spirit which dictated them, we see no reason to doubt that the exasperations and animosities of warfare will speedily subside into a state of feeling among its people as tranquil, happy, and contented as that with which the long-subdued provinces of India repose under the blessings of British rule. We subjoin the instructions to which we have alluded:—

"The above objects can only be made any avoidable change in the ancient customs and laws of the country as we now find them. The conquest of a country is a sufficient convulsion for the people of that country, without adding to their disturbance by abrupt innovations on their habits, and the usual routine of their social life. The above-mentioned officers are, therefore, requested to confine their exertions to the correction of those numerous evils which the late tyrannical government of the Scinde conquerors had inflicted upon the unhappy land. It will depend upon the Government of Scinde to make the people heal the coming of the British as a memorable redemption from slavery and oppression; or look upon it with apathy, as a mere change of cruel masters.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Sunday morning her Majesty and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the royal suite, and the household, attended divine service at Claremont. The Hon. and Rev. Charles Leslie Courtenay officiated. The Ascot Cup, and the Ascot Royal Hunt Cup, were submitted on Saturday, at Buckingham Palace, by Messrs. Mortimer and Hunt, to the Queen and Prince Albert, who were graciously pleased to express their high approbation.

The Queen and Prince Albert left Claremont soon after nine o'clock on Monday morning for Windsor Castle. Her Majesty and the Prince entered the Park at Frogmore, and drove by the royal dairy to Adelaide-lodge, where they alighted. The Queen did not visit the Castle, but remained at the Lodge until her Royal Highness walked through the park, and at half-past twelve o'clock her Majesty and his Royal Highness left for Cambridge, attended by Lord Hardwicke, General Sir Edward Bowater, and Col. Buckley, on horseback.

Monday being the birthday of his Majesty the King of Hanover, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge arrived at an early hour at his Majesty's residence in the Ambassador-court, St. James's Palace, to pay a visit of congratulation to his august relative. Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, accompanied by Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, arrived at half-past twelve o'clock, on a visit of congratulation to the mother of his Majesty. At half-past twelve o'clock her Majesty and his Royal Highness left for Carlton-house, attended by Lord Hardwicke, General Sir Edward Bowater, and Col. Buckley, on horseback.

Monday being the birthday of his Majesty the King of Hanover, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge arrived at an early hour at his Majesty's residence in the Ambassador-court, St. James's Palace, to pay a visit of congratulation to his august relative. Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, accompanied by Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, arrived at half-past twelve o'clock, on a visit of congratulation to the mother of his Majesty. At half-past twelve o'clock her Majesty and his Royal Highness left for Carlton-house, attended by Lord Hardwicke, General Sir Edward Bowater, and Col. Buckley, on horseback.

Tuesday was the birthday of the Queen, and her Majesty held a court at St. James's Palace, which was numerously attended by the nobility and gentry, who presented congratulatory addresses on the auspicious return of his Majesty's natal day.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent arrived at Claremont at twelve o'clock on Tuesday, from town, to pay a visit to the Queen and Prince Albert. Her Royal Highness lunched with her Majesty and his Royal Highness, and took her departure in a carriage and four, at a quarter past three o'clock, on her return to her residence, Clarence House, St. James's. The Queen and Prince Albert took their accustomed walk, in the forenoon, in Claremont Park.

On Wednesday the royal party at Claremont took a drive in the afternoon, the Queen and Prince Albert in an open pony carriage. In the forenoon her Majesty and Prince Albert went out, as usual, early in Claremont Park. His Royal Highness afterwards rode out on the riding-ground, attended by Sir Edward Bowater. The Earl of Warwick arrived at Claremont on Tuesday, and succeeded the Earl of Hardwicke as the Lord in Waiting on the Queen. The Earl of Hardwicke took his departure from Claremont. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal were taken an airing, on a pony, in the morning, in Claremont Park. The Queen and Prince Albert took an airing on Tuesday afternoon in a pony carriage.

Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, attended by her suite, left Marlborough House at a quarter past eight o'clock on Wednesday morning, for the Eastern-square terminus of the London and Birmingham Railway. Her Majesty took her departure for Worcestershire, to pay a visit to Croome.

THE KING OF HANOVER.—On Tuesday the King honoured Sir Robert Peel with a visit at his residence of the Right Hon. Baronet in Whitehall Gardens. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Cambridge visited his Majesty. His Majesty visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester at Gloucester-house. The King gave a grand dinner to the Queen Dowager and the Royal Family, at his residence, the Ambassadors' Court, St. James's Palace.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Cambridge and Prince George visited his Majesty on Wednesday. Prince Frederick, Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, also paid a visit to his Majesty, at his residence in the Ambassadors' Court, St. James's. Her Royal highness the Duchess of Gloucester gave a grand dinner to his Majesty, at her residence, Gloucester House.

A licence was taken out on Wednesday for the marriage of the Hon. Arthur Fitzgerald Kinnaird, of St. James's, Westminster, a bachelor, with Mary Jane Hoare, of Hornsey, county Middlesex, spinster.

MARRIED, on Tuesday, the 6th inst., at St. James's, Piccadilly, Captain William Henry Dixon, R.N., K.C.H., to Elizabeth Catherine Maurice, eldest daughter of T. J. Pettigrew, Esq., of Bayside-row.

ALMACK'S.—The ball, on Wednesday night, at Willis's, boasted of above 500 of the rank and fashion at present in the metropolis; and, notwithstanding the Duchess of Gloucester's party, and the very unfavourable state of the weather, the subscribers may be considered to have taken every advantage of their subscription, for, according to the number of vouchers circulated, less than 100 were absent. In fact, from there not being any private party opposed for that night in consequence of the ball, the "cuisine at Almack's was the greatest resource.

We have authority to state that the Court being out of mourning, black dresses (except in cases of private mourning) will not be worn by ladies and gentlemen attending the drawing-room on Wednesday next.

We regret to learn that the Marquis of Normanby, who is still at Naples, is not sufficiently recovered to return to England as yet. The noble marquis intended, by change of his residence, to proceed to the baths of Lucca.

THE LATE VISCOUNT HEREFORD.—We have to record the demise of this nobleman, who expired at Honfleur, in Normandy, on the 31st ult., in the sixty-seventh year of his age, after an illness of two years' duration.

THE WESTMINSTER-HALL EXHIBITION.—On Wednesday workmen were busily occupied, as on the previous days for the past week, in hanging and fixing up the various cartoons that will constitute the exhibition shortly to be opened in Westminster-hall. Along the east side of the temporary erection that is nearest to the entrances to the different law courts, eight of the large cartoons are placed, the tops of which reach several feet above the building that encloses them. Thus the public may expect soon to be admitted to view these novel and most interesting works of British art.

POSTSCRIPT.

Friday Evening.

The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Princess Royal, arrived in town at twenty minutes before six o'clock on Thursday afternoon in a carriage and four, escorted by a party of Light Dragoons, from Claremont.

The Lord Chamberlain has given directions for the erection of a temporary room in the Royal Stand at Ascot to be prepared for the use of the Earl of Rosslyn (the Master of the Buckhounds, and one of the Stewards), and those members of her Majesty's and Prince's Household who may visit the course; but the grand refreshment-room will not be fitted up as usual when the Sovereign honours the races with her presence.

Frogmore Lodge, after the extensive repairs it has undergone, will be in a fit state for the reception of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent by Tuesday next.

HER MAJESTY'S INTENDED VISIT TO DRURY-LANE THEATRE.—The Queen has signified her gracious pleasure to command a performance at this theatre on Monday next, the first state visit since Mr. Macready has been the lessee. A communication to that effect was forwarded to the theatre from the office of the Lord Chamberlain on Thursday, and a list of pieces was sent for her Majesty's selection. The appearance of the Sovereign at the theatre on Monday, will, it is expected, have a beneficial effect on the fallen fortunes of Drury-lane, and cause an additional number of nights to be added to the season

Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, attended by her suite, returned to her residence, Marlborough House, at eight o'clock on Thursday evening from Worcestershire.

THE KING OF HANOVER.—His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge paid a visit to his Majesty on Thursday.—The KING honoured Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence with a visit at their seat, Ealing Park, Middlesex.—The Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry gave a grand dinner to his Majesty at Holdernesse House the same day. Covers were laid for thirty-six. The noble marchioness had afterwards a numerous assembly.

During the passage of Major Sandland's ship Captain William's Companies of the Royal Artillery, to Corfu, in the Tory transport, Gunner and Driver Smith was blown overboard in the Bay of Biscay, leaving a widow and several children to lament his loss.

THE THAMES YACHT CLUB.—The second match for this season was sailed on Thursday by the five following boats:—the Phantom, the Champion, the Kingfisher, the Blue Bell, and the Mystery. All the regulations were admirably managed, and indeed it required no little skill to sail them. The position as to precedence was kept all the way back to Greenwich, where the match was concluded by the Enigma overcoming the Champion by about one minute past four o'clock, and her competitors following her at intervals of a few minutes. This match has proved the superiority in speed of iron yachts.

An atrocious scoundrel, named Isaacs, a Jew, came before Mr. Ballantine, the magistrate at the Thames Police-office, on Thursday, to charge a poor lad, named Morgan, with picking a sailor's pocket of a handkerchief at Stepney fair. From the evidence adduced there could not be a shadow of doubt that the accuser had himself committed the robbery, and brought the false charge against Morgan for the sake of his expenses as a witness at the Old Bailey. A police-officer deposed that Isaacs at one time proposed to him to convey bad money into the pockets of certain parties, in order that he might have them afterwards arrested. The magistrate dismissed the charge against Morgan.

DIABOLICAL PROPOSITION TO GOVERNMENT TO ASSASSINATE MR. O'CONNELL.—BOW-STREET.—In the course of Wednesday evening the greatest bustle was observed in and about the neighbourhood of the court, in consequence, as it was understood, of communications having been made from the authorities at the Home-office to Mr. Twyford, in the absence of Mr. Hall, the chief magistrate, for issuing a warrant for the apprehension of a man of the name of Mayne, who, from the accounts which our reporter was enabled to collect, had written a letter to Sir James Graham, offering, for a certain reward, to assassinate Mr. O'Connell. The circumstance, as might be expected, created a great sensation, and on the messenger arriving at the court, and finding it closed, search was made for Mr. Twyford, and he was ultimately found at the Athenæum Club, whence he immediately hastened to the court, to have the necessary document made out, and, shortly afterwards, certain persons arrived from the Home-office, in order to make the necessary depositions. The whole transaction was accomplished during the whole of the night upon the subject, and between four and five o'clock, on Thursday morning, he went away in a cab, and, on his return, about eight o'clock, being met by other persons connected with the Government, they remained in consultation some time, but the entire proceedings were conducted with so much secrecy that the result of their deliberations have not been allowed to transpire, and we were unable to learn whether any person had been taken into custody. Times.

Friday, two o'clock.

The miscreant who made the above proposition has been since arrested, and is now undergoing examination at the Home-office, before Mr. Hall, the chief magistrate of Bow street, in the presence of the Home Secretary Sir James Graham, and other of her Majesty's Ministers. It is understood that the letter in which the murderous proposition was contained was addressed to Sir James Graham himself. In the present state of Irish affairs, the matter has created a very unpleasant feeling in ministerial and official quarters.

FOREIGN.

ARRIVAL OF THE GREAT WESTERN.—DEATH OF SIR C. BAGOT.—The popular and successful steam-ship Great Western, Lieut. Hosken, arrived at Liverpool at six o'clock on Thursday morning, at last. She sailed from New York in the afternoon of Friday May 26, and has thus performed the passage in thirteen days and a half. She brings 138 passengers

The news by this arrival is of more than ordinary importance. Poor Sir Charles Bagot, when his arrival was daily looked for in England, died at Kingston, on the 19th of May. Had his death occurred three months ago, when it was expected by every packet, it would have excited less surprise; but now he was believed to be getting better, to that feeling of surprise will be added general regret.

A very important feature of the news is a speech which Mr. Webster has been making at a dinner given to him in the city of Boston. It is not what would be termed in England a "free trade" speech; but one, the spirit of which is in favour of commercial treaties with particular countries, and a scaling of duties adopted by this country for the admission of each country. As regards England, he is in favour of a considerable reduction of duties in the American tariff, and expresses a strong wish to see a low scale of fixed duties adopted by this country for the admission of the principal produce of the United States. As regards wool and flour, he appears to think it liable to expect that that principle [illegible] the British Ministry; but he urges [illegible] and flour, and [illegible] question [illegible] States, and which is little known and less used in England. This speech has naturally excited great interest, the result of Mr. Webster's late official position, and the high rank on the score of talent and character which he ds amongst his countrymen.

The Mexican forces, amounting to 3000, had been captured by the Yucatans, whom they went to invade, near Merida. The want of provisions is stated to have been the cause of the surrender. An action at sea between a Mexican steamer and the Yucatanese ended in the defeat of the former and the capture of the steamer. By the articles of capitulation the Mexican force was to embark for Tampico within eight days, leaving their arms behind.

President Tyler and several members of his cabinet were about making a tour of the principal cities of the union, Philadelphia, Boston, New York, &c.

Mr. Andrew, agent of the late United States Bank, has arrived in the Great Western; his mission is said to be connected with the sale of the Pennsylvania public works.

The operations in bills for this packet are described as being limited, and the rates rather heavier than by the former one—London, 8 to 8¼; France 5. 30. In the South the rate of foreign bills had risen.

COUNTRY NEWS.

BRISTOL.—A most daring burglary and attempt to murder took place on Sunday morning last, in an unfrequented district, named Conham, within five miles of Bristol, where an old lady named Hunt was so barbarously maltreated, that the burglars departed, taking with them a considerable quantity of valuable property under the impression that life was extinct. Most providentially, however, the recovered her senses, and has since identified her assailants as three men named Watkins, living in the neighbourhood.

CHELTENHAM.—Joseph King, the unfortunate victim of the Northleach prison, who was unable through weakness to give his evidence at the late inquest on Jones, died on last Tuesday week. It was found difficult to hold an inquest, in consequence of the few former victims, Bayly and Hall, being witnesses to his ill-treatment. His own depositions, and also those of his parents, went to prove that he must have died from the effects of the discipline he was subjected to during his confinement. His remains presented a most heartrending appearance, but cannot be described. He was interred on Tuesday last. His age was 22. He was sent to Northleach by the Cheltenham magistrates for stealing a piece of stone of the value of 6d. He is described by the [illegible] as of a healthy disposition, but at distant intervals was subject to abberations of intellect. In one of these temporary fits he was induced by some other lads to take the stone, for which he was punished.

KENT.—INCENDIARY FIRE.—A few days since, as Mr. Farrant was driving with Mr. Daily past Tyland-farm, on the Rochester-road, he saw a staunch stack burst into flames, and a man run away from it, up a road leading to the Warren. Mr. Farrant immediately galloped in pursuit, and overtaking the man, apprehended him. He proved to be a stranger in this district, knowing nothing whatever of Mr. Hulle, the owner of the stack. He confessed that he had done it from a desire to be sent out of the country, as he was starving, and could not obtain employment. He was taken to Bexley cage, where he is now in custody. His name is George Brown, a gardener, from Bradford, Essex. The stack was entirely consumed, but was insured in the Sun office.

LIVERPOOL.—The fires at Liverpool are occupying the serious attention of the journalists of that place, and attention is directed to the discovery of the cause of such frightful calamities, and to the consideration of remedies. On Tuesday last, it is stated in the Liverpool Times, a piece of cotton bagging and a handful of cotton, both half burnt, were taken from a bale in a warehouse containing 13,000 bags. These were discovered by a warehouseman during his nightly examination of the premises, but if they had passed unnoticed, there is no doubt that the whole of the premises would have been destroyed before the following morning, and the fire-brand would have involved the destruction of property worth at least £100,000. The opinion expressed on the appearance of the burnt cotton is, that the fire was produced by a spark from a pipe or cigar, and this leads to animadversions on the want of system which marks the warehousing of goods in Liverpool. The keeper of the warehouse has no control whatever over the men employed on the premises, but they are usually picked up in the street, by the foreman of the merchant who owns the cotton, and are therefore his servants alone. The suggested remedy is to place in the hands of the warehousekeeper himself the entire control of the warehouses, so that none but persons whose character he knows may be employed. Under the present system, the set of men who are employed one day may never appear again, and the succession of new faces prevents anything like responsibility.

RURAL AFFAIRS.—The heavy rains of the last month have extended throughout the whole of England and Scotland, and serious apprehensions are beginning to be felt for the consequences. The Severn, the AVON, and many of the other rivers in different parts of the kingdom, have overflowed the surrounding districts, destroying great quantities of meadow grass, and in some cases covering the arable lands; whilst the uplands have been deluged and saturated by incessant rains, which have injured the appearance of the wheat and spring corn, especially on the heavy soils, and have much retarded the planting of potatoes and the sowing of Swedish turnips. In this county there still remain large breadths of potatoes ground to be planted, it having been impossible to work on heavy soils for the last month. This is likely to diminish the productiveness of the potatoe crop; for even if the sets are got in now, they cannot be expected to yield well; and the crop will be still further diminished by the rotting of the seed in the ground, which is beginning to be complained of, both on the Lancashire and Cheshire sides of the river Mersey. Should the weather be favourable for the next month, the crops, as a whole, may still, however, be large, notwithstanding the very heavy rains of last month; for the light and well-drained lands already give promise of great abundance (especially of grass and hay), and the heavy lands, though in a critical state, have not yet sustained any irreparable injury. A gentleman who has just returned from the south of England informs us that the crops at present look better north of Birmingham than they do in Kent, Surrey, and Hampshire, where the weather has been even cooler and wetter than with us.

SUSSEX.—As Mr. and Mrs. Renville, an elderly couple, residing at Old Maidlouse Farm, in the quiet village of Bolney, were sitting at supper on Thursday se'nnight, the door was opened by a party of ruffians, six in number, having their faces covered with crape. Two of them immediately seized Mr. Renville, and two others compelled his wife to unlock the drawer where their money was kept, while the remaining pair kept watch. They found about £10 in the house, with which sum they decamped, having first locked the inmates into the parlour, to prevent pursuit. As the alarm had been taken by the East Sussex constabulary to discover the thieves, who it is conjectured live in the parish, but hitherto their attempts have not been successful.

THAKEHAM UNION.—On Tuesday afternoon Henry Hill, relieving officer of the Thakeham Union, was charged before the Steyning bench of magistrates with embezzling various sums of money, amounting to upwards of £500. It appeared from the evidence that, in addition to filling the office of relieving officer, the prisoner acted for several of the churchwardens, overseers, and surveyors of various parishes in the district, and he was a favourite to each of them in various amounts. The prisoner was committed for trial.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Although we are in the midst of the season for out-of-door pleasures, the implacable character of the weather has damped the popular ardour for the healthy exercises of flood and field. Silver Thames, with the little rosy cheek her bosom few and far between, and cricket is a thing to be thought of only by the amphibious. The sort canta fames alone tempts man a-field, and, with mackintosh and mendacium, the hardie lad went took his way to Banstead-downs, as in that which is approaching, he will for Ascot Heath. A glorious tryst, oh, Ascot! time Olympic revels! Let them rail as they please against royal exclusiveness where are there spots in merry England that a monarch should affect, when disposed to take his pleasure on the turf, like the plain of chivalrous Runnymede, or the classic wolds of Windsor. Talking of Runnymede reminds one of the cup for the Derby, on which occasion it gives us pleasure to state, that only one gentleman actually bolted, in the direction, as it was understood, of Ratcliffe "Cross." A good many, indeed, "grinded" considerably, but the rate to which the acorn, particularly if shipped up to their collars. Leaving by-gones and all other departures, however, to their fates, let us look ahead, and tell the race-goer what he may expect in the way of sport during the week at Ascot.

Tuesday will open with the Trial Stakes, for which the entries are to be made on Saturday (this day), by four P.M., either in London, at Weatherby's or at the Grand Stand, with the clerk of the course, at Ascot. The Ascot Handicap, has seventeen left in, of which Vitellius is the best on paper. A good three-year-old, with 5 st. 12 lb. on him, surely "didn't ought" to lose. The Gold Vase has fourteen nominations, the much people gone-by fancy Charles XII.; still, by public running, he can hardly give Hyllus 4 lb.; but this is too professional. The Ascot Derby, with its nine subscribers, will be a very choice field. It would seem to rest between Kinsman and Amorino, the latter kept for it. The St. James's Palace Stakes will be a very poor affair; and why should not Gasper win the 200 sovs. Stakes, with a 5 lb. allowance, if he can live the distance? There will be the Town Plate, and probably a match to wind up the day's amusement.

On Wednesday there will be lots of running (seven races at the least), whereof the most sporting is the Ditch-in Stakes, with thirty-two nominations. As these are weighted from 10 st. to 5 st. 10 lbs. severally, a good deal of speculation attaches to the issue.

Thursday, like Tuesday, is a royal day (unless the weather scare the royalty train away) has also its seven events on the carpet, including the Cup. As this will be a sporting affair among the speculators in gloves and small money, we venture to recommend Ralph as not undeserving their attention.

Friday being a professional day, we have no need to go into its details, which will be sufficiently known to all whom they may concern. To the general racing amateur we may observe, en passant, there are three year-olds to come out at this meeting which it may serve his turn to keep his eye on. For example, in the Buckingham Palace Stakes, Napier (a bit of a fancy with us for the Leger), and some others.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

SUICIDE OF A GENTLEMAN OF FORTUNE.—On Tuesday morning, about eight o'clock, the family of Mr. Goulburn, a gentleman of fortune, residing in property living at No. 25, Torrington-square, was thrown into a state of the most painful excitement in consequence of it having been discovered that he had committed self-destruction by hanging himself in a room near the staircase. He was immediately cut down and a medical gentleman sent for, but life was found to be quite extinct. The unfortunate deceased, who was advanced in years, possessed large landed estates, and had resided in the square many years.

The Golden Lion public house at Bexley Heath was entirely destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning last. Happily no lives were lost. The origin of the fire is UNKNOWN.

FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT.—On Wednesday morning, an alarming accident occurred to Mr. ALEXANDER SIBTROCK, baker, of Wobbern-street, Brickfriars-road. He was out with his cart delivering bread, and took with him a servant girl and child, who sat at the bottom of the cart, and, arriving in the Walworth-road, near the Elephant and Castle, he stopped to serve a customer, giving the reins to the servant. By some accident she let them out of her hand, and they dropped to the horse's heels, which made him start off. Mr. SIBTROCK, who was on the pavement, seized hold of the horse's head to stop it, when he was knocked down by the point of the shaft, and the wheel passed over his body. On his being raised, he was in a state of insensibility. He was taken to a chemist's in the neighbourhood, and afterwards to Guy's Hospital, where his injuries were pronounced to be of such a nature as to leave no hopes of recovery. The horse continued his course along the road till he ran against the high footway, and overturned the cart, throwing the servant and child out, but without injuring them. He was stopped at the turnpike.

A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign-office on Thursday; all the ministers were present.

DEATH OF MR. GOULBURN, JUN.—We regret to state that Mr. Henry Goulburn, eldest son of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, expired on Thursday morning at five o'clock, at the official residence of his father in Downingstreet. Mr. Goulburn was in the 31st year of his age.

THAMES TUNNEL.—Last week 38,478 persons paid toll to pass through the tunnel, and on Sunday alone 17,513 persons.

EPITOME OF NEWS.

It is rumoured that several of the magistrates of the county of Chester, who have been so severely handled by the Secretary of State in his letter relating to the non-dismissal of the Knutsford jailer, have declared their intention of withdrawing their names from the commission of the peace.——The first German Whol Fair this year commenced at Breslau on Wednesday last.——Sir Charles James Napier is to be created a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath, in token of his services at the late battle of Meeance.——The King of Hanover, on his arrival at the Custom-house, on Friday week actually went to his residence in St. James's Palace in a hackney-coach, and slighted at the archway in Cleveland-row, walking from thence to his dwelling.——A meeting of the commissioners for the government of the Pentonville Prison was held at the prison on Saturday last. The commissioners present were the Duke of Richmond, Major Jebb, and Lord John Russell.——It is rumoured in the sporting circles, that Mr. Bowes, M.P., the owner of Cotherstone, the winner of "the Derby," nets somewhere about £30,000 by the result of that race.——The Sardinian Government has just expelled from its territories several persons who were engaged in the late attempt at revolution in the Swiss Canton of Tesino.——A formidable riot took place on Sunday last in the Liverpool workhouse, when the inmates assembled in the quadrangle of the building and commanded their liberty. The ringleaders having been captured, the insurrection was happily quelled.——The annual gathering of the disciples of teetotalism took place on Monday at Hampstead-heath, and, numerically speaking, may be fairly stated to have exceeded any meeting before held in the metropolitan suburbs.——The Lord Advocate of Scotland is to offer himself for the county of Argyll, in the room of Mr. Campbell, of Monzie, who has retired. The Lord Advocate will be elected without opposition.——The revenue of the Customs-house at the port of Liverpool for the month of May 1843 exceeded by £30,000 the amount received in the corresponding month last year.——Mr. Haliburton, one of the judges of Nova Scotia, came in the Hibernia, from Boston, a few days ago, and has since arrived in London. He is better known as the author of the works passing under the name of "Sam Slick."——The Duchess of Orleans, on Tuesday, the 30th ult., being the anniversary of her marriage with the late Prince Royal, visited Dreux, and remained during the greater part of the day in the sepulchral chapel where his body is deposited.——Several corpses of Mediterranean refugees, of inferior quality, have been taken out of bond, and shipped to the Baltic and to Denmark. The price of some was as low as 20s. per quarter.——The question has recently been raised before the Kensington Police Court, whether the owners of Putney-bridge have the power of demanding toll from troops employed in her Majesty's service. The subject has been mooted in consequence of the keepers having, on the 23rd day of May, taken toll for a horse belonging to an officer in the 13th Light Dragoons.——A woman, named Anne Steele, an inmate of one of the alms-houses at Arundel, died a few days since, when, on breaking open her boxes, it was found that she had died possessed of nearly £150 in gold and silver coins.——The Rev. Dr. Booth, from the curacy of Whitchurch, Somerset, has been appointed Vice-Principal of, and Professor of Mathematics in, the Liverpool Collegiate Institution.——Government have contracted with Charles Milner, Esq., for the piece of land near Maidstone for the erection of a new military hospital, which we presume will be commenced forthwith.——Stepney fair, which has been revived on the old site, has been well attended during the holidays. On Monday the crowds were immense, and at one time there were not less than 10,000 persons in the fair and its immediate vicinity. Greenwich was also well attended, notwithstanding the unfavourable state of the weather.——The widow of the late lamented Bishop Heber has again married. Her husband is a French Catholic gentleman.——On the cause list being called before the Vice-Chancellor of England on Wednesday, of the twelve cases down for hearing not one of the parties was prepared to go on, as his Honour rose without doing any business at all. The "dead" list is about to pay his annual visit to the metropolis, having been engaged by Mr. Webster for the Haymarket.——For the disease commonly called the gripes, to which horses are so subject, there has been discovered an infallible remedy, and one that is in the possession of every person; it is merely one spoonful of soot, and one of wheat flour mixed with a pint of cold spring water, given with a horn in the usual manner. This will be found to afford instantaneous relief.——The youth who was supposed to have been killed by the cannon on the head at Waterloo-bridge, on Monday, is still in the hospital, and going on favourably.——The Moniteur Parisien announces the death of Lieut-General Count Alphonse de Colbert, Commandant of the 13th military division.——There are at present in Paris 7,000 gas lights, private and public.——During the month there were consumed in Paris 6558 oxen, 1621 cows, 6,021 calves, and 38,626 sheep; being an increase upon the month of May, 1842, of 226 oxen, 213 cows, and 887 sheep, and a decrease of 802 calves.

There has just been discovered in the ground excavated for the Northern and Eastern railway, between St. Leonard's and Bromley, a girdle of solid gold, wrought to imitate a cord, having a hook at each end. The weight of this object is 342 grammes, and the gold is valued at 880f. It is supposed to belong to the Gaulish period, about Julius Cæsar's time.——Amongst the miscellaneous cargo carried out to Egypt as a present to the Pacha, by the Great Liver pool, was a case of six splendid salmon, caught in the river Tert. They were well packed in ice, and there is little doubt of their arriving at their destination in good condition. As this description of fish is never yet been seen in Egypt, it will indeed be a rarity.——The commission for the health of towns assembled at Gwydyr House, Whitehall, on Thursday, the 1st of June, for the first time, and will continue their sittings on Mondays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.——Mr. Gachard, keeper of the Royal archives at Brussels, and Mr. Hansens, First Clerk of the Home Department, have gone to Spain, by command of King Leopold, for the purpose of examining the archives there, and to procure copies of all important documents which can throw new light upon Belgian history. The Spanish Government having granted all possible facilities, this mission promises highly interesting and important historical results.——The King of Prussia has presented three beautiful vases from the Royal porcelain manufactory at Berlin, to a confectioner at Cologne, as an acknowledgement for a perfect and most accurately-executed model of the cathedral of Cologne, made of sugar.——We are glad to see that means have been adopted by the inhabitants of Southwark, to procure ground for the formation of a park where the people of that district may enjoy healthful recreation.——His Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by a number of his distinguished friends, visited the Napoleon Museum, at the Egyptian Hall, on Wednesday afternoon, and, after a long examination, expressed himself highly gratified with the exhibition.——The sale of the late noble President of the Board of Control's stud of carriages, &c., took place on Wednesday, in the mews at the back of the late noblemen's residence in Belgrave-square. The lots consisted chiefly of his lordship's town and travelling chariots, stanhope, barouche, and other carriages, with his lordship's carriage-horses and hackneys.——The nephew of Denman entered upon his office of Governor of the Queen's Bench prison, vice Chapman, who retires upon a pension. Mr. Chapman resigned the office of marshal as he felt himself unequal to the onerous duties imposed upon him by the new regulations, which, amongst other things, compel the governor to visit the rooms every morning before ten o'clock.——The second exhibition of the West Kent Floral and Horticultural Society took place on Wednesday, at Vanburgh-house, Maize-hill, Greenwich. Several marquees were erected in the ground, and the flowers and vegetables were classified and tastefully arranged within them. The show of flowers was brilliant and diversified, comprising all kinds, both of hot house and open-air plants, at present in bloom.——The salmon fishing in the Tweed continues to improve as the season advances. The grilses having made their appearance, are every day caught in great numbers, and there is reason to believe that the season will be a satisfactory one.——There landed from the steamers on Sunday at Chelsea, 6741; at Putney, 3483; and at Richmond, 4246 passengers.——The poorrate for the town of Manchester, for the present year, is 2s. in the pound, on an assessment of four-fifths of the rack-rent. In 1839, it was only 3s.; in 1840, 2s. 4d.; in 1841, 2s. 4d.; in 1842, 3s.——The "Medical Times" records the case of a molar tooth extracted at Edinburgh, on the 1st ult., without pain or consciousness, during the state of mesmeric sleep.——The Emperor of Russia has taken active measures to build an imperial residence on an extensive scale in the southern part of the Crimea. This was a favourite plan of the late Emperor Alexander, who purchased for that purpose, a short time before his death, a large estate not far from Tangarok, and which is said to be one of the most beautiful and picturesque spots in the empire.

HAMPTON COURT PALACE.

Chilly and uncongenial as the weather of late has been voted by those reared in a drawing-room atmosphere, the Whitsun holidays have not failed to draw thousands from their brick-and-mortar Babylon to the picturesque ruralities of Hampton Court. Regardless of those "skiey influences" which too often mar the English holiday, pleasure-seekers of every grade might be seen, in the past week, betaking themselves to Hampton Court—by steamboat and railway, and, in short, by every variety of carriage which distinguishes this age of locomotion from its predecessors. Amidst all these "conveyances," however, none were more characteristic of the occasion than that which bears the attractive name of "pleasure-van," freighted with gaily-dressed groups of holiday-seekers—the sons and daughters of toil, exchanging the smoke and stifling heat of the factory and workshop, and their black and dingy aspect, for the airiness and, perchance, the sunshine of early summer, and the variety and gushing beauty of leafy June. How delightful, too, to exchange the clank and ceaseless hum of busy London for the minstrelsy of birds and the melody of rural sounds and rural song! and in such innocent recreation hundreds of happy faces tell us how the labour of the past week is forgotten.

Hampton Court is, unquestionably, our most popular holiday resort. Formerly it was an aristocratic and expensive place: the palace could only be in part seen, and then by payment of a fee, and the number of visitors was comparatively few. Now the public are admitted gratuitously; and on a fine Sunday 1000 persons pass through the palace per hour, for the fidgetty housekeeper and her tinkling keys have disappeared, and the doors are really thrown open, to remain so. "A visit to Hampton Court Palace," says William Howitt, "is one of the bravest pleasures that a party of happy friends can promise themselves. Especially it is calculated to charm the thousands of pleasure-seekers from the dense and dusty vastness of London. It lies in a rich country, on the banks of the Thames; there, unmuddled by commerce, but flowing free and pure amidst the greenest meadows, scattered villas, and trees overhanging its clear waters, and adding to its glad aspect the richness of their beauty. From the swelling hills of Esher, Richmond, and St. George, the palace is seen standing aloft amid a sea of woodland foliage, like a little town in its extent. Its ample and delightful gardens, bounded by the splendid masses of its lime-tree avenues; its ancient courts, with all their historic recollections; its accumulated paintings, the Cartoons themselves being part of them—all are thrown open to the leisure and perfect enjoyment of the public. There is no royal palace in England, excepting Windsor, which, after all, is to be compared with it; and this is, as it should be, given up to the use and refreshment of the people." Mr. Howitt then remarks upon this very fit appropriation of public property, and adds, "The tolls at the doors of St. Paul's and the Tower have been relaxed; park after park in the metropolis has been thrown open; and now this charming old Palace of Hampton Court has been made the daily resort of any and of all of the English people who choose to tread the pavements, and disport themselves in the gardens, and gaze on the works of art, which for ages were wont to be accessible only to the royal, the aristocratic, and the ecclesiastical dignitary, and their retainers."

Another visitor, "Felix Summerly," is still more enthusiastic, when he says, "How many and various are these ennobling and exhilarating delights! Nature's works and man's bravest achievements go hand in hand together here. Space bounded by art, which crowds can never rob of solitude! Trees never leafless; verdure and brightness omnipresent! In all the whole world where are there such flower-forests of chestnuts? The gayest blossoms of every season gladdening the eye, and filling the air with fragrance. Beauty of scene near at hand, and stretching as far distant as the sight can reach. The rolling music of waters; the magnificent in architecture; the matchless in painting; and, best of all, the throng of happy faces (the statist tells you they exceed 30,000 a month in the summer), abandoned to mirth, and oblivious of dull care and toil left behind them! Miserable, indeed, the wretch whose sympathies are not touched with some of these.

> "Let any wight (if such a wight there be),
> To whom thy lofty towers unknown remain,
> Direct his steps, fair Hampton Court, to thee,
> And view thy splendid halls; then turn again
> To visit each proud dome by science praised,
> 'For kings the rest,' (he'd say,) 'but thou for gods wert raised.'"

Of the several modes of reaching Hampton Court, the river route is, probably, the pleasantest, though not the most expeditious. To prepare himself for receiving the livelier impression from Hampton Park and Palace, Felix Summerly recommends the visitor to embark when the tide is favourable, on one of the Richmond steam-boats, from the upper side of London-bridge. He maintains that "the cheerful mill-stream dashing and foaming of the water under the paddles is assuredly preferable to the reverberating rattle of the streets, or the close dustiness of the suburban roads; while the ease and rapidity with which we proceed, and the rainbow lightness with which, consequently, the successive arches, from the vast stretch of the Southwark to the contracted span of the Vauxhall, seem to fly over our heads, give to the whole moving scene—especially under the shifting lights of an April or September sky—an airiness of effect, no less exhilarating to the spirits than expanding to the thoughts." Having reached Richmond, the remainder of the journey, by land, lies through a rich and picturesque country. Mr. Jesse, in his "Summer's Day," recommends a drive to Hampton Court, by way of Kensington and Hammersmith, by Marble Hill, Twickenham, Teddington, Bushy Park, and so to the noble palace gates. But the most expeditious route is by "four-penny steamer" to the railway pier, and thence by the South-western line to the Hampton Court station, about two miles eastward of which lies the palace. Let the visitor eschew "the conveyance," and walk thither, through delightful lanes, flanked with beautiful objects for his admiration, while ever and anon he catches a glimpse of the stately object of his journey. Our artist appears to have taken up his sketching station on the Ditton bank of the Thames, just above the débouchement of the mole. This spot is a very favourite resort of the London anglers; but Mr. Hofland, in his excellent "Manual," tells us that Hampton Court has stronger attractions for the antiquary, the architect, and the lover of history, than for the angler; it has, however, a deep, called the water-gallery, 200 yards long, being from the summer-house of the palace to the eastward. It contains barbel, roach, dace, and many fine perch, and may be fished from the shore or in a punt. The river assumes a new character here, after we have passed the deep just mentioned, from being so intersected by numerous islands that it forms narrow channels only. The verdure is exquisite, and the tall elms still continue to rear their lofty heads, and verify Mr. Symond's observation, that "they supply the place of mountains." The palace is a noble pile, but offers more to the eye of an architectural draftsman than to that of the amateur landscape painter. Nevertheless, our artist, by aid of the river and its banks, has presented the palace in a very picturesque point of view, ill adapted as are the long and almost unbroken lines of its south and east fronts to aid this effect. It is true that from this point the parts of Wolsey's palace which still remain are not the most prominent, and we must be content with Wren's less picturesque fronts, built for William III., with the gable of the noble hall of a better period rising above the attic line; but the bright river, the old picturesque tow-barge, and the private garden terraces, "in which Watteau would have rejoiced, as backgrounds for his satin and brocaded dames," all make up a very charming scene. Friend Felix, taking a last look at the southern and eastern fronts of the palace, says:—"Their orange-coloured brick, contrasted with the cooler grey stone ornaments, and the deep sombre yews, make a picture, under all lights, ready for the painter's easel. The sculptures of the Corinthian capitals and other ornaments are still sharp and perfect; the latter, chiselled with great freedom, we judge to be the work of

HOLIDAY GROUP—HAMPTON COURT GARDENS.

THE JESTER.

Grinling Gibbons: Hercules is the subject of the basso-relievi of the eastern pediment."

Our artist has next sketched a holiday group from the gardens, the chief beauty of which, we think, with Felix, to be the appearance of illimitable spaciousness, to be attributed, we consider, to a feature little beautiful under most circumstances, but here essentially so—their flatness. It is a perfect treat of its kind, to throw yourself on the green velvet carpet, under the deep shadowing of the rich-tinted yews, the eye wandering delightfully from one flower-bed to another, each rivalling the other with the brightest of colours; the fragrance of the verbena, and rose, and musk-plant, perfuming the air, and stillness only broken by the hum of an errant bee and the note of a skylark, and music dashing unceasingly from the fountain. It is a sort of Arabian enchantment to one released from the whiz and suffocation of London. Go there on a cloudless Sunday, when, besides all recited before, you may chance to hear the trumpets and clarions of a military band pealing down the aisles of lime-trees, and if your heart is not grateful to God for the wonderful union of glories there, you may make up your mind that you are miserable and soulless. Do not neglect to look at the chubby gold and silver fish in the basin, where the fountain is playing; they are marvellously fat, and you will enjoy the fun of their greedy and cunning contentions for a few crumbs, if you are able to supply them; they all swim forward for their fee the instant the stranger approaches.

Of the collection of pictures, increased by recent additions to some thousand in number, we present the reader with a specimen—one of Holbein's reputed paintings—Will Somers, Jester to Henry VIII., looking through a lattice, half length, life size; it hangs in the Queen's Gallery, and never fails to attract around it a group of visitors. The collection contains no fewer than 33 "Holbeins," including those reputed to be from his pencil.

THE ROYAL CHRISTENING.

THE ROYAL CHRISTENING.

The ceremony of the baptism of her Royal Highness the Infant Princess, second daughter of her Majesty and Prince Albert, took place on Friday week in the Chapel Royal, Buckingham Palace, the details of which we gave in our Saturday's edition, but, as we here present our readers with an engraving of the interesting event, we are induced to give the particulars at greater length. The whole of the royal household were in state. The yeomen of the guard lined the grand hall and staircase, commanded by the exon in waiting, Captain Sadler. A guard of honour of the Grenadier Guards, with the band of that regiment, was on duty on the palace lawn, and received the royal family with the usual military honours. The noble and illustrious visitors invited to the solemnity began to arrive at Buckingham Palace about half-past eleven o'clock. The French Ambassador, the Hanoverian, Belgian, and Wurtemberg Ministers appeared in their respective diplomatic uniforms. The Duke of Wellington wore his uniform as Commander-in-Chief, with the collar and star of the Order of the Garter, and the ensigns of the Golden Fleece. The Duke of Buccleuch was habited in his splendid uniform as Captain of the Royal Scottish Archers, and wore the collar of the Garter. Sir Robert Peel, Lord Wharncliffe, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Stanley, Sir James Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Earl of Ripon, Sir Edward Knatchbull, and Mr. Gladstone, appeared in the full dress official costume. Sir George Murray wore his uniform as Master-General of the Ordnance, with his insignia as Knight Grand Cross of the Bath. The Earl of Rosslyn wore his costume as Master of the Buck-hounds, The Lord Steward, the Lord Chamberlain, and the officers of their respective departments, appeared in the full-dress household costume. The different members of the royal family came in state, and immediately on their arrival were conducted to the Queen and Prince Albert. Her Majesty wore her magnificent diamond diadem, with diamond necklace and earrings, and the riband, star, and armlet of the most noble order of the Garter. His Royal Highness Prince Albert wore his uniform as field marshal, with the collars and stars of the most noble order of the Garter, of the most ancient order of the Thistle, and of the most hon. military order of the Bath.

The Cabinet Ministers and other visitors were conducted at 1 o'clock to the seats provided for them in the Chapel Royal; the Duke of Wellington and some of the members of the diplomatic corps being ushered to the north side of the Chapel, and Sir Robert Peel and other Cabinet Ministers being conducted to the opposite side. The altar of the Chapel was decorated with some very fine specimens of gold communion plate, and was covered with crimson velvet, richly trimmed and ornamented with deep gold lace. Sir George Smart presided at the organ. The Queen's closet was occupied by Her Majesty's private band, under the direction of Mr. Anderson; also by twelve gentlemen of the Chapels Royal and ten of the young gentlemen of the Chapel. The font of silver gilt was the same that was used at the christening of Her Royal Highness the Princess Royal. It was placed on a pedestal in front of the altar and was filled with water brought from the river Jordan. A very large painting was hung at the back of the altar.

The Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Norwich (Clerk of the Closet), with the Dean of Carlisle, Rector of the pariah of Saint George, Hanover-square, the Honourable and Reverend Charles Leslie Courtenay (Domestic Chaplain to her Majesty), the Archdeacon Wilberforce and Lord Wriothesley Russell, Canons of Windsor (Chaplains to his Royal Highness Prince Albert), assembled in the room adjoining the old dining-room.

As soon as the visitors had taken their seats, the procession of the sponsors for her Royal Highness the infant Princess was formed. Her Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, and other royal personages, having taken their seats, the great officers of the household, the Groom of the Stole to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, with the Vice-Chamberlain, and the Lord and Groom in Waiting to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, took their places near the Queen and his Royal Highness. The Treasurer and the Comptroller of the Household took their places behind the sponsors. Others of the household, with the attendants forming the suites of the members of the Royal Family and illustrious visitors, arranged themselves on either side of the chapel. A chorale was then performed, followed by a hymn, "I will give thanks" (Palestrina). At the conclusion of the hymn her Royal Highness the infant Princess was conducted by the Lord Chamberlain, and the Groom of the Stole to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, into the chapel; her Royal Highness being carried by the head nurse, and attended by the Dowager Lady Lyttelton. The dress of her Royal Highness the infant Princess was a robe of Honiton lace over white silk made at Spitalfields, and cap to correspond; the whole dress of British manufacture.

His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, standing in front of the altar, commenced the baptismal service, the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of London standing on either side of the altar, the Bishop of Norwich being near the former prelate; the sponsors, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duchess of Kent, the Princess Sophia Matilda, and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, standing near the font on the north side, opposite to her Majesty and Prince Albert. Their Royal Highnesses made the customary responses. When the archbishop came to that part of the service for naming the Princess, the Princess Sophia Matilda and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz named her Royal Highness "Alice Maud Mary." The baptismal service was concluded, and her Royal Highness the Princess Alice was re-conducted from the chapel. The Hallelujah Chorus from the "Mount of Olives" (Beethoven) was then performed with admirable effect. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, the royal sponsors, and the other illustrious visiters, left the chapel and returned to the Queen's apartments. The Queen and royal family afterwards passed up the grand staircase to the Throne-room. The rest of the company shortly followed.

At two o'clock the whole of the illustrious party entered the picture gallery, where a grand collation was given in honour of the event. This magnificent apartment contained a long table placed in the middle of the gallery, and extending nearly its entire length. This table exhibited a great number of the finest centre pieces of gold plate in the royal collection. At each end of the table were sideboards of gold plate enclosed in pilasters of white and gold, supporting an architrave, the mouldings carved and gilt. The "Shield of Achilles" was the principal ornament of one sideboard, and a large shield representing "Bacchus and Ariadne" formed the corresponding ornament of the opposite sideboard. Both were filled with shields, salvers, sconces, vases, tankards, and cups, selected from the numerous articles in the royal treasury. Several of the articles displayed on the occasion, such as the antique urn of the Spanish Armada, are objects of historical interest, and many pieces were remarkable for the beauty and excellence of their designs and workmanship, and almost all the cups are beautifully and elaborately carved and enriched. The articles were most tastefully grouped, and were relieved by a background of crimson. The sides of both sideboards were adorned with choice plants and flowers reaching the full height; and at the north end of the gallery, the space between the architrave at the top and the elliptic arch of the gallery was entirely filled with flowers and plants. The walls of the gallery were covered with the choicest and most valuable collection of pictures; it was richly carpeted, and presented a scene of the greatest magnificence and splendour.

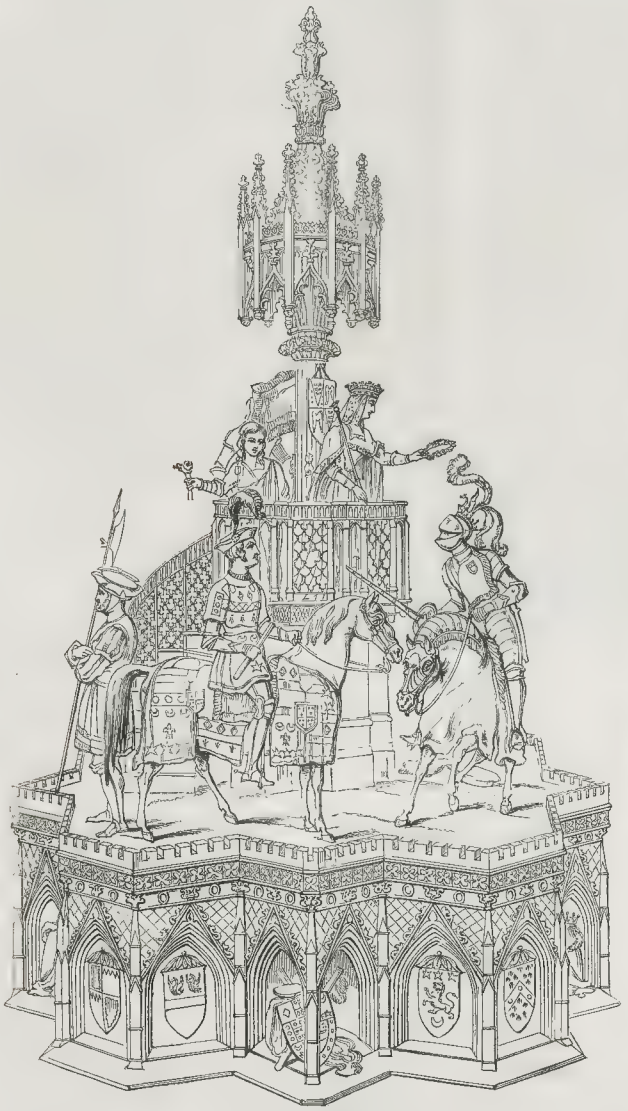
The company, having entered the gallery, took their respective seats, and partook of the collation. The Earl of Liverpool, Lord Steward of her Majesty's Household, gave as the first toast, "Her Royal Highness the Princess Alice Maud Mary." The band of the Scots Fusilier Guards, who were stationed in an anti-chamber, played "Rule Britannia." The Lord Steward gave as the next toast, "Her Majesty Queen Adelaide." The band performed her Majesty's own march. The Lord Steward gave as the third toast, "The Queen." The band played, "God save the Queen." The Lord Steward gave as the next toast, "His Royal Highness Prince Albert." The band played, "The Coburg March." At three o'clock her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, the royal family, and the distinguished guests, quitted the gallery and entered the suite of drawing-rooms. Her Majesty the Queen Dowager left the Palace, attended by her suite, at half-past three o'clock; her Majesty was conducted to her carriage by his Royal Highness Prince Albert. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the other members of the royal family, and the Crown Prince of Wurtemburg left immediately afterwards. The remainder of the company also took their departure.



THE EGLINTOUN TESTIMONIAL.

This magnificent group of chivalric commemoration which has just been executed in silver by Messrs. Garrard, of the Haymarket, is about to be presented to the Earl of Eglintoun, in testimonial of the taste and liberality displayed by his Lordship in the splendid tournament at Eglintoun Castle in 1839. The composition is about four feet in height, and includes an equestrian group, showing the presentation of a victor-knight to the Queen of Beauty, by the Knight Marshal. The victor-knight appears in full armour, and his horse fully caparisoned, the housings bearing the arms of the Earl of Eglintoun, whilst the Knight Marshal is shown in an emblazoned surcoat, his horse armed, and upon his caparisonings are the arms of Sir Charles Lambe, Bart. The Queen of Beauty is attended by her two pages and her maid of honour, a dismounted squire in half-armour standing by his horse, a halberdier, dogs, &c. The whole is grouped on a Gothic base, and is surmounted by a staircase and Gothic canopy, under which stands the Queen of Beauty in the act of rewarding the victor-knight: on the column of the canopy are suspended the arms of Lady Seymour, the Queen of Beauty. Around the base are the arms of the Earl of Eglintoun, as Lord of the Tournament, and victor-knight; those of the Marquis of Londonderry, as King of the Tournament; Lord Saltoun, as Judge of Peace; Sir Charles Lambe, Bart., as Knight Marshal; each with their appropriate emblems; besides twelve coats of arms of the knights combatant engaged at the tournament. The weight of this superb work of art is 1600 ounces, and its cost, about 2000 guineas, has been defrayed by the subscriptions of the nobility and gentry. The figures in the composition have been designed by Cotterill; the architectural portion by Sibron.

THE SETTLING DAY.

The race is run—the prize is won—
And steeds and men are far away;
For human sins and human bets
There comes, alas! a settling day;
For men with high and pompous mien,
Who largely bet, with nought to pay,
For baseless pride and futile hope,
A settler is the settling day.

But on that day, some are away,
Some of their winnings lackers,
Some will not forward come to pay,
Because they have been backers.
Some hide, but not in Hyde-park—then
Victims of hope that flatters all—
Some dressed in rich and flaunting green,
Now shrink to come to tatters all.

Oh Mr. R——! oh Mr. R——!
Blest in thy wits are thou;
Oh Manchester, it ever dull,
Thy genius droops not now.
For "heads I win, and harps you lose,"
A noble game to play is;
'Tis sweet to get one's winnings in,
But pitiful to pay is.

Oh, Mr. —— thou couldst not come,
For thou wert indisposed;
Why shouldst thou come, sweet Mr. ——
By fell disease inclosed.
A "galloping" disease they say
Some time since o'er thee fell,
Some say 'twill run away with thee,
Some think thou'lt soon get well.

Peers, baronets, adjust their bets,
Some in new schemes embark,
Some very much admire the notes,
But do not like the lark.
Some by small entries in their books
Anticipate the Ledger,
The knowing one who takes "the field,"
Contrives to be a hedger.

"Now four to one on Cotherstone."
"I'll bet," some one replies;
"The bet I'll double," says my Lord,
"'Tis done," the other cries.
"The money post," a friend suggests,
And if you don't you'll rue,"
For he's another Mr. R——
That's following his cue.

Oh, where are they—oh, where are they—
The gay deceivers gone,
Who staked their many hundred pounds,
And will not render one?
That "winner" to a large amount,
Affecting apathy;
Good man! he lingers 'mid the crowd,
His better he can't see!

The settling day—the settling day—
The anxious hour is o'er;
Some have gained cash, some have gained sense
Who ne'er had sense before!
A Scott is backed for Ascott race,
His "lot" is for the Ledger;
Abstain from bets—of their good healths
At home remain a pledger!

THE FASHIONS.

Paris, Rue Chaussée d'Antin, June 2.

Mon cher Monsieur, If we may judge of the fashions here by what is seen at this moment in the public streets and the ateliers of our leading artistes, we may conclude that straw bonnets, always excepting fancy articles of that class, are almost entirely abandoned. On the other hand, those of sewn pailles de riz, trimmed with a branch of citron, gracefully mingled with Bengal roses, have been extremely successful, and are rather frequently to be met with amongst our aristocratic fashionables; and the same may be said of hats of deep blue tissue, trimmed with a bouquet of feathers of the same shade. The crêpe hats of Lucy Hocquet are remarkably small, and almost always white, though I have seen two or three of apple-green crêpe, trimmed with a Bengal rose, a fancy which confers all the distinctive attributes of the queen of flowers, with, alas! its ephemeral existence. In a former letter I spoke to you of the Penelope hat. I assure you that the success of this creation has even surpassed the hopes of its inventor, and is to be seen everywhere; indeed, there are few elegant women who have not one, or a modification of the same fashion. Amongst other elegant creations to which my attention has been called, I cannot resist citing two or three that have struck me, as well by the justness of their taste as the extreme elegance of their tout ensemble. The first I shall mention is a crêpe hat, trimmed with plaid ribbons of a green and white check, and with marabout feathers of a green shade. Another is a hat of blue poult de soie, trimmed with little biais of crêpe laid upon the passe, and with a half-garland of Pompadour roses. I shall pass over a hat of white crêpe, with a half coronet of yellow roses and Parma violets, and come at once to a most superb invention in the shape of a delicious hat of rose poult de soie, trimmed with four rows of English point lace laid flat upon the passe, and separated from each other by two little biais in crêpe, the first row of lace forming the edge of the passe; a long white plume, attached by a knot of taffety ribbon, falls down on one side. I assure you this bonnet was superb. I informed you in my last letter that mantelets had again become the fashion here. Perhaps a description of two or three that I have had an opportunity of observing would give you the best idea of the sort of thing now worn. Let me then mention a mantelet of embroidered muslin, lined with green taffety, and trimmed around its whole circumference with a wide band of lace, and also another in blue mohair, rounded behind, and scalloped at the height of the arm, falling down in the front in rounded ends, and carried up to the neck, where it is fastened coquetly. This mantelet is trimmed completely round it by a little piped frilling, surmounted by a similar ornament in passementerie, the same trimming forming the fall-back round the neck. I have now under my eyes an exceedingly beautiful invention of this sort in another description of material; it is a paletot in embroidered tartan, having two rounds of pelerines in front, each of them trimmed with a double row of valenciennes, and a third pelerine formed of five rows of valenciennes, which terminates at a point in front, at the height of the waist. This paletot is lined with green taffety, and is closed in front by bows of ribbon of the same colour.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD.—Wednesday last being the first day of Act Term, a congregation was holden for granting degrees, &c., when the following were conferred:—Bachelors in Divinity: The Rev. W. A. Strangr, Pembroke College; Rev. T. Briscoe, Queen's College. Masters of Arts: Rev. H. Brancker, Wadham College; Rev. D. D. Guille, Pembroke College; R. F. Smith, Pembroke College; Rev. B. Price, Pembroke College; Rev. J. Hannah, Lincoln College; Rev. H. G. Bunsen, Oriel College; G. A. Ward, Christ Church College; Rev. J. Lomas, Worcester College; J. B. Bostock, Brasenose College; B. Chevallier, Brasenose College; C. S. Hawkins, Magdalen Hall; Rev. J. Rigg, New Inn Hall; G. H. Messiter, Wadham College; W. O. Maclaine, Wadham College; Rev. R. Congreve, Wadham College; Rev. W. H. Chepmell, Jesus College; Rev. H. Caparn, Magdalen College; W. White, Christ Church College. Bachelors of Arts: C. Tomlinson, Trinity College; T. G. Nicholas, Wadham College; W. S. Thorpe, Wadham College; G. S. Hookey, Wadham College; G. Harper, Pembroke College; G. Richards, Pembroke College; J. W. Morrice, Exeter College; H. W. G. Sperling, Oriel College; N. C. Charrington, Oriel College; J. L. S. Lumsdaine, Oriel College; T. Renwick, Christ Church; J. Shepard, Queen's College; F. B. Collings, Queen's College; A. A. Seaton, Queen's College; T. H. Smith, Queen's College; J. Comins, Queen's College; C. S. Peel, Worcester College; C. A. Johnson, Brasenose College; W. H. Caparn, Brasenose College; Rev. J. Booth, Brasenose College; C. Cardwell, Magdalen Hall; J. D. Merewether, St. Edmund Hall; R. S. Holt, Corpus Christi College; T. Lloyd, Jesus College; H. Stapylton, University College; J. Alexander, Christ Church; Lord H. Lennox, Christ Church; H. Wright, Christ Church; C. R. Conybeare, Christ Church; T. R. Bennett, Christ Church; G. W. Watson, Mert.-n College.

His Grace the Archbishop of York has left town for Bishopthorpe, the archiepiscopal palace in Yorkshire, the ecclesiastical duties of the venerable archbishop calling him from town for a few weeks.

The Earl of Dartmouth and the Bishop of Lichfield have respectively presented an additional donation of £50 to aid to the fund for the restoration of St. Mary's Church, Stafford, one of the most interesting ecclesiastical edifices in the country.

The Lord Bishop of Winchester presided at a public meeting held at the Horns, Kennington, on Wednesday, in support of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel.

CONFIRMATIONS.—The Bishop of London intends resuming his course of confirmations on Monday next, on which day he will attend at Hill-ngton and Beckmansworth. During the same week his lordship will hold confirmations at St. Alba 's, Chipping Barnet, Chesh.unt, Ware, Barkway, and Edmonton.

FIRE IN A LODGING HOUSE.—On the same morning a fire broke out in the house of a man named Davies, Leg-aley, Long-acre, by which several poor individuals were for a time placed in great danger. The house is generally occupied by poor individuals as a night's shelter, where beds may be obtained for threepence, but under very good order and regularity. A man and his wife were the last that took up their abode about two o'clock in the morning; and when all had gone to sleep in the room, the man took a pipe from his pocket, and having filled it with tobacco, commenced smoking, when he fell asleep. Shortly after he and his companion were aroused by the bed clothes burning under them. An alarm was raised, and speedily the engines and firemen from Chandos-street arrived; but before they were was extinguished nearly all the bedding, &c. of the room was destroyed.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

On Saturday last a new danseuse, named Donna Lolah Montez, appeared, created a most novel and delightful sensation, and—has not been heard of since. What this is owing to we cannot presume to say. She was decidedly successful; but perhaps the veterans of what may be called classical dance, have set their faces against national, just in the same fashion as an exclusive devotionalist to the Italian Opera would turn away with disgust from a melody of Ireland or Scotland—the most distinguished cradles of true melody in the world. Be this as it may, we cannot but regret the disgrace of the beautiful Senorita—" a moment bright, then (it?) gone for ever."

On Tuesday "Semiramide" was given in most magnificent style; the heroine by Grisi, Arsace by Brambilla, Assur by Formasari, and the inimitable Orze made good by Lablache, as is usual, by what has been ennoblin.g artiste; we say ennobling, because there is no part, however insignificant in itself, which Lablache cannot render prominent and interesting, while, on the other hand, there is none of such great excellence or perfection as does not receive from his treatment a higher polish and grace. It would be vain to inquire what or which is Lablache's master-performance—everything he does is his best, as Johnson almost said of Goldsmith. The celebrated duetto "Giornol d'Orrore" was cleverly sung, but Brambilla, with all her art, cannot overcome some natural defects; and a treat it would be to hear Grisi and Mrs Alfred Shaw together in this beautiful opera!

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The sixth concert of this society took place on Monday evening last, and was one of the most interesting of the series. Good taste and liberality are now presiding over this establishment, and the consequence is that tout va bien. The orchestra on the occasion (led by Mr. T. Cooke) was more than usually effective; the glorious C minor symphony of Beethoven was performed in most admirable style. The symphony by Haydn, which opened the concert, fell flat upon modern ears: ingenious and occasionally sportive as it is, the instrumental music of this otherwise great man must qual octore the mighty monsters of imagination that Beethoven and a few followers (longo intervallo) have conjured up. Haydn's own quaint expressive words were "All my strength is gone—old and weak am I," but in the very juvenility of that strength he could not have competed with the sinewy Beethoven. Haydn's turn of mind was more for the graceful than the sublime, in fact (passing by a quibbling antropo) there is nothing in his greatest work, "The Creation," that approximates to that high feeling; the chorus, "The Heavens are telling," is a very effective structure, but it lacks the solemn grandeur of a Handelian pile!

Mr. Sterndale Bennett's concert, "Stick," is not equal to Weber's, but contains some good intentions, though not worked out, together with many incertitudes or indecisions or design that lead the intelligent hearer into a multiplicity of mistakes, making him anticipate conclusions which the composer himself only dreamed about. What song is they was played very neatly and expressively by the author. Miss Dolby and Mdlle. Pacini were very charming vocalists, but the all-absorbing interest of the night was Camillo Sivori, who had the gratification of having all, and more than we said of him last week ratified by the universal and tumultuous applause of the most unerring dilettanti in Europe. On this occasion he was no unitoned; he followlower; he stood alone on his own solid pretensions, and, as Johnson said of Milton, he is now only not the greatest because he has not been the first! The music which Sivori composes, not dovetails, is beautiful and original, and is a lesson to mere digitalists that the whole of their art is not always to be found at their fingers' ends. The ensuing concerts promise novelties of the most interesting nature, the presence of the great Spohr to wit, &c.

HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS.—HANDEL'S MESSIAH.

On Wednesday evening this "marvellous work" was performed at the Hanover-square Rooms, for the benefit of the Royal Society of Musicians, under the immediate patronage of the royal and noble directors of the Concerts of Ancient Music. The vocalists were Miss Clara Novello, Miss Birch, Mr. A. Shaw, Miss Rainforth, Miss Marshall, Miss M. B. Hawes; Messrs. Manvers, Machin, and Phillips. Nothing could have been more beautifully executed than the portions allotted to the fair vocalists, but candour withholds our highest praise from the gentlemen, with the exception of Mr. Manvers, who, at a short notice, undertook the tenor parts for which Mr. Pearsall (absent through indisposition), was announced, and acquitted himself with great credit. Mr. F. Cramer led the band, Sir H. R. Bishop conducted, and Mr. Lucas was the organ obligato. The band and chorus were those usually engaged at the Ancient Concerts; and it is but just to state that the cause being for a brotherly charity, their services, as well as those of the principals, were gratuitous. There were upwards of 600 persons present.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.—Mr. Macready relinquishes the direction of this theatre at the close of the present season.

STRAND THEATRE.—The Strand Theatre has been taken by Mr. Maywood, an actor whose excellent delineations of Scotch character, both at Drury-lane and the Haymarket are well known.

MR. MACREADY.—It is rumoured that the lessee of Drury-lane contemplates, shortly after the close of the season, a trip to the United States. The name of Mr. James Wallack, we know not how truly, has been mentioned as a candidate for the management about to be relinquished, after ten years, by Mr. Macready.

Mr. Webster, of the Haymarket Theatre, has offered a prize of £500 certain, with contingent advantages, for the best modern comedy illustrative of British manners. The scheme is novel, and the result will be looked for with interest.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

THE QUEEN V. FEARGUS O'CONNOR AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT.

In this case the Court on Wednesday morning gave judgment on the rule obtained last term, for an arrest of judgment on Mr. Feargus O'Connor and a number of other defendants who had been found guilty at the late Special Commissions in the North. It appeared that Mr. O'Connor and others were found guilty on the fifth count of the indictment only, and an objection was taken to that count, on the ground that there was no distinct place stated where the offences were committed by the defendants—in fact, that there was no venue legally set forth. The Court held that this objection was fatal to the indictment as regarded Mr. O'Connor and the others who had only been convicted on the fifth count. The "real question" is that they will not be brought up for judgment. It amounts to an acquittal. There are some of the defendants found guilty on the fourth count of the indictment, but the validity of that count has not yet been decided.

In the Bail Court, on Saturday, the case of the Proprietors of Drury-lane Theatre v. Chapman (the keeper of the refreshment saloon) was brought to a close with the following award:—That the defendant had, under a mistaking; that the alterations made by Mr. Macready were made without the authority of the proprietors; that the defendant's profits had been diminished thereby; and the jury had therefore awarded the plaintiffs £300, instead of £450, the amount claimed." Mr. Macready was examined as a witness to the case in the course of the afternoon. He said that before he had made the negotiation excluding women of improper character, he lady could go to the theatre without being accompanied by a gentleman; but now a lady could go and take her child, and did so. This part of his evidence was followed by a burst of applause.

POLICE.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—Michael Nowak, a Polish refugee, appeared to answer a charge of assault committed by him upon Lord Dudley Stuart, the vice-president of the Polish Literary Institution. On Friday the complainant had slept out of a cab in Duke-street, St. James's, when he was attacked in the passage of the institution by the prisoner with a stick, with which he inflicted several blows on him, till it was wrested from his hand by the cab driver. The man then struck him a blow on the breast, and the further violence was only prevented by the interference of a policeman. The defendant stated that he was in great distress, and that he had attacked Lord Dudley Stuart on the ground, that, as chairman of the Polish fund, he had improperly held relief from him.—Lord Dudley Stuart said that the defendant was at one time on the list of distressed Poles, but he had committed the mistake for a sum of money. Since that period he had been a party to acts of felony, and sentenced to seven years' transportation, but for good conduct had been discharged from the hulks at the expiration of four years. So indifferent a character could not, of course, be countenanced by the association, who had refused him all further aid.—Lieut. Charles Sa.lczewski, the secretary of the association, said that the prisoner was under the deepest obligation to his lordship for former kindness. The defendant had belonged to a small section of Poles whom the respectable Poles had requested to be suspended or expelled from the society. The magistrate made remarks on the opprobrious character of the defendant, and the disgraceful nature of the attack, and sentenced him to pay a fine of £5, or two months' hard labour. A fine was then conveyed away in the van.

MARYLEBONE.—Another of these "gentry" was held to bail for threatening to do Lord Dudley Stuart some grievous bodily harm.

MARYLEBONE.—In the case of Mr. Stratford, who committed an assault on Mr. Chisholm, the surgeon, in Baker-street, Mr. Chambers, on behalf of the accused, made an apology, and the prisoner was discharged.

Robert Henry Wain, charged with having robbed his employers, Messrs. Druce and Co., furniture dealers, Baker, Baker-street, to a considerable amount, was committed for trial from that locality.

QUEEN SQUARE.—In the case of the robbery at the late Lord Fitzgerald's, the prisoners were, on Wednesday last, fully committed for trial.

The four men, Watkins, Hill, Williams, and Thompson, who have already been examined at Union Hall on the charges of plundering the houses of licensed victuallers of money, have been again remanded bert's beautiful volume on needlework; but, geometrical as were their pincushions, it were mathematically impossible for us to describe the infinite variety. The counters were quickly cleared of their tasteful wares, and as quickly supplied, in comprehensive phrase, "by the cart-load;" and the result has been—aided by the admission-money of one shilling each person—a profit of £1000 to the funds of the "Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Benevolent Society." The Fair was continued on Friday, and was proportionally profitable.

FANCY FAIR—PAINTED HALL, GREENWICH HOSPITAL.

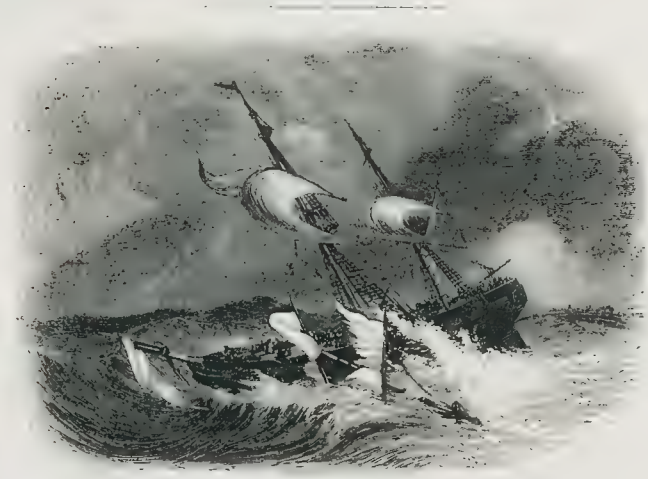
Public attention has of late been so urgently called to the many sufferings entailed by shipwreck, in consequence of the recent severe and ruinous instances of loss of life and property, that our readers will, we are convinced, feel interested in a brief account of the "Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Benevolent Society," which has done much towards mitigating the miseries which attended upon the wrecks that took place in the early part of the current year. This excellent institution originated in a letter addressed by John Rye, Esq., of Bath, to Sir Jahleel Brenton, then Deputy-Governor of Greenwich Hospital; in consequence of which Sir Jahleel induced Vice-Admiral the Right Hon Sir George Cockburn to preside at a public meeting in February 1839, when the society was formed. Sir George was elected president, and Capt. E. P. Brenton undertook to act as honorary secretary. The objects of the institution are to relieve the widows and orphans of fishermen and of mariners, members of the society, who lose their lives by storms; likewise to render aid in board, lodging, clothing, and a passage home, to such mariners, soldiers, and other poor persons who suffer shipwreck upon the coasts of the United Kingdom. The committee soon succeeded in obtaining honorary agents at the various seaport and inland towns in the United Kingdom, and at the present time the charity is represented in 462 places; and the following is the number of persons relieved to 31st December last:—Widows, 331; orphans, 1215; aged parents, 203; shipwrecked persons, 2991; fishermen, heads of families, left destitute from storms, 438—total, 5178. The society long since obtained the patronage of the Queen Dowager, the Duchess of Gloucester, and the Dukes of Sussex and Cambridge. When the King of Prussia was on a visit to this country, his Majesty, unasked, presented a handsome donation to the society, and subsequently became one of the vice-patrons. Very recently, too, Prince Albert has condescended to become vice-patron of the society, and has also made a liberal contribution.

Nothing but the most zealous co-operation on the part of the public can enable its managers to alleviate so large an amount of misery as the shipwrecks upon this coast occasion. The small subscription asked by the charity is only half-a-crown, and we should hope that those who have the means will not refuse so small a sum for so great an object.



SHIPWRECK OF THE GREAT BRITAIN.

The annexed engraving represents the wreck of the splendid packet-ship, Great Britain, Captain Shaxsin master, which has been before noticed in this paper, and which took place some time ago on her outward passage to New York, when the vessel and cargo were entirely lost. She was frigate-rigged, of 404 tons burthen, and was built at Quebec in the year 1839. The preservation of her crew and passengers was truly miraculous, as will be observed in the particulars subjoined—a narrative written by Captain Shaxsin to the owners of the ill-fated vessel:—

Painful as my task now is, in my writing the present, it must be communicated, and, under the distressing events, my heart is lifted up with thankfulness that my life and those of my people, sufferers with me, have been spared. The Great Britain is no more—her career has been short and trying. After leaving the Channel we proceeded to the westward, where we encountered a succession of gales, but without any bad result until the 5th of March. We were then in latitude 47.20, and longitude 34.40, and experienced one of those terrific hurricanes which sweep destruction in its ravages. It commenced at three o'clock in the morning, and continued without intermission until the 28th, with an awful sea. The ship fought nobly against the storm until the morning of the 27th, when the foremast was carried away, it breaking off 18 inches above the deck. She had previously laboured hard, but made little or no water—not more in four hours than we could have pumped out in five minutes at one pump. We were now a complete wreck, the darkness of the morning and the fury of the hurricane preventing our getting at it to cut away anything. Sea after sea washed over us in rapid succession, sweeping everything off the deck, and the hurricane preventing almost all communication with the crew without bawling as loud as we possibly could. The surging of the ship was truly frightful: the pumps were now constantly going. At 8 A.M. a sea again struck the vessel forward, and turned the cutwater fore and aft on the left or larboard side, tearing with it the main stem down to six or eight feet under water. The leaks now increased, the water rushing in through the bows like a river, the wood-ends laying all open. After considerable difficulty we got a sail and threw it over the bows, filled with oakum and ends of rope, which eased the rush there, and the carpenter cut the ceiling where it was to be got at inside, forcing oakum outward any where, but the water had gained in sight under the forecastle deck, and the ship settled well in the water. Nothing now appeared before us but death—we toiled at the pumps, but three of the crew gave up to despair, and could not by threats or entreaties be brought to exert themselves. The cries of the women and children, of whom you know there were many, sometimes fell on our ear, but this I need not describe. Towards the afternoon the gale abated, and the sea fell very much. Our long-boat was left uninjured. The crew rushed into her and all resistance was in vain. I threatened to disable her if more than half left the pumps to get her ready for the last extremity. She was easily got across the deck, and I put 1 cwt. of pork, a box of bread, compass, my sextant and quadrant, and a sail in her, in short, everything I thought necessary to keep such a number from starvation for a certain time. All being in her, nothing would satisfy the crew but to launch her; I endeavoured to persist against it; but the pumps were left, and in an instant she floated over the ship's deck. The next moment she filled, and all would have gone to the bottom but for the pieces of wreck hanging round about the vessel, which they laid hold of, and held on until extricated by myself and others. One seaman, however, named Webb, sunk, and was never seen afterwards. During the whole of that night, the following day, the 28th, 29th, and part of the 30th, the horrors we endured were dreadful. We were all worn out through excessive exertions at the pumps, for that was our only means of preservation. But a appeared on all the seamen's legs and arms, and they were benumbed by being continually burned in water, and were exhausted for want of food. On the evening of the 29th violent gales again commenced, with almost equal severity as the former; the only sail left was shivered to atoms, the sea boarded us aboft, washed away the binnacle and compasses, broke the wheel, and split the port-head. I cannot go further to describe the wreck, my heart sickens. These last scenes scarcely excited a feeling; my heart was bound to exertion, and if all failed then death was certain, and to meet that event the most calmly appeared to me the only relief to our sufferings. Daylight, 30th—Nothing in sight; noon the same; at two P.M. a sail crossing right towards us; at four, close to us under close-reefed topsails. After a great deal of manœuvring we got a buoy from them, and two of their crew attached a line to their boats. They returned to their ship, and we hauled the empty boat back to the wreck. I must tell you that only two at a time and two to row could go. The first trip nearly closed all—the sailors, so frightened and anxious to get on board of the vessel, nearly filled the boat, and the mate and the seamen declared, if I did not take charge of the boat to conduct her, they would not return again. I was obliged to comply, and after three trips, those whom I intrusted for rowing became tired out. The vessels were nearly a mile apart, and only eight taken off. Night came on very dark, and a light sea. Drew lots for other two to row the boat. I had yet fourteen souls to take off, and seven of them were small children. Two trips I made, three of them each time. The third, four children and mother, the youngest child only 14 months old, which I placed in a pocket, and safely brought to the ship, and lastly, at 11 o'clock, I brought off the father and three boys; all of them, thank God, were saved. The ship proved to be the Philadelphia, bound to Boston, to which place we were conveyed, the utmost kindness being shown to us by those on board. I have no doubt the Great Britain foundered soon after we left her. None of the passengers or myself were able to save any property whatsoever—all was lost. The ship and cargo were insured to the extent of £25,000.

ROYAL COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS.—Whitehall, 26th May, 1843.—Her Majesty's Commissioners hereby give notice:—1. That whereas various statues in bronze and in marble, of British Sovereigns and illustrious personages, will be required for the decoration of the New Palace at Westminster, artists are invited to send models to be exhibited, for the purpose of assisting the Commissioners in the selection of sculptors to be employed. 2. The models are to be sent in the course of the first week in June 1844, to a place of exhibition hereafter to be appointed. 3. The specimen, or specimens not exceeding two in number, to be sent by each artist, may be either prepared for the occasion, or selected from works already executed by him within five years prior to the date of this notice. 4. The works may be ideal or portrait statues, or groups, but not reliefs. The subjects are left to the choice of the artists. The materials are to be such as are commonly used for models and casts. The dimensions are to be on the scale of an erect human figure not less than three nor more than six feet. 5. The invitation to send works for the proposed exhibition is confined to British artists, including foreigners who may have resided ten years or upwards in the United Kingdom. 6. Artists who propose to exhibit are required to signify their intention to the Secretary on or before the 15th of March, 1844. By command of the Commissioners, C. L. Eastlake, Secretary.

CHESS.

ERROR IN PROBLEM No. 24.—The White King should be placed on the King's Rook 3rd instead of Q R 3rd. The solution will be found quite correct.

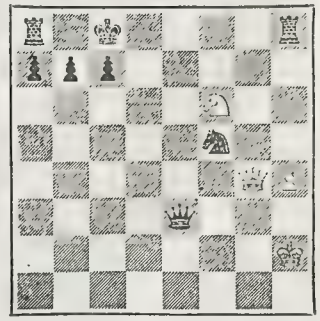
Solution to problem No. 26.

WHITE.	BLACK.
Q to Q Kt 8th ch	K to Q R 3rd (best)
Q to Q 6th ch	K to R 4th (best)
Q to Q R 3rd ch	K moves
Q to Q B 5th ch	K to Q Kt 2nd (best)
Q to Q B 7th ch	K to R 3rd
Q to Q B 6th ch	K to R 4th
B to Q B 7th ch	K to R 5th (best)
Q to R 6th ch	K moves
Q to R 3rd ch	K moves
Q to Q B 5th checkmate.

PROBLEM, No. 27.

White to move, and mate in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

The solution in our next.

THE CONVENT OF ST. BERNARD AND THE AVALANCHES.

The present season is that in which travelling in the Alps is attended with most danger. In the depths of winter—the months of December, January, and February, for instance—with which we commonly associate our ideas of peril in traversing the Swiss passes, there is less of real and sudden catastrophe than in the spring, although the snow storms are in violence and duration far beyond what we have any notion of in England. Yet this advent may be generally foretold, at all events in sufficient time to gain some of the excellent "refuges" with which all the chief mountain routes are provided. It is true that drifts take place to an enormous extent; but apart from them, the great body of the snow usually remains where it falls during the winter, freezing together into an almost solid mass. This may be of incredible magnitude. We may take the false summit of Mont Blanc as an example, where the snow is supposed to be, at times, from four to five hundred feet in depth. But when the weather becomes warmer, the influence of the sun's heat detaches large masses from the tops of the mountains, or their slopes, which roll down the sides, increasing in size and gathering fresh impetus as they descend, until their power is sufficient to snap the strongest trees like reeds; and when they happen to come down upon a village, the most frightful desolation is the consequence. Avalanches of smaller magnitude are continuously falling throughout the summer and autumn; but they generally take their origin from above the line of perpetual snow, where it never thaws.

The apparent paradox that a greater degree of cold should exist the nearer we approach the sun, as shown in the line just spoken of, may be thus popularly explained:—The heat which we feel in warm weather does not come directly from the sun, although dependent upon it, but is radiated from the earth, in the same manner as a red-hot cannon ball would throw out rays of caloric around it. The air cannot retain the heat of the sun, but owes it temperature entirely to that which it procures from our globe, and this is necessarily diminished as we attain a greater elevation. The decrease of heat is in the proportion of one degree of the thermometer to every 300 feet we ascend; and there must consequently be some point where the mercury never rises above 32 degrees—in fact, where it is perpetually freezing. This point rises with the latitude, as well as with summer or winter; but on the St. Bernard, with which we are at present principally concerned, it may be fixed, even during the hottest summer, at an elevation varying from 9000 to 9500 feet above the level of the Mediterranean, and this altitude is termed the line of perpetual snow.

The great St. Bernard Convent stands pre-eminent amongst the mountain institutions for affording assistance to travellers, and most justly so, for every year numbers of lives are saved by the active humanity of those pious men who have devoted their existence to the succour of their fellow-creatures in those districts of awful solitude and danger, aided by the noble dogs whose sagacity is renowned throughout the world; and their exertions are more especially called into play at the present time. The view which we have given above of the convent is minutely correct—a remark which will not apply to many others now extant, or to the descriptions thereunto attached, most of which are plagiarisms from the guide-books (with all their errors), or the descriptions of previous travellers. It is situated on the neck of the pass leading from Martigny, in Switzerland, to Aosta, in Piedmontese Italy; being distant from the former town, at which the ascent of 8000 feet commences, some thirty English miles. The principal building shown in the view comprises the convent and chapel; the elevation to the right is a house for the reception of travellers of inferior grade, station-boys, muleteers, and the like. The small building nearest to the spectator is used for stabling the mules and horses of the convent, which are constantly engaged in traversing the pass, everything being obliged to be brought up from the valleys, even to an egg or a piece of fire-wood; and to the extreme left is the Morgue, or dead-house, to which we shall presently refer. The establishment generally includes twelve monks, and six of the dogs; but during the autumnal months the convent is crowded with fashionable travellers, amounting at times to between twenty and thirty visitors on the same evening—a singular contrast to its winter loneliness.

AVALANCHE—MONT ST. BERNARD.

MONT ST. BERNARD CONVENT.

The real convent dogs belong, strictly speaking, to the spaniel tribe, and not to the mastiff, as is commonly supposed. They are of an uniform light colour, somewhat approaching to dirty sand, of enormous size, and possessing great strength, although extremely playful and inoffensive. But with all their sagacity the anecdotes of them current amongst us of their rescuing travellers, and carrying children on their backs to the convent, are mere inventions, possibly originating in the well-known French prints. Their chief use is to point out the foot-paths when concealed by snow, which they are enabled to do by their fine sense of smell. They precede the monks in their daily excursions during the winter and spring to look after travellers who may have been overwhelmed by an avalanche or become benumbed by cold, and are also useful in clearing the snow away. The prior of the convent, in 1840, told the writer of this article that a short time previously one of the dogs had been covered up by a sudden avalanche, from which he was immediately rescued by the others, who, unbidden, set to work and scratched him out. The dogs are constantly at liberty, and the monks are always able to tell by their uneasiness and whining if they have discovered a body, when they never fail to conduct their masters to the spot, if left entirely to themselves.

The winter snow rarely melts without some accident to those who traverse the pass from necessity, although not always a fatal one. But when a body is found it is conveyed to the Morgue, spoken of above. Although this building is not exactly on the line of perpetual frost, yet the temperature is so unfavourable to decomposition that the bodies remain unchanged for years within its walls, where they are placed to be recognised. We say unchanged, because nothing like putrefaction takes place: they dry up and turn dark, like a mummy, and, after some years, gradually waste away, until nothing but the bones are left. When we were first at the convent, in 1838, we noticed a woman pressing a child to her breast amongst the inmates of this gloomy place, but on our last visit their bones had mingled with the others that cover the ground.

The reader is referred to any work upon Switzerland for detailed accounts of the convent—its history, regulations, &c., which we have not introduced here, preferring to mention merely such few facts as he would not be likely to find in the common conventional guide-book. The chief objection to most works of this kind is, that in their letterpress they do but copy what has been written before; and in their views, fidelity is invariably sacrificed to artistic effect.

As a mark of the high estimation in which the ordinances of this establishment and inmates are held by travellers, we subjoin two interesting extracts made from the "Livre des Voyageurs," in which it is usual for visitors to inscribe their names:—

"Je n'ai pas voulu terminer une carrière déjà bien avancée, et marquée par de grandes et sévères vicissitudes, sans venir rendre hommage à cet asile si justement renommé de la charité Chrétienne—cette aimable fille du ciel, qui depuis 800 à 900 ans ne cesse d'y répandre des bienfaits, dont elle seul est capable. Honneur et vénération aux hommes éminemment recommandables qui consacrent toute leur existence au soulagement de leurs semblables. Nous nous éloignons à regret, bien touchés de leur excellent accueil, et pénétrés d'estime pour leurs vertus.—Au Grand St. Bernard, le 21 Août, 1834. —Le Marquis de Galard Terraube, Contre-Amiral en retraite."

"Je me souviendrai toute ma vie de l'hospitalité toute Chrétienne que j'ai reçu au Mont Grand St. Bernard. — Bernard Dulac, Etudiant en Médecine."

As a contrast to these expressions of gratitude we almost blush to add the next:—"Mr. and Mrs. A——, and Mr. F——, arrived here wet through on the evening of August the 20th, 1839. They came from Martigny, and are going on to-morrow to Aosta.—God save the Queen!"

MEETINGS OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

May and June are the months in which the Society of Friends hold their "yearly meeting" in London, which this year opened on Wednesday, May 24, and continued into June. This is the most important event in the Friends' religious system, the most interesting season in their year. To this great meeting the business of all their lesser meetings points, and is here consummated.

For the better understanding of the working of the system, it may be as well to explain that, in every place in the kingdom which the Friends have a meeting-house for worship, they hold, once a month, after the meeting for worship is over, a meeting of discipline—a meeting, in fact, for the transaction of the civil affairs of the society; such as providing funds for the support of the poor, for the education of the children of the poor; inquiring into the general moral condition of the meeting, or taking individual delinquents to task. This is called a preparative meeting—that is, a meeting preparative to the monthly meeting, which is a meeting consisting of several preparative meetings. To the monthly meetings one or more representatives are sent from each preparative meeting; and from the monthly meetings are sent to the quarterly meeting, which generally includes within its jurisdiction one or two counties, and, of course, several monthly meetings. From the quarterly meetings then, in spring, representatives are sent to the yearly meeting.

The engraving represents a monthly meeting of discipline at the meeting-house in Houndsditch; and we have selected that of the female Friends—for the women, as well as the men, hold their preparative monthly, quarterly, and yearly meetings of discipline, as they are called, in contradistinction from those of worship. The grand basis of the society is that of the most perfect human equality—an equality which extends to sex, as well as to every other condition of humanity. Women are placed on the footing of companions and coheirs of all social rights and privileges, and therefore hold their own meetings of discipline, and transact all affairs belonging exclusively to their own sex; that is, they watch over the wants, interests, and moral conduct, and religious consistency of the female part of the community; so that, at the close of a meeting for worship, once a month, the women retire into another apartment, and open their books, and discuss there their own concerns, as the men do theirs in their meeting; and of course they send to the monthly, quarterly, and yearly meetings their own representatives too.

William Howitt describes an assemblage of young women Friends as very dove-like. There is such a delicacy and spotless purity in their whole appearance, and they sit in such a profound and devotional quietude; there is such a subduedness, and, indeed, total absence of colouring in the whole scene, so different from the strong and varied colouring of most assemblages of females; there is something so unworldly, so exquisitely clean and fresh, that they look rather like an assembly of spirits, or of vestals, than women who have to move amongst the corrodings, harassings, and bedimmings of every-day life. The costume of the elderly women—Friends—is very becoming, and that of the younger ones truly graceful; and, by their taste, they have even given it a certain elegance. The bonnets of the most genteel and refined amongst them have a striking superiority of figure over those of the rest, though constructed of the same materials. Their shawls are more tastefully disposed. There is an air, a style about the Quaker-lady, which it is not easy to describe. The prevailing colour of their bonnets at this season of the year is delicate silver-grey; their shawls of rich crape, of delicate French white, or of silver-grey, to correspond with the bonnet, sufficiently large to fall in graceful folds, pinned in front in a manner peculiar to them, and of so soft a texture as to show the bust and fall of the shoulders. A clear muslin collar, and a light zephyrine scarf round the neck; the gown of a delicate shade of drab; and kid gloves to match, always well-fitting, new and spotless—complete the young lady Friend's costume. Occasionally you see a darker gown, a shawl of a darker shade, or even a bonnet of a rich brown, giving some variety and contrast to the mass; but it is really wonderful, with so few elements to work with, with almost no colour at all, how they produce so good an effect as they do. It is the extreme delicacy, the purity, the freshness, of the whole which impresses you with an irresistible feeling of a corresponding purity and tone of mind. They remind you of Charles Lamb's "Hester," one of their own sisterhood,

> When maidens such as Hester die,
> Their place ye may not well supply,
> Though ye among a thousand cry,
> With vain endeavour.
> Her parents bent the Quaker rule,
> Which doth the human feeling cool;
> But she was trained in nature's school—
> Nature had blest her.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

THE ETON COLLEGE REGATTA.

The annual Eton College Regatta took place on the Thames on Monday evening last, and, attracted, notwithstanding the extremely unfavourable state of the weather, an unusually large assemblage, in carriages and on foot, on either side of the river. In the Brocas, from whence the boats started to Surley-hall, we observed, in addition to several old Etonians from Oxford and Cambridge, the Baron and Baroness Dunsdale, Hon. Captain Boyle, Hon. and Rev. H. C. Coke, Viscount Drumlanrig, Mr. Sergeant Talfourd, Lieut. Vowler, Esq., J. Jesse, Esq., Captain Burrell, the Hon. Mrs. Fred. H. A. Ashes, Esq., the Rev. H. Dupuis, Captain Spong, Captain Roberts, R.N., Colonel Shaw, the Rev. G. J. Dupuis, Hon. Captain Bertie, the Rev. E. Balston, Sir W. Whymper, J. Tighe, Esq., and the Hon. Mrs. Tighe, Lord Lewisham, — Arkwright, Esq., Lady Healey, the Rev. J. E. Young, &c.

The excellent arrangements which had been made by the captain of the boats (Mr. Tinker) having been completed, the seven boats, each with a splendid flag at the stern, and excellently manned, started from off the Brocas to "Old Sarley," and the following order, preceded by the band of the 2nd Life Guards:—

The Monarch (10 oars).—Tuke (captain of the boats), Fitzhiott, Wilson, Spooner, Smith, M. Shaw Stewart, Lord Henley, Harkness, Smith, ma., Speke, and Luttrell, Lord B. Cecil, steerer

The Victory.—Stapylton (2nd captain), Myers, ma., Babington, Slade, Loch, Lord Burleigh, Hyett, and Magniac; Mr. Finch, steerer

The Prince of Wales.—Lord Garmrey (stroke oar), Dickson, Rowlls, Lord Dunkellin, Addington, Sergeold, ma., Gates, and Robinson, Smith, steerer

The Britannia.—Burton (stroke oar), Sax, Errington, Burrowes, Williamson, Saltmarche, Robinson, and Heywood; Mr. Eliot, ma., steerer

The Dreadnought.—Burton, stroke oar), Preston, Bank, Burton, O'Beirne, Talford, Myers, ma., and Mr. Hanbury, Ma.; Count Bathyany, steerer.

The Tartar.—Woodbridge (stroke oar), Lo & Moreton, Stanhope, Tighe, Bunnett, Sutherland, ma., Wyndham, and Sergeold; P. Smith, steerer

The Sir George.—Mr. Carew (stroke oar), Mills, Poch.n, Mr. Sidney, Trenderoft, Baillie, ma. Sou.a, and Ward; W. Smith, steerer.

A splendid cold collation awaited the arrival of the boats' crews and their friends at Surley hall. This was soon despatched, after which the successful boats had been drawn up humpers of champagne and clares, the boats returned to the Brocas, where they arrived shortly before nine o'clock

Immediately on the arrival of the boats at Windsor a grand display of fireworks took place from a barge moored opposite the Brocas, a little above bridge, which lasted for nearly an hour. The last piece was a brilliant representation of St. Peter's at Rome. The sons of the Life Guards, and also the band of the Foot Guards, performed in the immediate vicinity during the time the fireworks were being discharged, concluding, at their termination, with the national anthem.

Notwithstanding the immense number of boats on the river, we have not heard of the slightest accident having occurred during the day.

ANNUAL FOUR-OARED RACE OF THE OXFORD SUBSCRIPTION ROOMS.

This race, the third from the establishment of the club, took place on Wednesday, over the usual course, from Wenman's to the Isis. The start took place at a quarter to six, when the following boats, manned by the gentlemen of the club, came to the post:—Blue Mr. Welch, 1; Mr. Cox, 2; Mr. Powys, 3; Mr. Pocock, stroke; Mr Mayerier, coxswain. Red: Mr. Stuart, 1, Mr. Richmond, 2; Mr. Heywell, 3, Mr. Longmore, stroke; Mr. A. Bushwell, coxswain. Yellow: Mr. Churchill, 1; Mr Atkinson, 2; Mr. Lovesey, 3; Mr. Rogers, stroke, Mr. Fookes, coxswain. On the word "go" being given, the boats got off at a good pace, and rowed nearly abreast until near the Horseferry, when Yellow dropped astern, and Blue at the same time went ahead of Red. No alteration took place through Folly-bridge. Blue gradually increased their lead, and went under Putney-bridge about a quarter of a minute ahead of Red, Yellow being about the same distance from Red. There was some excellent rowing, and, although not a severe race, the crews appeared more evenly matched than is usual in races in which the competitors are thrown together by lot. The Leander Club (right), the Cambridge Subscription Rooms (right), and several four-oars and wherries, accompanied the match.

CRICKET.—THE MARYLEBONE CLUB v. THE COUNTY OF SUSSEX.—This, the first grand match of the season, was played, on Monday and Tuesday, at Lord's, and terminated in the defeat of the Sussex county men. The Maryleboners, batting only, with three innings, scored 174. H.R.H. Prince Albert has forwarded 5*l.* on aid of the subscription establishing the grand regatta at Putney, announced for the 3rd and 4th of July next.

GRAY'S INN.—The undermentioned gentlemen were on Wednesday last called to the degree of barrister-at-law by the honourable society of Gray's Inn, viz.—Mr. J. Woolley, Mr. R. H. Wyndham, Mr. W. Evans, Mr. H. Purcel, Mr. A. de R. Labistour, and Mr H. J. Hunter

THE GREAT WESTERN STEAMER.—LIVERPOOL, WEDNESDAY EVENING.—We have no intelligence of the Great Western being off this port, although her arrival has been generally looked for to-day. No telegraphic communication has been received from Holyhead since the morning, so that it is possible she may be now without previous intimation.

WHITECROSS-STREET PRISON.—The new rules and regulations of the Queen's Bench are extending their influence to Whitecross-street Prison. Hitherto the utmost liberty and indulgence were allowed its inhabitants, but latterly Mr. Burden, the governor, and Mr. Douglas, the under-governor, are most vigilant in exacting strict obedience to the rules that have been laid down for its direction. They alternately visit the rooms every night and suppress any excess that may appear in the shape of drinking, card playing, or gaming; and a perseverance in a breach of the rules of the prison or orders of the governor is punished by confinement for forty-eight hours in the "strong room" on bread and water.

ENGLAND AND FRANCE;

OR

THE SISTERS.

A ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.

BY HENRY COCKTON,

AUTHOR OF "VALENTINE VOX," "STANLEY THORN," ETC.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE INTRODUCTION OF VINCENT DARNLEY.

EING no longer apprehensive of the influence of Charles interfering with her own, Caroline was now upon that point perfectly at ease; but as Sir Arthur, in consequence of the colds which he caught so repeatedly, began to grow feeble she became extremely petulant and frequently wearish. His cough annoyed her; his weak accents annoyed her; his voice annoyed her, and sometimes even the manifestation of his love. And still the chief study of his life to please her, although she was dissatisfied with everything he did.

The rebellion was not, however, open; it was, at least, partially concealed: it is true Lady Cleveland thought that she showed a little temper "—but that she loved him all—finally, passionately, loved him—he fervently believed

"I do not" said he on one occasion, when Caroline, on being disgusted with his cough, had said something severe, "I do not care about you being a little cross with me sometimes, because I have lived sufficiently long in the world and know enough of the character of your sex to know that ladies have occasionally a very peculiar method of showing their affections; but I wish you wouldn't say such cutting things when you are cross; because, although I well know that you would not willingly wound my feelings for the world, you do wound them by making those observations nevertheless

"Wound your feelings," returned Caroline petishly, "you appear to have no regard for mine To hear you continually cough, cough, cough—really it's enough to enrage an angel

"You are an angel—my angel—you know that you are, but although I did not say that you were enraged, you again said something extremely severe. Are you aware that you just now made an observation in the effect that I had no regard for your feelings? My dearest love, be reasonable. I know that this cough is extremely unpleasant: I know that you cannot bear to hear it, because anything which inflicts me imparts pain to you, and I assure you I am beautifully sympathetic, a feeling which so mutually exists between us, and which constitutes one of the chief joys of my life; but you must not blame me, my sweet,—really you must not blame me—because you cannot for a moment conceive that I hold a cough to be a luxury, or that I would not get rid of it, dear, if I could.

"Other persons," replied Caroline, "can get rid of coughs."

"And I shall get rid of mine—in time.

"So you said six months ago.

"But think, my love, of the late hours we have kept! consider my dear, I've caught cold upon cold

"You are perpetually pestering me about the late hours. They have not been unusually late, and even if they have been, why do not I catch cold upon cold I am constantly with you, I endure the same changes, and am less warmly clad: and yet I never have to complain of colds! There must be something the matter—something constitutionally wrong

"By no means; by no means; my constitution's sound as ever—never was so sound. I can endure any fatigue—in the air!—the open air.—walk fifty miles a day—ride a hundred!—nothing can beat me—in the air! no man was ever blessed with a more powerful constitution. I've proved it a—hem!—I've proved it. It's only this tiresome cough that hangs upon me. But that shall soon go. I'll soon settle that."

"I wish to Heaven you would

"I will my love; I will. But come do not be cross with me, do not be cross. You don't know what a sweet little present I'm going to make you:—you haven't an idea of it—but I purchased this morning accidently one of the most beautiful little Italian greyhounds you ever beheld. Are you fond of Italian greyhounds?

"When they are very beautiful.

"Then I'm sure that you will much admire this I've just sent for it. You'll be delighted—It's symmetry is so perfect, and it is so playful! And now give me a kiss and let us make up this desperate quarrel—You don't know," he added, as he stood gazing on her with an expression of the purest affection while pressing [illegible] "that I am [illegible] But I will not [illegible] I know you do. But it's all over now [illegible] another word about it

Now although scenes of this kind frequently occurred, Caroline had too much respect for herself to permit the slightest expression of dissatisfaction to escape her lips in the presence of any third party. When they were alone she considered that she had an unquestionable right to say anything she pleased, but when in society she felt bound to treat him with the highest consideration. There was no assumption of superiority seen, no show of discontent or regret: they appeared to live in the most perfect harmony, and every individual the conviction that their happiness was complete. Not even their own servants were ever suffered to hear an unkind syllable pass between them: those servants, it is true, had constant proofs of her ability to be angry, but they were as well convinced as they were of their own existence that to him she was most amiable, affectionate, and mild.

And thus matters went on, until a circumstance occurred which had the foundation of a new state of things, the character and progress of which it will now be correct to explain.

Among Caroline's most constant guests was the widow of Captain Darnley, an excessively delicate, gentle creature, who resided throughout the year in the vicinity of the Lodge, and who, by her affectionate, amiable manners, commanded universal esteem. At the Captain a death she was possessed of considerable property, but having a son—an only son—upon whom she doated, and who in return had contracted most extravagant habits, the means of indulging in which she applied, and which gradually grew and branched forth so ably, bearing, however, no fruit save that a lack was perceptible in her once ample fortune and a weeded to a bare competence, with which she was, nevertheless, content, being sustained by the cherished conviction that it had all been done to make her "dear dear Vincent happy.'

At this period the age of Vincent Darnley was about twenty-six; but while his appearance was extremely prepossessing—being tall and symmetrically formed, and having well-defined, aristocratic features—he was one of the most lordly polished scamps about town. In the drawing-room he was a gentleman, in the dog-pit a blackguard, in the prize-ring a Cribbinian, in a mess-room a sharp. He would accommodate his language and manners to any society; but being destitute of every just or honourable feeling he won the contempt of all by whom his character was known.

In general he resided in London; but occasionally, when he knew an affectionate creditor had put the legal bloodhounds on the scent, he would visit his mother in order to avoid them, and it was with this view that he went down at the period in question.

Of course Mrs. Darnley was blind to all his faults, for a mother is the last to see the profligacy of a son as he appears to the world; and he appeared a fine handsome fellow—and in her view these qualities were actually superative. She was, therefore, beyond expression proud of him, and introduced him to all her friends, among whom, of course, she numbered Sir Arthur and Lady Cleveland, whom he visited frequently, and by whom he was greatly admired.

On one occasion, however, while he and his mother were at the Lodge, having been invited by Caroline to meet a select party of friends, one of the servants entered the drawing-room just before dinner was announced, and addressed Vincent in a somewhat mysterious style, informed him that a person wished to speak with him privately

In an instant it a truth flashed upon him, and his countenance fell; and having made a desperate effort to rally he left the room, but not before his mother and Caroline had perceived that he looked deadly pale, and even trembled.

Anxious to ascertain the cause of this extraordinary change in his appearance, Mrs. Darnley at once followed, and on reaching the hall, Vincent, whose fears had been realised, informed her that he had been summoned on business of the most pressing importance and desired her to excuse him on that ground to Sir Arthur and Lady Cleveland. In vain she implored him to explain to her the nature of this business; in vain she announced her suspicion that all was not right: he would give her no further information on the subject, and was about to leave the house, when she rushed towards the stairs with the view of speaking to Sir Arthur; but before she had ascended the first flight, she met Caroline, whose curiosity had prompted her to leave the room.

"Oh, lady Cleveland!" she frantically exclaimed, "my dear lady Cleveland, I am wretche!"

"What on earth has occurred?" enquired Caroline

"I know not, I know not; he will not tell me.'

"Be calm, dear: my dear Mrs. Darnley, be calm. Compose yourself. I'll go and speak to him. Mr. Darnley, she added, addressing Vincent, who was leaving the house, but who remained at the door until she approached him, "Mr. Darnley, why surely you are not going to leave us?"

"I regret exceedingly that I am compelled to do so," returned Vincent, who was still extremely tremulous, "but business of the utmost importance——"

"Dear Vincent, tell me," exclaimed Mrs. Darnley, "what is the nature of this business?"

It were useless to explain to you its nature, mother, you would not understand it."

"My dear Mrs. Darnley," said Caroline, "will you do me the favour to leave us but for a moment." And the poor lady trembling violently, suffered herself to be led into one of the front parlours, when Caroline, on opening the door of the other, invited both Vincent and the man to walk in.

"Lady Cleveland, said Vincent, as he entered, "I am extremely sorry that this should have occurred, but I hope that you will excuse me at this present.

"Indeed," returned Caroline, playfully, "I cannot excuse you: unless you give me a very sufficient reason I will not allow you to leave us."

"He must go, my lady," said the officer.

"Why must he, sir?" demanded Caroline.

"I tell your ladyship, the gentleman's bashful, and I respect him for it. debt makes cowards of all honest men. rogues don't care so much about it."

"I perceive," said Caroline, "you are arrested, Mr. Darnley. Well, can it not be settled? What is the amount? Come, tell me: we are all friends here!—and these are things to which all men are liable. My brother Frederick was arrested once—but was settled, and surely this may be

"Of course, it may be settled by paying," observed the officer.

"What is the amount.

"Why, it's near upon two hundred, fees and all!"

"Then it shall be settle I.

"Lady Cleve and" cried Vincent, as Caroline was about to leave the room. "I beg of you to excuse me, I feel already sufficiently humiliated, and I would not have my mother know of it for the world.

She shall not know of it Mr Darnley," replied Caroline.

Nor you! I [illegible]

Mr. Da [illegible] between us"

I really, Lady Cleve and I cried Vincent, as Caroline quitted the room

"Hood your tongue, do you foolish man," cried the officer, "never feel ashamed at being helped out of a scrape"

"Vincent, I [illegible] the room valet

"Do you, your mother [illegible] me you had come here to dine.

"And so I will not wait till I returned

"Oh, we never [illegible] out of trading, we never throw away half a chance. It would [illegible]

During the [illegible] with a cheque which Sir Arthur had given to [illegible] but the [illegible]

My dear Lady Cleveland, said Vincent, "I really must protest——"

ALICE AND LUCRECE.

"Mr. Darnley," said Caroline, smiling, "you have nothing whatever to do with it. My business is now with this person, and I beg that you will not interfere. What is the amount, exactly?" she enquired.

"Only, it's a hundred and eighty-four pounds," replied the officer.

"Very well, here is a cheque for two hundred and fifty. My servant will accompany you to the bank, and by him you can return the balance.

"Your ladyship will excuse me, but it isn't usual to take cheques in affairs of this description

"But, Sir Arthur is sufficiently well known to you, I presume?"

"No doubt; I was merely saying that the thing was unusual. The gentleman himself had better walk with me, and then he can bring the change back.

"Nay, nay, my good man; surely, that is unnecessary. I am responsible for him. Besides, the debt will create suspicion, and I am sure you will consider that a gentleman has feelings:

"I do consider that; and your ladyship should consider that he is not the only man that has feelings. I have feelings! and as far as responsibility is concerned, I am responsible to the sheriffs, and the sheriff is responsible for me; and yet I, a respectable tradesman in the town, having paid scot and lot for thirty years, am not to be trusted with a cheque, but must have a servant with me to see that I don't run away with the balance:

"If I do believe your lad- hip. But I did think it strange. However, I beg pardon. I have not the slightest doubt of the cheque being paid, and will return you the balance in the morning

"That is all that I require," returned Caroline. "But what is your fee?"

"A guinea; but that is included."

"Then, instead of one, I beg that you will take five. I may depend upon your keeping this affair a profound secret?

"As far as I am concerned, your ladyship may. I thank you."

He then bowed respectfully and quitted the room, when Vincent began to express his gratitude with the utmost fervour; but Caroline declaring that she would not have a word [illegible] him into the parlour, to which his mother had retired, and in which she had remained trembling with apprehension.

"Well," said Caroline, as he entered, "I have prevailed upon him at length not to leave us. But I have had a world of trouble to do so; I never yet met with so inflexible a creature.

"What was the matter?" exclaimed Mrs. Darnley; "tell me, dear Vincent, what was it?"

"You had better let me tell you that," said Caroline. "The idea of his leaving our society on the present occasion, merely to have a great maid out to forgive him. But come, the servants are waiting to announce dinner; let us return, to the drawing-room, and look as if nothing of the kind was ever contemplated—come

She then took Vincent's disengaged arm, and when Mrs. Darnley, who had been anxiously hanging upon the other, felt sufficiently recovered, they rejoined their friends with the appearance of all possible gaiety, and thus removed what ever suspicion their absence might have engendered.

For some time Vincent scarcely knew what to think of this display of friendly feeling on the part of Caroline, but being an excessively vain man he very soon inspired the idea of her being absolutely enamoured of him! What besides could have induced her to take so much interest in his affairs? What else could have prompted her to exhibit so much anxiety on his behalf? What but that could have led her, or any other woman, to act as she had done with the consciousness of disinterested love. These questions he put to himself again and again, and being unwilling to believe that it had been done with the view of relieving his mother's feelings, he ascribed it solely to love, and more especially as Sir Arthur was old and feeble, while he was—he wished not to conceal it from himself at all—one of the most splendid fellows breathing. His therefore, during dinner, kept his eyes fixed constantly upon her, and as she occasionally smiled at the recollection of what had occurred, and made a variety of playful remarks, with the view of raising his spirits, which she conceived were still depressed, he felt convinced that the cause he had imagined was the true one. He was sure of it:—nothing could be in his view more palpable than that.

And then, there was a conquest! Decidedly one of the most magnificent creatures he had ever beheld. He had seen no one comparable with her. Lovely, young, highly accomplished, elegant, and wealthy: his senses were dazzled by the prospect which opened before him—he longed to declare his passion—he panted to throw himself at her feet, and to swear that she was the idol of his soul! Prudence, however, of course subdued the ecstacies with which his frail imagination teemed, for although they addressed each other frequently, he suffered no word to escape which can d convey the idea of his supposing that she was in love with him, his unmeaning object being to inspire her silently with the belief that he was desperately enamoured of her.

But Caroline had no such feelings as those which he so fondly imagined she possessed; nor did she entertain any such belief as that with which he was so anxious to inspire her. True, she thought his manners very strange; she could not but think that his conduct altogether was peculiar; but she ascribed all to the position in which he had been placed, and felt sorry that his embarrassment in consequence—as she imagined—was so perceptible. Nor did she, when, after the evening they met to the drawing room again, where the wine he had taken induced him to be more eloquent, attribute the fervent expressions in which he indulged to any other feeling than that of gratitude. Hence, her very efforts to relieve him from that which she conceived to be his embarrassment confirmed his belief that she ardently loved him, and hence when on taking leave for the night, and pressing her hand with unusual warmth, she returned the pressure and sighed, he made up his mind that a i was secure and began to think of the best means of carrying her off. That she imagined that this extraordinary conduct sprang from any other feeling than that to which she had ascribed it, she would have accepted him on the instant; but as she felt that that was alone a sufficient reason for the warmth he displayed, her language and manners were just as unreserved as if he had been indeed her brother.

In the morning, however, when he called, he inclined her to think upon the subject, for he became still more bold, and in his view had indolence was justified by the smiling playful manner in which she received him. He addressed her at first as "my dear Lady Cleveland," and then as "my dearest Lady Cleveland," and then as "my dearest," without "Lady Cleveland," but the moment "Lady Cleveland" was omitted she looked at him firmly for an instant, and that firm look appeared to wither all his hopes. She, however, took no further notice, and the cloud passed off: but he felt it to be insupportable to try the effect of "my dearest" again that morning, either with or without "Lady Cleveland."

Still "my dearest" continued to ring in her ears. Long after he had left, her mind dwelt upon "my dearest." Was it to be ascribed to inadvertence or design? That was the question she was anxious to solve. In her judgment it was not at all surprising that he should have addressed her as "my dear Lady Cleveland, or even as "my dearest Lady Cleveland," inasmuch as she believed that he felt extremely grateful, nor did she conceive it to be unreasonable to suppose that the omission had in the course of conversation been inadvertently made, and yet it was evident that he felt much embarrassed when she frowned, which plainly proved that he was conscious of that omission while he made no effort either to supply or to apologise for. However, she wished to believe it to be a matter of little importance, although she was not quite sure after truth.

On the other hand, Darnley was more puzzled. In his mind there was no doubt about her having frowned when he used the effect of "my dearest:" but then was she really angry? That was the question with him. It was true, very true that she frowned at the moment, but did she frown at that? And if she did, might she not have done it to show that she was not to be too easily won? That he had given no very great offence was abundantly clear, for the frown had been instantly followed by a smile when she caught an early opportunity. And yet that frown!—it was but transient—still it was a frown! And the influence of a frown upon the brow of a virtuous woman is amazing. Nothing can surpass its power to repel the first attacks upon her virtue, nothing can more effectually eclipse the vicious hopes of those by whom it is assailed. Even Darnley, base as he was, could not endure a frown. Still, arguing from his hopes, he thought that the frown he had witnessed was attributable solely to the fact of the sensitive chord in the heart of a woman having been in this case for the first time touched.

At Palgrave's in the evening they met, and addressed each other as usual; but as Caroline was anxious to know whether he really entertained any other feelings towards her than those of mere friendship, she gave him every opportunity of proving the fact, and, as he was equally anxious to know whether the fact could with safety be proved, they conversed on irrelevant topics, each fearing to advance one step beyond the bounds of common courtesy, and the result was, of course, most insipid.

On taking, however, a retrospective view of that evening's conversation, she more than ever admired not only his intellectual acquirements, but his peculiarly elegant style of expression. She even regarded him as an exceedingly gentlemanlike person, but she viewed him then as the most agreeable creature she had ever had the pleasure to meet; while he, having reflected upon all that had passed, was by no means more than ever satisfied, but resolved by a bold declaration to bring the matter to an issue at once.

He therefore shut himself up, and went to work, and, having studied the importance and probable effect of every sentence, produced a most passionate, ardent, but most absurd letter.

On receiving this letter from the hands of the servant, Caroline, who had just alighted from her pony phaeton, broke the seal at once, supposing it to have been sent by Mrs. Darnley, but, on perceiving the inscription, she rebolded it hastily, and, tearing the servant to wait, took it with her immediately into her bedroom.

Here, having by conjectures prepared herself for the nature of its contents, it was reopened and read, and her first impulse was to return it unanswered, conceiving, and very correctly, that she ought to feel excessively indignant; but having read it again with additional care, she imagined that a short sharp letter would meet the justice of the case, seeing that if he really entertained those feelings—and she had not little doubt that he did—he was in her gentle judgment—notwithstanding his conduct was held to be principle reprehensible—much to be pitied

She therefore immediate.y wrote the following note :—

"Lady Cleveland acknowledges the receipt of the note of Viscount Darnley,' and desires that Mr. Darnley will never presume to address her in the same strain again

(To be continued weekly.)

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER. The Nobility, Patrons of the Opera, and the Public are respectfully informed, that ONE GRAND PERFORMANCE of this celebrated Work, will take place at HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, on Monday Evening, June 19, supported by the following eminent artistes:—Mdme Grisi, Mdlle Brambilla, and Mdlle. Molina; Signors Mario, Lablache, F. Lablache, and Formasari.—In addition to the talent effort to the execution of the great Work, the CHORUSES will, on this occasion, be supported by the entire talent of the principal Artistes of her Majesty's Theatre, and will be increased to above ONE HUNDRED VOICES. Arrangements have been made to secure the celebrated OVERTURE composed expressly by MEYERBEER, for the "STABAT MATER," and which will be executed by the Full Orchestra of her Majesty's Theatre. The whole under the direction of Sig. COSTA.—Doors open at half past Seven, to commence at Eight

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public are respectfully informed that on THURSDAY NEXT, JUNE 15th, an extra night, not included in the subscription), will be performed, for the last time this season, M. MOZART'S CHEF D'ŒUVRE, IL DON GIOVANNI. Principal characters Dessus Mdlles. Grisi, Duchess Kems, Mdlle Molina, Zerlina, Mdme Persiani; Don Giovanni, Sig. Fabrisiani; Leporel o, Sig. Lablache. Masetto, Sig. F. Lablache; Don Ottavio, Sig. Mario. With OTHER ENTERTAINMENTS, in which Mdlle. Carlin, Mdme. Guy Stephan, M. Perrot, Sr. Leon, and the Principal Artistes of the Ballet will appear.—Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade.

WHITSUN HOLIDAYS.

AERIAL NAVIGATION. ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A LECTURE on the subject, illustrated by Models of several kinds which elevate themselves by mechanical force alone, is delivered at Two o'clock daily in addition to all the varied and instructive amusements of the Establishment. Admission, One Shilling. Schools, Half price. Open Mornings and Evenings, except Saturday Evening.

THE GRAND MODEL of the BASILICA of ST. PETER'S at Rome.—Under the patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty QUEEN VICTORIA, and likewise all the Crowned Heads of Europe. Executed by ANDREA GARBARINI, of Tuscany. The model is 7½ feet in length and 12 feet in height, carved in oriental woods, with statues elegantly carved in ivory, being reduced to one-hundredth part of the original size. By its construction the internal parts are exhibited to the spectator, the construction of which occupied the aforesaid artist fourteen years. Open daily, at 12½, Full-mall, from ten to eight. Admission, 1s.

GLACIARIUM, BAKER-STREET BAZAAR, Portman-square. The usual specimen of ARTIFICIAL ICE is REMOVED from the Colosseum, and a surface of 2000 square feet is now exhibiting, and open to the Public for Skating on, at all seasons, on which skaters may be seen performing their elegant evolutions, amidst Alpine scenery, covered with snow and hoar frost, forming a beautiful and faithful Panorama of Lucerne and its lake frozen, taken on the spot expressly by Mr. F. Palmer, from Mount Pilatus, and, in the Evening, beautifully Illuminated from Seven till Ten o'clock, with the addition of a Promenade Band, under the direction of Mr. J. Sedgwick. Admittance, 1s.; Chargefor Skating 1s. per hour, without additional charge for skates and attendance, which are provided.

ROSOMY HALL.—MR. LOVE WILL PERFORM ON FRIDAY NEXT.

MR. LOVE, the Original Dramatic Polyphonist, has the honour to announce that, during the remainder of the season, his ENTERTAINMENTS will be confined exclusively to Crosby hall, Bishopsgate street, where he will appear every Friday until further notice. He will present his Mono-Dramatic Entertainment, entitled LOVE IN ALL SHAPES; or, The Gallery of Portraits. To be followed by A REMINISCENCE OF BY GONE TIMES. To conclude with the LOVES LABOUR LOST Begun at Eight. Reserved Seats, 2s.; Gallery, 1s.—. On Monday, June 12, Mr. Love will appear at the Assembly Rooms, Barkhcath; on Wednesday, June 14, at the New Lecture Rooms, Greenwich; and on Monday, June 19, at the Assembly Rooms, Peckham.

Just Reprinted, price 1s.,

THE PROTESTANT'S TRIAL by the WRITTEN WORD.—An admirable controversial work—particularly recommended to the attentive perusal of the serious inquirer after truth.

London: F. A. Litten, 34, Henrietta-street, Covent garden

COMIC NURSERY TALES, with humourous illustrations by Leech, Crowquill, and Cham

ROBINSON CRUSOE, in humourous Verse, in a few days.—Will be published, on Monday next, price 1s. 6d. plain, or 2s. 6d. coloured, No. 1 of "A New Tale of a Tub."—BEAUTY AND THE BEAST, by ALBERT SMITH.—JACK THE GIANT KILLER. By the author of the "Comic Latin and English Grammar."—SLEEPING BEAUTY, by a "Second Dunsel."—Price 2s. 6d. each, ornamentally bound.

W. S. ORR and Co. Paternoster-row

Fourteenth Thousand.—Price 2s. 6d., with the beautiful coloured diagram,

ADVICE ON THE CARE OF THE TEETH, and on the best Means of RESTORING those when LOST. By EDWIN SAUNDERS, M.R.C.S., Lecturer on the Anatomy and Diseases of the Teeth at St. Thomas's Hospital. Author of "On Teeth a Tract of Age," &c.

"A work which should be in the hands of all who regard their health, comfort, or personal appearance." Standard

HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand; WARD and Co., Paternoster-row, to be had of the Author, 16, Argyll-street, and all booksellers.

Just published, price 14s., cloth boards, the First Volume of TRAITS and STORIES of the IRISH PEASANTRY. By WILLIAM CARLETON With an Autobiographical Introduction, Illustrated Notes, and Graphic Illustrations, on wood and steel, by Phiz, Harvey, Mac Manus, Frank Lee, and other artists.

"His tales are full of vigorous picturesque descriptions and genuine pathos They may be referred to as furnish.ng a very correct portrait of the Irish peasantry."—Quarterly Review.

London. Wm. S Orr and Co., Dublin: Wm. Curry, jun., and Co.; and Fraser and Co., Edinburgh.

CLAUDET'S DAGUERREOTYPE PORTRAITS taken daily at the ROYAL ADELAIDE GALLERY.—The wonderful art, by which perfect likenesses are taken in a few seconds, has lately received very important improvements, and has arrived to such perfection that former productions, however extraordinary they were, cannot be compared with the new specimens produced by M. CLAUDET, and which are exhibited at the Adelaide Gallery These pictures are fixed, and do not fade. Price of a single portrait, with frames, upon plates 3½ by 2½ in., and five guineas, upon plates 5½ in. by 4½ in. Intermediate sizes in proportion. Coloring from 5s. to 10s

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL CIRCULATING LIBRARY.—Subscribers paying £3 3s. a year are entitled to Six Books or Pieces at a time in town, Eighteen, in the country. Subscribers paying £2 2s. a year are entitled to Four in town, or Twelve in the country. Every description of Music (Vocal and Instrumental) and any work (unless of a very unpopular character) not already in the Library, will be added, bought, or presented.—New Bond-street.

ASCOT RACES, June 13, 14, 15, 16, 1843.—WETTON'S OFFICIAL CARD AND LIST, published by authority of the Master of her Majesty's Buck hounds, will alone contain the Stewards' arrangement, which will be found to correspond with the number of the winning horse, stamped on the telegraph, at the judge's stand, after each race.—Printed by C. C. Watton, Egham, and sold at his printing office, 3, Hamilton, near the stewards' stand; also, by E. Watton, Clerkeny, and J. B. Brown, Windsor.

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.—No. 10, Chatham place, Blackfriars, London—Established January, 1844.

Parliament—SIR JAMES HUNTT CARMAC, Knight, M.P., Chairman.

Vice-President—GEO. FORBES, Esq., 9, Fitzroy-square With Twelve Directors

Facilities are offered by this long-established Society to suit the views and the means of every class of Insurers. Premiums are received yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly, or upon an increasing or decreasing scale. The insured for life participate septennially in the profits realised. All the commissions are paid to Solicitors and Agents.

DAVID FOGO, Secretary.

N.B.—Agents are wanted in towns where none have been yet appointed.

THE METROPOLITAN LOAN COMPANY, Offices, 1, Craven-street, Strand, London.—Loans are advanced by this Company, on the security of responsible householders, in sums of £10 10s., £15, £20, £25, £30, £35, £40, £45, and £50, for periods, at the option of the borrower, of 25 weeks, at 2½ per cent., and of 50 weeks, at 5 per cent., to be repaid by weekly instalments. Forms of application, and particulars, may be obtained at the offices as above, which are open daily from eleven till three o'clock. If the security is considered approved, the loan is granted without delay. Larger amounts are granted by the Company upon special agreement with the Directors.

HEARTS OF OAK ENROLLED BENEFIT SOCIETY, held at the BIRD IN-HAND, 17, Long-acre, London.—Respectable men, whose ages do not exceed 35, and whose average earnings are equal to 20s. per week, are invited to join this truly benevolent institution. Entrance money, 2s 6d. Free immediately. No fines for stewards. No spending money. Monthly subscriptions, 2d. The benefits are—4s. per week for sickness; £30 for member's funeral; £10 for wife or nominee; £15 for loss by fire, £5 for a substitute for the militia; 4s per week superannuation; £3 10s. superannuation for widow.—Persons desirous of becoming members residing in town, can enter their names at the bar of the society house; those residing in the country, by sending to the secretary one postage stamp, can have a blank form, to be filled up and returned, for that purpose. The rules will be forwarded post-free, on the receipt of 1s., by Mr. JOHN HADLEY, secretary, 12, Exeter-street, Strand, London.

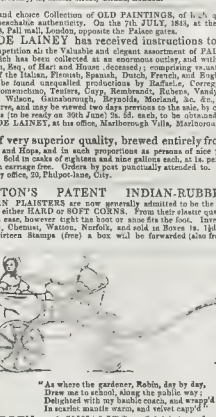
A Valuable and choice Collection of OLD PAINTINGS, of high quality, rarity, beauty and unquestionable authenticity. On the 7th JULY, 1843, at the St. James's Picture Gallery, 58, Pall mall, London, opposite the Palace gates.

MR. DE LAINEY has received instructions to offer to public competition at the above Gallery an elegant assortment of Paintings of the Old Masters, which has been collected at an enormous outlay, and with great judgment, by James Dixon, Esq., of Hart and House (deceased); comprising valuable and authenticated specimens of the Italian, Flemish, Spanish, Dutch, French, and English schools, amongst which will be found unqualified productions by Raffaelle, Correggio, Guido, Perugino, Claude, Domenichino, Teniers, Cuyp, Rembrandt, Ruysdael, Vandyke, F. Bol, Murillo, G. Poussin, Wilson, Gainsborough, Reynolds, Morland, &c. &c., which will be Sold without reserve, and may be viewed two days previous to the sale, by catalogue only.

Catalogues (to be ready on 30th June) 2s. 6d. each, to be obtained at the place of sale, and of Mr. DE LAINEY, at his office, Marlborough Villa, Marlborough-hill, Bristo..

ALE of very superior quality, brewed entirely from the very best Malt and Hops, and in such proportions as persons of nice palate will be sure to appreciate. Sold in casks of eighteen and nine gallons each, at 1s. per gallon. Sent to any part of town carriage free. Orders by post punctually attended to. Address to the John Bull brewery office, 29, Philpot-lane, City.

CHASTON'S PATENT INDIAN-RUBBER ELASTIC CORN PLAISTERS are now generally admitted to be the most unique and best to eradicate either HARD or SOFT CORNS. From their elastic quality they can be worn with perfect ease, however tight the boot or shoe fits the foot. Invented and prepared by B. Chaston, Chemist, Watton, Norfolk, and sold in Boxes is. 1½d. each. N.B.—On receipt of Thirteen Stamps (free) a box will be forwarded (also free) to any part of the kingdom



"As where the gardener, Robin, day by day,
Drew me to school, along the public way;
Delighted with my bauble coach, and wrapp'd
In scarlet mantle warm, and velvet cap'd."

CHILDREN and INVALIDS.—Of high value in the preservation and restoration of health. CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES of a very superior elegant, and compact make, and so perfectly secure and easy that children may be trusted with impunity to the most careless hands. In use from the palace to the cottage. Invalids' Wheel Chairs of all sorts, and Spinal Carriages; also, Self-moving Chairs for house or garden.—On sale or hire at INGRAM'S, 29, City-road, Finsbury-square.

IMPROVED ART OF FRENCH AND ENGLISH PATTERN-TAKING, CUTTING, AND FITTING.—Mrs. POLLETT, formerly of New Bond-street, sole inventress of the above system, and which was first introduced upon models, in 1836, devotes her time in giving lessons in her improved art, by which means young persons, totally unacquainted with the business, or those who require training, are ensured, superior to take pattern, cut out, and fit the most difficult figures with a facility and precision not to be excelled.—Terms, for a course of lessons, only one sovereign.—Apply between the hours of eleven and four.—No. 3, Lower Wharton-street, Lloyd-square, Pentonville

A WATCH, AS A GIFT, from its particular properties, is the best expression of the truth and constancy of friendship: it is always with the giver, and always doing him service.—J. JONES, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, Watchmaker to the Admiralty, has on sale a great variety of Watches, suitable for all classes. Five elegant gold horizontal watches, at £7 each, are suitable for ladies and gentlemen.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watch Work, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

WATCHES by WEBSTER and SON, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty, established 132 years, 3, Birchin-lane.—The largest assortment of fine Second-hand Watches of any house in London, by the most eminent makers, many nearly equal to new, and at little above half their original cost, all of which W and Son warrant. They have also in contemplation a great variety of new and elegant horizontal watches, of their own manufacture. New Watches of the most elegant patterns upon the principle of their chronometers, for which the Government awarded the prizes three years in succession, with compensation balances to counteract the variations of temperature; also a large assortment of lever and elegant horizontal watches for ladies and gentlemen, at considerably reduced prices. Old Watches taken in exchange. The most experienced workmen are employed on the premises in the repairing department.

Webster and Son, 3, Birchin-lane, Cornhill.

THE FACT is established in the most satisfactory manner, by comparison, that DIXON is selling Cambric Pocket Handkerchiefs, one third lower in price than they have before been offered, caused by his having availed himself of the stagnation of commercia. affairs in France, and purchased (for cash) a large quantity of cambrics at a great discount. He is offering beautifully fine hem-stitched real Cambric handkerchiefs at 30s. and 42s. a dozen, the latter equal to those usually charged twenty shillings each. Gentlemen as well as ladies should promptly avail themselves of this rare chance. The Irish cambric manufactory he has from 15s. a dozen. Purchasers will be sure to have goods, as they really are, not Irish passed as French, and all warranted, of DIXON, No. 237, Regent-street, her Majesty's principal linen-draper

ELASTIC BOOTS.—THE QUEEN'S BOOTS.

J. SPARKES HALL'S PATENT ELASTIC ANKLE BOOTS require neither lacing, buttoning, nor tying; they can be put on and off in a moment, without trouble or loss of time. The constant annoyance of laces breaking, buttons coming off, the wearing out, and many other imperfections in the ordinary modes of fastening, suggested the improvement which is now submitted to the public. No boots can surpass them in neatness of fit and elegance of shape, or correspond so exactly to their natures, and anatomical form.—308, Regent-street, Langham-place, opposite the Polytechnic Institution.

Ladies and Gentlemen at a distance can be fitted by forwarding a pattern boot.

BONNETS.—Paris Chips, Leghorns, Tuscan, Fancy, Dunstable, and Silk Bonnets and Caps, from Paris, in all the New Shapes for the Season, possessing the advantage of giving a youthful and graceful appearance—a peculiarity never met with in the Bonnets for sale in London, and which, after a long and full benefit of the New Tariff, Children's Leghorn Hats, 6s. to 12s.; Ladies' Leghorns, 7s. 6d. to 15s.; Fine Chips, for Bridal Bonnets, &c., 14s. 6d. to 18s. 6d.; Sewn Paris Chips, 10s. 6d.; Fine Peruvets, 12s. to 18s.; Tuscans, 6s. to 10s. 6d.; Dunstables, 4s. to 10s.; Gentlemen's Garden or Cricket Hats, 1s. to 5s.; French Shapes, 5s. 6d., 6s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 8s. 6d., 9s. 6d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d., 18s. 6d., 21s., 25s., 30s., 35s., 40s., 45s., 50s., 55s., 60s., 65s., 70s., 75s., 80s., 85s., 90s., 95s., 100s., 105s., 110s., 115s., 120s., 125s., 130s., 135s., 140s., 145s., 150s., 155s., 160s., 165s., 170s., 175s., 180s., 185s., 190s., 195s., 200s., 205s., 210s., 215s., 220s.,

THE KING OF HANOVER.

In a country like ours, where loyalty is so universal and so early instilled into the youthful mind as to appear almost an instinct, it is a striking circumstance to see a prince of the blood royal, the uncle of a beloved Queen, and, at one time, the more than possible occupant of the throne of England, received, on his return to his native land, after years of absence, not with those rife sounds of gratulation and good-will which are wont to track royal footsteps. The vox populi must be indeed a fallacious oracle if there be not some cause for so strange an anomaly in national characteristics, and so unusual an evidence of national feeling. The strong impulse of universal loyalty cannot causelessly be universally repelled. It may be that indifference to the opinion of the multitude continually manifested has brought about the multitude's disregard. Of what value, as a corrective of evil, is public opinion, if it be a received doctrine that it is each man's duty or privilege to be indifferent to its expression? The man conscious of rectitude amidst the din of unappeasable hostility and the blastings of implacable envy may erect a tabernacle in his own breast, to retire to and be at peace; but, it is his duty to society and himself not to provoke those manifestations, or suffer them to exist, while obvious and ordinary means for their prevention may be resorted to. Stoicism of this kind is a delusion which all ought to discountenance, and has its origin in a pride which a press, having any object beyond that of partisan attainment, ought not to hesitate to denounce. A more striking subject, for its exemplification, than the present, we believe, could not occur.

The subject of our observations is unquestionably the most unpopular man of his day, and yet his gallantry as a soldier, and kindness towards the few whom he considers his friends, are unquestioned. We subjoin a memoir of the principal events of his military, or official career. He was born on the 5th of June, 1771, and spent the years of his infancy and early education at Kew, together with his younger brothers, the Dukes of Sussex and Cambridge. The tutors of the princes were Mr. Cookson and Dr. Hughes, the latter of whom died only a few years since, having recorded his opinion nearly half a century ago, that Prince Ernest was one of the best Latin scholars he knew, and in general a boy of great aptitude and vigour of mind.

In 1786 the three royal brothers were sent to Gottingen to finish their studies, and remained there till 1790, under General Malortie, as their joint governor. In 1790 Prince Ernest entered the army, and served in the 9th Hanoverian Light Dragoons, and was raised to the command of the regiment in 1793. In the year following he was appointed to the command of the first brigade of cavalry, in charge of the outposts of Marshal Walmoden's army, and distinguished himself as a soldier by his gallantry and good conduct in the field. Early in the campaign of 1794, in an encounter with the enemy near Tournay, he was severely wounded in the arm, and lost his left eye, and in consequence of these wounds was obliged to return to England; but, on being partially restored to health, he hastened to rejoin the army in November of the same year, again to share its toils and dangers. His Majesty took part in the sortie from Nimeguen; and afterwards commanded the rear-guard of the British force in the retreat through Holland, a post of great importance and difficulty. He was next left in command of the line of demarcation in Westphalia till the end of 1795, when peace being made between Prussia and France, the army retired into Hanover.

PORTRAIT OF THE KING OF HANOVER.

Having acquitted himself of the duties requisite upon this movement, he revisited his native country in 1796, and remained, without affording any incident for our sketch, till the 24th of April, 1799, in which year he was created Earl of Armagh and Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale, with a parliamentary endowment of £12,000 per annum. He was appointed to command the British cavalry in the expedition to the Helder; but in consequence of its failure that branch of the force did not disembark, nor afford its chief an opportunity of gathering laurels in war. After remaining for about six years in this country, during which time he held the command of the Severn and South West districts, his Majesty again went abroad and joined the Prussian army, then engaged in the prodigious struggle against Buonaparte. He was present at several of the great battles fought at this extraordinary epoch, and was a witness to the death of the celebrated Moreau. On the ultimate defeat of the enemy, and the disorder which ensued, his Majesty promptly availed himself of the existing state of things, and entering Hanover resumed the possession of that kingdom. This politic step had a very considerable effect upon the arrangements of Europe which ensued, and contributed much to promote the continental interests of Great Britain.

In 1815, after the terrible contest which had convulsed the world for five and thirty years had been brought to a victorious conclusion, his Majesty married at Strelitz the daughter of the Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh, and widow, first, of Prince Frederick Louis of Prussia, and secondly, of Frederick William, Prince of Solms Braunfels. He returned with his bride to England, and they were received at Carlton Palace, on the 29th of the following August, and at the gay court of the Regent the handsome and noble presence of the Duchess was the theme of universal admiration. His Majesty's elevation to the throne of Hanover, and his subsequent career are matters within the recollection of all our readers.

With regard to the political opinions of his Majesty we have nothing whatever to do. In 1817, when the parliamentary grants to his royal brothers were enlarged, the House of Commons made in his case an exception, and a majority decided against augmenting the revenue which he derived from the state.

Of the private character of the subject of our sketch there is much contradiction, and possibly much misrepresentation. A decision respecting it we leave to another tribunal. One thing is clear—and this brings us back to the line of observation with which we commenced—that no man ever took less pains to disarm hostility, or more uniformly selected unpopular positions. He mingled but as little as possible with the people, and rarely associated himself with them in the common promotion of those objects of benevolence which in this metropolis are so praiseworthily cultivated, and which afforded to his late royal brothers the means of conciliating so warmly in their favour the regards of the British public.

POPULAR PORTRAITS.—No. XXXIX.

DR. PUSEY.

We this week present our readers with a portrait of Edward Bouverie Pusey, Doctor of Divinity, Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. Active men of the world are apt to despise men of the cloister; but a memoir of Dr. Pusey, embracing only the last ten years, would exhibit the action of one mind producing, in comparative obscurity, results affecting the social condition of England, and which are, and must be, felt in Courts and Parliaments, as well as in the Church.

Dr. Pusey is a member of one of the most ancient families in the kingdom, a family known, by an interesting fact, to have been distinguished before the Roman Conquest. The name of Pusey will at once suggest to the antiquarian both the birth-place of Dr. Pusey and the antiquity of his family. The name is derived from the manor of Pusey, near Farringdon, Berkshire, the residence of Mr. Pusey, the member for Berkshire, who is as well known for his devotion to scientific agriculture as the subject of this notice is for his devotion to Patristic Theology. The manor of Pusey is held by the celebrated "Pusey Hunting Horn," which was presented to the family by Canute the Great, who so expressively rebuked the flattery of his courtiers upon the beach at Southampton. The horn is that of an ox, of a dark-brown colour; and by its production the manor was recovered in the reign of James II.

Dr. Pusey was elected to his Canonry of Christ Church from Oriel College, of which he was a fellow; but at that period his opinions were altogether opposed to those now held and taught by him. In an admirable work, published in 1828, after a visit to Germany, he vindicated the distinguishing opinion of the Reformers, that "Scripture is the only authoritative source of Christian knowledge;" and quoted approvingly the language of Müller, in speaking of the four dumb church idols—"the Font, the Pulpit, the Confessional, and the Communion Table."

It is impossible not to wonder at the contrast which Mr. Pusey, thus speaking, presents to Dr. Pusey, sentenced to two years' silence by the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, for having, a month since, preached sacramental efficacy, consubstantiation, and the doctrine of the cross, in the pulpit of Christ Church, Oxford.

The events of the past week have rendered a sketch of the founder of a wide-spread "heresy" more valuable than it would otherwise have been, as the fiat of the heads of the university has interdicted him from public preaching for two years. The reader then can have no hope of seeing, hearing, and judging for himself; but we will ask him to go back with us to what he might have seen but a short time since—the appearance of Dr. Pusey in the pulpit of Christ Church Cathedral—an event of no small interest in Oxford. It is the 14th of May, and it is known that the Doctor is to preach; there is a throng to hear him, for he has many and zealous disciples; he is followed and worshipped as few men of our church have ever been followed. The interest he excites is not confined to men or to students; ladies, it is said, have been known to gaze for hours at the window of the room in which he was sitting, anxious to catch a glimpse of him; to esteem it a privilege to tread on the same flags of the same pavement he has trodden; and to crowd upon him in passing, that they might touch the hem of his garment! Many such are here now, mingled with a congregation which, though attentive and decorous, is not entirely influenced by a zeal that would pay a homage which, to us, seems rather unseemly either to give or receive. A little delay, for of course the reader came early to secure a good place, and the door admits two or three gowned officials, immediately following them comes Dr. Pusey himself, the observed of all observers. And what sort of man does the reader see? A reed shaken by the wind is scarcely less frail than that small, attenuated, meagre figure; he wears the usual black gown and scarlet hood, but no robes however ample can give breadth or effect to such a form. He stands perhaps five feet five inches in height, and at the first glance you would guess his age to be between fifty and sixty; on a second look, however, you would be inclined to doubt whether the effects of time have not been somewhat anticipated by intense mental application, by watchings, vigils, study and fleshly denials; all these tell sorely on the frame, and all these it is said he has endured, and does endure, for he is one of those men, whose

> Fiery mind, which, working out its way,
> Still frets the pigmy body to decay,
> And o'er-informs its tenement of clay.

DR. PUSEY.

There he is—the apostle of revived theology—self-collected, self-concentrated; heeding none, though remarked by all, he advances, with a slow and solemn step, up the aisle, his eyes fixed on the ground, and his chin bent upon his breast. His features are thin, and his skin, shrivelled and brown, makes his whole physique a strong contrast to many of the substantial forms which speak of the presence of other doctors of divinity. He is a perfect instance of the triumph of mind over matter. In him, as in Dr. Channing, and many others, intellect conquers all disadvantages. His brow is high and commanding—a very "dome of thought, a palace of the soul." A phrenologist would remark a deficiency in the reflective organs, but a most ample development of the faculties of veneration, hope, wonder, and ideality. Such is the outward man of Dr. Pusey. His preaching is that of a man thoroughly in earnest, and, when supported by ability and acquirements, in that consists the great danger, when the principles propounded are pernicious.

Dr. Pusey is not disposed to submit silently to the sentence of his superiors; he has written the following protest against their decision.

PROTEST.

Mr. Vice-Chancellor,—You will be assured that the following protest, which I feel it my duty to the church to deliver, is written with entire respect for your office, and without any imputation upon yourself individually.

I have stated to you, on different occasions, as opportunity offered, that I was at a loss to conceive what in my sermon could be construed into discordance with the formularies of our church; I have requested you to adopt that alternative in the statutes, which allows the accused a hearing; I have again and again requested that definite propositions, which were thought to be at variance with our formularies, should, according to the alternative in the statute, be proposed to me; I have declared repeatedly my entire assent, ex animo, to all the doctrinal statements of our church on this subject, and have, as far as I had opportunity, declared my sincere and entire consent to them individually; I have ground to think that, as no propositions out of my sermon have been exhibited to me as at variance with the doctrine of our church, so neither can they, but that I have been condemned either on a mistaken construction of my words, founded upon the doctrinal opinions of my judges, or on grounds distinct from the formularies of our church.

Under these circumstances, since the statute manifestly contemplates certain grave and definite instances of contrariety or discordance from the formularies of our church, I feel it my duty to protest against the late sentence against me as unstatutable as well as unjust.

I remain, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, your humble servant,
Ch. Ch. June 3, 1843. E. B. PUSEY.

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

We continue our illustrations of "the Secession," from original sketches, by an artist in the Scottish capital. First, is a portrait of

DR. CHALMERS,

First Moderator of the Free Presbyterian Assembly of the Church of Scotland. The reverend doctor, according to his biographers, officiated many years at Kilmeny, in Scotland. He has written several works of merit, but his fame has been chiefly established by his high powers of oratory. His preaching to his own congregation was so well spoken of that he was soon invited to Edinburgh, where he was allowed to be one of the most powerful and impressive speakers of the Kirk of Scotland. Dr. Chalmers has more than once visited London, and preached several times in the meetings of his persuasion; and, although he speaks with a very broad Scotch accent, he gave general satisfaction to crowded audiences. The Doctor resides in an elegant retreat at Burnt Island, opposite Edinburgh, on the Frith of Forth.

FIRST FREE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Next is a view of the exterior of the first Free Presbyterian Church of the Rev. Dr. Candlish, in the Lothian-road. The building is a neat and substantial structure, and is capable of accommodating about 1200 persons. It was first opened for service on Sunday, May 21.

LONDON: Printed by ROBERT PALMER (at the office of Palmer and Clayton), 10, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and published by WILLIAM LLOYD, at 198, Strand, where all communications are requested to be addressed.—SATURDAY, June 10, 1843.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 59.—Vol. II.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1843. [Sixpence.

OFFICE, 196, STRAND.

REPEAL OF THE UNION.

The words which proclaimed, that in the government of the British empire Sir Robert Peel's "chief difficulty would be Ireland," introduced a prophecy that was oracular of truth. Ireland, in a condition of agitation, has been the chief difficulty of his, and indeed of all administrations—and the amount of turbulence with which it is now stirred through all its heart, and in the very depths of its fiery spirit, has lately begun to colour that difficulty almost with an aspect of alarm. Ireland has suddenly become a political watchword. The latent and concentrated energies of her daring people have been stimulated into sudden and enthusiastic activity by a wild cry for repeal, loud, far-spread, simultaneously uttered, and bearing upon its wings defiance to all government in Ireland but self-government—to all law but the law which her liberator, with a native legislature, shall enact. And this fierce up-shouting for a separation from Great Britain has sprung up rapid as the flash that sweeps the lightning over the desert, and at the spell-bidding of a single man has found sounding echoes, not only in the hills, and woods, and vallies, but in thousands—nay millions of Irish hearts, that before nursed their ambition in silence, or were content to murmur only of their wrongs. The system which Catholic Emancipation took years to organize, has for Repeal of the Union grown large and powerful almost in a single day.

There has been an impetuosity, and yet an order, in the movements of the people unparalleled in the annals of peaceful revolution. They have placed themselves—or their spiritual teachers have placed them—their hearts, their hopes, their hands, their purses, and their glowing pride of nationality—all at the beck and bidding of O'Connell, who is using them vigorously, determinedly, with a bold, fixed, triumphant, though sometimes contemptuous and sneering indication of purpose—but who declares that he will only hold them for the peaceful consummation of that purpose—that is, as weapons to be held in terrorem rather than to be used. Men meet by hundreds of thousands—they march from city to city—they gather upon plain and plain—they listen to the speeches of their accepted patriots and priests—warm, glowing, violent, unscrupulous orations—and there is a blaze of agitation among them burning with an ardour—almost a fury—alike unbounded and unrepressed. One drop of oil—one promise of balm and hope—is shed from the lips of O'Connell upon this devouring flame, and its glare and madness cease; it is not quenched, but it quells itself back into the spark which lies and smoulders until he who struck it shall call it into burning life again. The finger of the liberator is raised in the storm, and all is peace; but, as Lord Lyndhurst pithily asked, will he raise it for peace always? and were he to raise it for war, would not Ireland be in open rebellion?

Raise it for war we do not think he will, nor do we dread open rebellion in the Sister Isle. We rely on the love of Ireland for our Queen—upon the loyalty which seems a natural ingredient in generous natures—upon the courage and resolution of a large portion of the owners of her soil—upon the more sober spirit of her merchants—upon the affection which the English people honestly entertain towards her—upon the depth of sympathy which this country has ever and truly felt in her grievances, and in any fair and legal remedies for their redress—but most of all upon the sense of necessity which must solemnly impress itself upon all British Governments, no matter of what party composed, for grappling, in a generous spirit, with the social ills of Ireland—for conciliating her people of all denominations—for sweeping away some of her most tormenting evils—for building up in her beautiful bosom new landmarks of hope. No English Government will dare neglect the condition of Ireland when the repeal turbulences shall, by blended kindness and firmness, be brought to subside.

But from the abstract question of "Repeal of the Union" we will not shrink; for the sake of Ireland we will meet it, nay, denounce it in the teeth. Our first reason for opposing it with marked decision is on account of its impossibility; our next and best, because we are convinced that its achieval would ruin the country in which its battle had been fought. Ireland—her own statesmen have proved it—has gained more in commerce, in wealth, in civilization, and general improvement since the Union than before. Collectively her people have progressed, and politically she has gained the great boon of Catholic Emancipation, and had her interests represented in England by a body of members, so strong as for years to determine the majorities in Parliament, and to decide the existence of party rule. We admit the continuance of many bitter grievances, of deep-seated injury, of culpable indifference and neglect, to all which we are alive with sorrow and indignation, and of which, honestly and energetically, we will urge the practical reform; but we deny that any such reform is to be found in a domestic Irish legislation, in an O'Connell government, which must keep unquelled the storm between Catholic and Protestant, landlord and tenant, on the soil—in a dismemberment of the general empire, so firmly and beautifully knit for the good of all—in an estrangement of Ireland from the English heart—in a destruction of strong social sympathies and fondly-endearing ties—in the uprousing of new jealousies and passions, the paralyzing of the energies of trade, and the total abandonment of the cherished hope that redundant English capital will, as soon as repose shall give any security for property, be exercised in improving the aspect, enriching the manufactures, and developing the fertility of the lovely soil of the shamrock, so that it might peacefully realize its character of—

First flower of the earth, and first gem of the sea.

Dearly do we love all the children of the soil of Erin. We may, therefore, even claim to love Repealers while we abhor repeal. So it is in a kind, respectful spirit that we would seek to reason them out of the winning madness of that false patriotism which has in it all the elements of an alluring chivalry, without one sober atom of worthiness or truth. We think that these monstrous repeal meetings are illegal, we believe them to be unjust, and we know that they will tend to delay the arrival of justice from the English shores. Much as O'Connell has done for Ireland, let him not mislead her after all. Let him not collect whole armies of devoted peasantry, and triumph in the "physical force" which they muster; "abundant," as he is ever telling them, "for the conquest of Europe"—"as well able to walk in order after a band as if they wore red coats, and as ready to obey their repeal wardens as if they were called sergeants and captains." This is not language either to intimidate England or settle Ireland: it only infatuates and deludes the people to whom it is addressed, and wakes regrets and anxieties in the minds of virtuous and peaceful men.

Ireland wants no repeal, she wants her grievances redressed from England—her other home; she wants suppression of religious and political agitation, a few fair boons granted her, and then, in one holy word—peace! Let the Government firmly but mildly, and without exasperation, put down the storm that is alive—let them lull it rather than force it into calm—let them simultaneously legislate here so as to conciliate the affections and the gratitude of her people—they will then fall away from their present infatuation, and with them the tree of repeal will have shed its blossoms; they will welcome a royal visit with the exuberance of joy and loyalty, and, instead of arms, phrenzy, and rebellion, we shall have order, happiness, and repose.

PROCESSION OF THE "TRINITY BOARD."

TRINITY MONDAY.

A more useful and important establishment for maritime affairs than that which is called the "Trinity Board" does not exist in England, and the value of the admirable services rendered is not confined to this country alone, but is experienced by all the civilized world possessed of a mercantile marine. The origin of this institution is of ancient date, for previous to the time of Henry VIII. we find mention made of a Trinity House, at Deptford Strond. It was composed of a company of seamen, authorised by the sovereign to take cognizance of "sea-marks," and to bring to punishment those who injured or destroyed them; and to this body, in a great measure, was entrusted the pilotage of the Thames. Henry VIII. was the first who collected what may be called, in reality, a royal navy; and, besides forming an admiralty and navy offices, &c., he incorporated the Trinity Company, by granting them a charter, which was confirmed by Edward VI., and also in the reign of Queen Mary. In 1538, Queen Elizabeth greatly extended the powers and jurisdiction of this company "for the improvement of navigation and the security of ships;" and it is recorded that during her reign "the masters, wardens, &c., were a company of the chiefest and most expert masters and governors of ships having the conduct of the Queen's Majesty's navy royal, and bound to foresee the good increase and maintenance of ships, and all kinds of men traded and brought up by water-craft, most meet for her Majesty's marine service." It was in this reign that the onerous duties of buoyage and beaconage, which had been invested in the Lord High Admiral, were given to this corporation "in trust for the maintenance of the widows and children of seamen, and to improve the government of ships and encourage navigation."

James I. granted a still further extension of their privileges, and authorized them to demand and receive certain tolls and duties from ships, &c., in consideration for the expenses of erecting and keeping in repair the sea marks, light-houses, &c., and to superintend the ballastage, buoyage, primage, and beaconage. Subsequent monarchs improved and ennobled the company; and in 1795 they erected the house on Tower-hill. Besides various other important obligations, the masters, wardens, &c., have to ascertain at certain periods the progress made in mathematics by the pupils of Christ's Hospital; to examine all masters of the royal navy as to their nautical qualifications; to prevent aliens from serving in English ships; to take cognizance of all affairs relative to merchant seamen; to clear the River Thames of shoals and accumulating banks; to ballast ships, &c., &c., for all which a handsome salary is paid.

The corporation at present consists of a master, four wardens, eight assistants, and eighteen elder brethren; the younger brethren are admitted without limit, and from amongst these the vacancies amongst the thirty-one elders are filled up. The members however, in the present day, are not confined to seamen, as numbers of civilians and even soldiers are admitted, the Duke of Wellington being the master; and it is a curious fact, that throughout the whole rule of this body, officers of the royal navy have generally been excluded, the maritime members being chiefly old commanders of East and West Indiamen, and masters who have served in the east country trade.

Once a year, on Trinity Monday, the corporation assemble at their house on Tower-hill, and then embark for the Trinity Ground at Deptford, to inspect the alms-houses, and keep up their charter. The annual festival took place on Monday last. The Duke of Wellington, as master, was in attendance as early as ten o'clock, but he did not embark with the corporation, who, at noon, repaired in official costume to the splendid barges that were laying at the Tower-stairs to receive them. The procession down the river presented a gorgeous appearance. First in advance were the boats of the deputy harbour-masters, Lieutenants Stone and Tucker, with their flags flying; next came the boat of the principal harbour-master, Captain Fisher, R.N. This was followed by a six-oared barge with a band of music, and carrying a union flag; then came a richly-gilt eight-oared barge, having in her bows the ancient flag of the Trinity Company (four ships of the olden time, borne quarterly); and to these succeeded five other gorgeous barges, bearing the flashing banner of the Lord High Admiral now carried by the Admiralty; a handsome barge, with the flag of Greenwich Hospital, came next; and the rear was closed by a Trinity row-boat—the whole flanked on either side by the galleys of the Thames police.

In this order they proceeded down the river, salutes being fired from the wharfs during their progress, and the shores, wherever a sight could be obtained, lined with spectators. The Trinity steam-yacht, decorated with flags, was lying off the King's Yard, at Deptford, and saluted as the barges passed; and it was at this moment that the view we have given was taken.

Having landed at the lower water gate, the body marched to the Trinity Hall, situated in the grounds of the alms-houses, where business was transacted, and then the whole repaired to the venerable church of St. Nicholas, where an appropriate sermon was delivered. About four o'clock the re-embarkation took place, and nothing could be finer than the scene as it crossed the river, the barges shooting abreast of Prince's-stairs, Rotherhithe, over to the London Docks. The spectators on the occasion of the morning display were much disappointed at not seeing the Duke of Wellington, who was absent from the procession.

In the evening a grand banquet was served up at the Trinity-house, at which the Duke of Wellington presided. Amongst the guests were the Duke of Buccleuch, Marquis of Bute, Marquis of Camden, Marquis of Douro, Earl of Haddington, First Lord of the Admiralty, Earl of Shaftesbury, Earl Minto, Viscount Lowther, Lord Wharncliffe, Lord Stanley, M.P.; Sir R. Peel, M.P.; Sir G. Murray, M.P.; Sir H. Hardinge, M.P.; Mr. W. E. Gladstone, M.P., Dr. Lushington (judge of the Admiralty Court); Capt. Gordon, R.N., Sir G. Seymour, R.N.; Sir J. A. Gordon, R.N.; Sir B. Martin, R.N., and many other distinguished members of both navy and army, as well as of the commercial world. The entertainment was upon a very superb scale, and the dining-hall was brilliantly illuminated.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.—(From our own Correspondent.)—PARIS, June 13.—Again we have rumours of a change of Ministers, and report goes so far as to name their successors. I feel, however, certain that the only Minister who will go out is Admiral Roussin, but who will replace him is yet unknown. It is not generally supposed that M. Salvandy will accept the portefeuille of the Marine and Colonies. Although the Ministers may remain in office, the majority in the Chamber of Deputies daily dwindles away, and, were it not for the Châteaux, it is more than probable they would be ere the close of the session in a minority. In public opinion they greatly lose ground, and really, with justice. They do everything they can to render themselves obnoxious to the nation by intimidating the people. The finances are in a most flourishing condition—are expended in a way the most profligate, and that, too, frequently without consulting the Chambers. At the present moment Marshal Soult, the Minister of War, is erecting on the Quai de Bercy a military bakehouse and flour-mill, composed of forty-six ovens, the expense of which will be upwards of ten mil lions of francs. It is proposed that, notwithstanding the immense bakehouse already erected by Marshal Soult on the Seine, the majority of the bread will be baked in this new building; but, at all events, under a constitutional government the Chambers ought to have been consulted. The people, always alive to their own security, pretend that the arsenal is preparing for a more intimate connexion of cavalry, one regiment of artillery, 3500 municipal guards, the pompiers, four companies of veterans, and two companies of gendarmes, in all 42,000 men and 6000 labourers' march of Paris twice or thrice a week. These, with the fortifications and the millions expended in enlarging the Fortress of Vincennes, are surely quite force enough to keep in awe the most turbulent population. The marshal thinks otherwise, and the Chambers will decide the question. On the other hand, the Ministers are seriously turning their attention to increase their commercial resources. China they fondly imagine offers to them a more profitable market, and an embassy on an extensive scale is now fitting out for that kingdom. The minister plenipotentiary is M. de Lagrenée, formerly minister in Greece. His suite will be composed of about thirty attachés, undoubtedly of a deputation from the Chamber of Commerce. The frigates La Syrène and La Charte are to carry out the embassy. M. de Lagrenée is a well-informed politician, possessing many judicious and great prudence. It is supposed that he will leave in about a month. Much cautery is also going on in Egypt, and great efforts are to be made to diminish British influence at the court of Mehemet Ali. The person selected for this delicate mission is M. Lesseps, of Barcelona celebrity: he goes to Alexandria as consul general. M. Fabvier has left for Greece.

Most curious news continues to reach us from Algiers. It is now said that Abdel Kader was seriously wounded in the thigh in the action of the 19th of May; private letters give this as certain, the official reports are silent. The French may gain battles, they may, in order to prove themselves to be the most civilised nation in the world, continue their ravages, destroy crops, and take unarmed populations prisoners, but thus much is beyond doubt, that the Arabs are the masters of the Arabians; they interfere with their administration of justice, and now with their education. It appears positive that sending the chief mufthi lately into France was a punishment for that purpose, whereby the young Arab.an schoolmasters to give their lessons in French to the young Mussulmen who frequent the Mahabibum (religious schools). As connected with Algeria, you cannot fail to remember the celebrated passage in the Journal des Débats, comparing the Duke d'Aumale to the Prince de Condé; the article was severely criticised by the London press; perhaps the remarks would have been less piquante had it been known—and I give it as positive—that the article was written by Louis Philippe, and sent by his majesty to the paper by Count Fleury; great allowance should be made for the feelings of a father, and Louis Philippe is a most excellent father—he doats on his children. On the receipt of the news of the marriage of the Prince de Joinville, the king read it aloud at the breakfast table; he was greatly agitated; the queen shed tears. The royal family leave shortly for the Château d'Eu, near to Dieppe, there to receive the Prince de Joinville and his illustrious bride; from thence they return to the Tuileries, where apartments have been prepared for the young couple near to the Pavilion Masson. The prince will be promoted to the rank of vice-admiral. All the royal family enjoy the most perfect health; the Duchess of Orleans continues to lead a most secluded life; in the deepest mourning, every Sunday, she prays for the repose of the soul of her late dearly beloved husband in the Protestant chapel, Rue des Bietres. The Princess Clementine and the Duke of Saxe-Cobourg will reach London the first week in July.

The affairs of Spain greatly occupy the attention of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and the telegraph are constantly at work. I inherited that unfortunate country many years, and from experience I am enabled to say, that unless its affairs can be aided by a foreign power, Espartero must triumph. So long as the army remains faithful to the Regent he has nothing to fear; besides, his great strength lies in the want of unanimity amongst the would-be factions heads, each of these patriots, like the renowned Abbé Sieyes, having a constitution ready cut and dried in each pocket. You may hear of risings in different districts of certain cities adhering to the pronunciamiento of Malaga: be assured the mass of the people and the army are opposed to a Lopez administration.

The camps for manœuvring, under the command in chief of the Duke de Nemours, having, as chief of the general staff, Colonel Perrot, will be composed as follows:—The Camp de Compiègne, under the immediate orders of Generals Anthonie de Saint Joseph and Loyré d'Arbonville; one brigade of cavalry, commanded by General Waldener de Freudenstein; two batteries of artillery, one company of engineers, and a detachment of gendarmerie. The Camp of Brittany, under the orders of Count Rumigny, will be composed of two brigades of infantry, commanded by Generals Boulle and Neumager; one brigade of cavalry, commanded by General Bremond; two batteries of artillery, one company of pioneers, and a detachment of gendarmerie.

It is said that an order has been issued by the Minister, that in future all the houses built in the Island of Guadaloupe shall be of iron instead of stone.

The Minister of the Interior has proposed to the Chambers to grant to the Director of the Italian Opera a subvention of 60,000f. (£2400) annually, and, in all probability, the proposition will be carried. This trifling sum has created great discussion in the Chambers, and it is said that, unless it be increased, it will be impossible to open the Italian Opera next season. The demand on a Government to pay a portion of the expenses of a theatre lies greatly against our French friends; but it is the custom of the Government; the people are fond of amusements, but do not like to pay their value. At Milan the Grand Duke gives 210,000 per year; at Venice, 4000 for the entire carnival (nine months); and 40,000 for that of Bologna during the same period. The subvention of the theatre of Vienna for six months is upwards of 20,000. The Governments of Madrid and Lisbon, when they can, largely contribute to the theatres; and the munificence of the Emperor Nicholas is proverbial. Englishmen, and Englishmen only, pay the full value of the amusements they partake of.

Rossini continues to lead a most retired life. Offers were lately made to him to bring out "La Donna del Lago" and "Semiramide," with new French translations, and place them under his immediate directions: the illustrious maestro declined, and the project has been abandoned. Donizetti, who is expected in Paris on the 15th of July, is the great favourite of the day. Donizetti is 45 years of age; he was born at Bergami, on the 25th of September, 1798. His first opera, "Enrico Conte de Borgogna," was brought out in the Theatre Saint Luca, of Venice, in 1819. Since that period this truly locomotive opera-fabricator has written at least one hundred—amongst others, sixteen for the Teatro San Carlo, five for Rome, eight for Milan, two for Florence, six for Venice, and I know not how many for Paris: has "Lauda di Chamouni" was written for the theatre of Vienna.

Dupres, after finishing his engagement in Bordeaux and one or two other provincial towns, leaves for England: he intends presenting himself at the Princess's Theatre, as Arnold, in "William Tell;" Rodrigo, in the "Lady of the Lake;" Robert, in "Maria;" and Ugo, in "Parisina." Owing to the indisposition of Chollet, Balfe's opera of the "Pit of Love" has been laid aside. It is now said that "Stradella," by Niedermeyer, will be brought out before "Les Martyrs," by Donizetti. "Don Sebastian" is in repetition, but must wait until after the Paris representation of "Les Huguenots."

Yesterday I was more than astonished on hearing a M. Fasano, an Italian, play a trio on the clarionet in a manner the most distinct. I must confess I would have discredited it had I been told it, but I heard the wonderful performance of M. Fasano. Lately a M. Vivier executed a quartette on the French horn; not having been at the concert, I regret to record you any account of what appeared to me to be fabulous. A Miss Louise Shurbel, not eight years of age, is creating great sensation as a pianiste; she is now making the tour of the provinces, and from thence goes to Germany. Report speaks highly of the Italian Opera at Marseilles: Ivanoff is engaged as first tenor. Mercadante's opera, "La Vestale," has met with great success at Ferrara. Meyerbeer Peri's opera, "Dinorè," was most enthusiastically received at Reggio, the principal characters were confided to Moriani and La Marra.

I have been favoured with the following anecdote of Paganini:—The day on which he gave a concert (1808) at Livourne, he put on a new pair of boots. On the road to the rooms a nail entered his right heel, and he appeared lame before the audience. He was in pain, but he laughed, the moment he was about to commence playing he upset the music-stands, and candles and music fell to the ground. The audience continued laughing. At length Paganini began, but at the first note one of his strings broke; the hilarity was now general—but Paganini remained calm and unconcerted, and actually played his most difficult concerto on three strings. This tour de force and his sang froid called forth the most enthusiastic bravoes, which lasted for some minutes.

Madame Montgolfier, widow of the celebrated aëronaut, is now 110 years of age; she is in the full enjoyment of all her faculties.

A mine of mercury has been discovered near to Toulouse; the French chemists will find it of great advantage, for that precious metal has advanced upwards of 100 per cent. within the last few years.

The weather throughout France has been and continues most dreadful; all the great rivers have overflown the banks, particularly the Rhone, Saone, and Isère. On the latter river the hay ricks are destroyed; in many places the hail which fell was as big as an egg. The damage done by the storms in the valleys of the Pyrenees has been very considerable. Here, in Paris, we are glad to get round the fire, and the umbrella-makers are reaping a most bountiful harvest.

A German, from Hesse Darmstadt, has grossly taken in the French Government; the fellow pretended that he could fabricate a congreve rocket capable of destroying a whole army. The Minister of War placed the fortress of Vincennes, with its well-supplied arsenal, at his disposal; he remained there feeding most luxuriously at the public expense, and then quietly the police have, however, caught hold of him, and he is now in durance vile.

Last week died one of the most celebrated French generals of the Republic and Empire, Count Denoüet. The count was at one time Governor of Martinique, and the Ionian Islands.

Bishop Luscombe left Paris this morning for Boulogne, Calais, Dunkirk, and St. Omer, on his tour of confirmation. The Rev. Dr. Wolff, a zealous man of missionary celebrity, is like to undertake the duty of an episcopal chapel, at Batignolles, near Paris.

The Marquis d'Aragon, one of the richest noblemen in France, lately made a present of 2200 and some rich relics of Napoleon to the famous surgeon Lisfranc, for setting his hip-joint.

As I anticipated, the countryman County, so unjustly accused and convicted at Tours, of cheating at cards, has, on a new trial, been acquitted by the tribunal of Orleans. The public prosecutor has, however, to the great astonishment of every one, appealed against the verdict, and poor County remains in prison.

There are in the Salpêtrière 1900 mad and epileptic women. On an average 567 mad women are yearly taken to that excellent establishment, of whom 271 are turned out cured!

Count Pahlen the Russian Ambassador to the court of the Tuileries, is expected next month in Paris.

On Monday last "La Juive" was performed for the 186th time at the Opera. Mademoiselle Mequillet was greatly applauded in the difficult character of Rachel.

The following artists have been decorated with the Legion of Honour—Messrs. Jouffroy (who is engaged on a bust of Napoleon for the city of Dijon), Thuilier, Monvoisin, Desmarquet, Gosse, St. Jean, and Jacquier.

The museum of the Louvre will be opened to the public on the 15th of the present month.

The races on Sunday, at Versailles, were again well attended; the Duke of Nemours and Montpensier were on the ground. The prize given by the society for the amelioration of race horses in France, 3000 francs, was most cleverly won by Governor, the property of M. A. de Rothschild. The prize given by the Consul-General, 1000 francs, was won easily by Rhinplastie, the property of Count d'Hedouville. The grand prize, given by the town of Versailles, 2400 francs, was won by Karaghouse, the property of M. Sabatier. The Porte-Maillot sweepstakes, 1000 francs, was won by Coquetiche, the property of Count Cambes. The Hedge stake, for 1200 francs, gentlemen riders, was won by Leporello, the property of Viscount Perregaux, and ridden by Mr. Gale.

A great quantity of wolves have made their appearance in Picardy, particularly in the neighbourhood of Montdidier.

FOUR O'CLOCK. Copy of a letter this instant received from Perpignan:—"A revolution has broken out at Barcelona; a Central Junta has been formed, composed of the Deputies and Alcaides. The Rando was published on the 6th of June. The captain and crew of the brig Isabella II., stationed in the roads of Tarragona, has joined the insurgents of Reuss. The general cry at Barcelona was, 'Muera Espartero!'"

SPAIN.—We have received Barcelona news of the 10th, Madrid news of the 7th, and even later. The disaffection of the regiments is confirmed. His vanguard deserted Zurlano, who was marching against Prim, and he was obliged to withdraw. Prim is master of South Catalonia.

The Barcelona Junta at Sabadell had declared their separation from the Madrid Government. It was not known what reasons the Regent would take, but it was feared that it was too late for him even to accept a Lopez cabinet.

The Morning Herald contains the following:—"We receive assurances from a most authentic quarter, that Queen Christina is attempting to turn the present movement in Spain to her favour. She has despatched emissaries and money to several parts of the Peninsula, and strong hopes are entertained by her partisans that the defeat of Espartero will terminate in their favour. We believe that Queen Christina miscalculates her advantages; and though there is a Carlist, a Moderado, and a Liberal party in Spain, there is no party in favour of the return of the ex Regent.

EGYPT.—Alexandria, May 24th.—The new Transit Company is now in full operation. This company has been established under the direct auspices and patronage of Mehemet Ali Pasha, who supplied the requisite funds, and granted them extraordinary privileges, as his highness was determined that the service, through his territories, should be conducted in a satisfactory way without the direct support of the Pasha; this would be impossible, as on occasions of emergency his highness only could instantly supply efficient aid of every kind.

Trade is in a very depressed state here, produce being held by the Pasha (who is the merchant-prince of Egypt) at much higher prices than the cotton and other goods would net in Europe. Therefore, the only sales much the Egyptian Government effect are to those parties who are its creditors, and are glad to get paid in any way they cannot get cash. There are now twenty vessels lying idle in our port, without freight, and little prospect of any, even at very low rates. House-rent and living are excessively dear, decidedly dearer than any other city of the Levant. It is the retailers, however, who must make the profits, as the merchants can scarcely obtain first cost and charges on importation.—From a Correspondent.

GREECE.—ATHENS, May 27.—The Greek metropolitan Bresthenes, Bishop of Sellasia, but long resident in this city, died here a few days ago, and was interred, within a few hours, with all the pomp and strange pageantry adopted by the Greek church on such occasions. The poor old man's corpse was dressed out in his robes, seated in the episcopal chair, with the mitre on his head, and a crosier in his hand, and in this way was paraded through all the principal streets of the city, the military band playing the dead march. What a beautiful contrast to all this was the recent unostentatious visit of the English Bishop of Gibraltar, on the occasion of his consecrating the new English Protestant church at Athens. The superb steam-vessel Talbot arrived here, on the 20th instant, from England with a full cargo and thirty passengers; and after embarking other passengers, she proceeded on to Smyrna and Constantinople. It is very much to be desired that these experimental voyages may lead to a permanent line of steamers being established between England, Greece, and Turkey.

King Otho remains in a sad suspense as to what the three allied powers will really do, to compel him to meet the national engagements towards them—respecting the guaranteed loan. They plainly say they will compel Greece to pay the interest; while King Otho hopes to escape by some way or other, saying he has not the means. From a Correspondent.

UNITED STATES.—ARRIVAL OF THE CALEDONIA.—Another of the usual rapid passages made by the North American mail steamers puts us in possession of American advices to the latest possible date. The Caledonia, Capt Lott, arrived at Liverpool on Thursday morning shortly before nine, having left Boston on the afternoon of the 1st inst., and Halifax on the 3rd. She brings intelligence of her consort, the Acadia, having reached Boston on the 1st inst., having made the outward passage to Halifax in 12½ days, including her call at Halifax, being one of the most rapid runs ever yet achieved. The Caledonia has brought over 64 passengers. We do not find any intelligence of importance, beyond what was received by the Great Western steamer last week. The subject of a commercial treaty still engrosses public attention. Mr. Webster was at Boston when the Caledonia left. The doctrines broached in Mr. Webster's Baltimore speech have made, and are continuing to make, a great impression throughout America.

CANADA.—The Canadian papers are still speculating upon the probable course of policy to be pursued by Sir Charles Metcalfe. The assembling of the colonial parliament will soon inform them of his views in the matter. In his replies to the addresses presented from different parts of the provinces we can find nothing that foreshadows any policy in the slightest degree. The remains of Sir Charles Bagot arrived at New York on the morning of the 30th ult., and were immediately taken on board the Warspite, which would soon leave for England, with Lady Bagot and family. Some extensive forgeries on Canadian banks had been discovered, the principal actor in which had made his escape into some South American district.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.—Letters from Hayti are to the 11th of May inclusive. They contain a proclamation, issued by the provisional government, in the name of the "sovereign people," anticipating a scarcity of provisions by reason of the diversion of the hands from the ordinary business of life, which are occupied in effecting the regeneration of their country; and with a view to alleviate the evil of which they have been the victims, through the calamities of war, conflagration, and earthquakes. By the 11th instant everything was going on well. The people were quiet, and anticipated immediate and beneficial results from the late revolution.

There is nothing of especial interest in the particulars from TEXAS or Mexico.

THE BRAZILS.—Her Majesty's packet Swift, Lieut. Douglas, arrived at Falmouth on Saturday night, from Rio de Janeiro April 23; Bahia, May 3; and Pernambuco, May 11. Orders for the steamer Imperador overtaking her at Bahia she was enabled to bring home dates of April 26th from Rio; and of the 12th from the River Plate. It is stated that the British commodore had warned off the Buenos Ayrean fleet from before Monte Video. The Belle Poule, Prince Joinville's frigate, was undergoing internal improvements to receive the intended bride. Arrangements are said to be in progress at Rio between the government there and that of France for a regular transmission of mails between the two countries direct. The arrival of the Emperor's bride was eagerly looked for. Accounts of affairs at Rio Grande are unchanged and unsatisfactory. The American ship England, from Matanzas and Havannah, whilst running in a gale of wind on the 8th instant, was thrown on her beam ends, and to right her her topmasts were cut away; she is leaky and has put in at Falmouth in distress.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Earl STANHOPE gave notice that on the second reading of the Canada Bill in their lordships' house, he would move a resolution that it be read a second time that day six months.—Lord CAMPBELL gave notice that he would next day move for copies of the letters addressed by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland to the various magistrates in that country who had been un-pensioned.—Some bills on the table were forwarded a stage, after which their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The attendance of members was very full, owing to the expected discussion on her Majesty's message. Some questions relating to the affairs of Scinde, the Scotch Church, and the dispersal of a meeting in Kerry, Ireland, having been asked and answered, Sir R. PEEL moved an address to her Majesty, thanking her for her most gracious message relative to the marriage of the Princess Augusta of Cambridge. To this he anticipated no objection, and he should afterwards move that the house should resolve itself into committee to take the message into consideration.—Mr. HUME moved an amendment, with the view of adding that the house should take the message into consideration with a due sense of the state of the country in its finances, its commercial concerns, and the distressed condition of a vast portion of the population.—Mr. WILLIAMS seconded the amendment.—Sir R. PEEL hoped that the hon. members would not persevere, as the motion only pledged the house to take the message into consideration, and in no way pledged hon. members to any subsequent course. He trusted that he would make his proposition, which, he flattered himself, would convince the hon. that Ministers were by no means indifferent to the present condition of the country.—Mr. MACKINNON hoped the hon. baronet would not press his motion.—After a few words from Mr. T. DUNCOMBE, Lord HOWICK suggested to the Government the propriety of only bringing forward its proposition on that evening, and giving some time for the words of one acquiesce, convinced as he was that the value of his proposition would depend more upon the manner in which it was acceded to by the house than by the force of numbers by which it might be carried.—Sir J. GRAHAM hoped that the course would be pursued, and that the right honourable baronet might be allowed to state the proposal of the Government.—On a division Mr. HUME's amendment was negatived by a majority of 276 to 32.—The house then went into committee, and Sir R. PEEL said that, in proposing to make a provision on the Princess Augusta, the Government had no intention of making any immediate call upon the boroughs of this country. It was the intention of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge to make provision for his daughter during his own lifetime; and he, therefore, only proposed a resolution that there was a probability to confer on the Princess Augusta an annuity of £3000 per annum, after the death of her father.—Mr. MACKINNON moved as an amendment, that the annuity should be reduced to £2000, which he contended was the utmost that her Royal Highness's marriage. Sir R. PEEL said that the proposed reduction was in fact an increase on the grant he moved for, inasmuch as it would commence immediately after the husband of the princess should have died.—In the committee,—After some discussion, Mr. MACKINNON withdrew his amendment.—Mr. WILLIAMS then adverted to the appointments held by the Duke of Cambridge, and also said that there was a liability to confer on the Princess Augusta, the father of present duke, who was already a pensioner on this country, and had been so fora period of 43 years. The sums paid to these German princes and princesses who were related to the royal family already amounted to £200 000 per annum. This fact and the distressed condition of the country justified him in opposing the grant.—Sir H. DOUGLAS supported the motion for a grant to the granddaughter of that monarch who had voluntarily surrendered the immense revenues of the crown to the control of Parliament.—Mr. HUME advocated the necessity of postponing the motion.—Sir R. PEEL said that as the discussion had been raised he could not consent to the postponement.—Lord HOWICK thought that in conformity with former precedent, the right hon. baronet ought to postpone the discussion.—Lord J. RUSSELL was of opinion that the discussion should go on as it had been commenced.—Sir R. PEEL, however, eventually consented to postpone the discussion until Wednesday.—Colonel RUSHBROOKE then moved a new writ for the borough of Sudbury.—Mr. TUFNELL moved, as an amendment, that leave be given to bring in a bill for effectual inquiry into bribery and corrupt practices said to exist in the borough of Sudbury, the inquiry which took place before the House of Lords having been who ly inadequate. He contended that it was unquestionable that the House of Commons could agree to the issue of a writ after having passed a bill to disfranchise the borough. He proposed it as the commissioners of inquiry should be empowered to go down to Sudbury, in order that the investigation might be thoroughly carried out.—Mr. C. W. WYNN said that the house would scarcely do its duty if it did not inquire fully into the whole case; and he would therefore move as an amendment that a committee should be appointed to inquire into the matters which led the House of Lords to throw out the bill for the disfranchisement of Sudbury.—Mr. TUFNELL withdrew his amendment to make room for that of Mr. WYNN.—Colonel RUSHBROOKE contended that the writ should be suspended for one month, which was agreed to.—On the motion for the house resolving itself into a committee of ways and means, Lord HOWICK moved an amendment, for the purpose of enabling the house on an early day in the next Session of Parliament, as related to the imposition of a duty on the exportation of coals. His object was to obtain a repeal of the duty imposed last year, which could not have been laid on for the purpose of economising our supply of coals, because it had been estimated that the coal fields of Durham and Northumberland would last for upwards of seventeen hundred years, without taking into account the supplies from Staffordshire and the other inland counties. As there was no fear of exhausting the supply, there was no reason why our shipping interests should be injured to the extent to which they were diminished by that measure. It had caused the trade to fall off one third, although that trade had some years previously increased ten-fold under the system of free trade. The right hon. bart. had estimated the produce from the coal duty at £200,000, but it had only produced £100,000, from which was to be deducted £12,000, the amount of the former duty. This miscalculation, however, was not the only evil, for he believed that the Treasury was a loser rather than a gainer by a measure which by its indirect operation affected every branch of trade in the kingdom.—Mr. GLADSTONE said the real question was, whether the finances of the country were in such a position as to permit the opening up of the discussion of the repeal of a duty the short experience of nine months was not sufficient to test the policy of this duty, which was not adopted until after the fullest consideration. The right honourable gentleman contended, at some length, that the duty was perfectly justifiable under the circumstances of the country, and that the estimates upon which Lord Howick had grounded his opposition to it were fallacious. The falling off in the exportation of coals, as shown by the noble lord, was only a falling off as compared with the trade of last year; but last year's trade was unnaturally swelled by the enormous exportation which took place in anticipation of the duty. He was not of opinion that the pressure on the shipping interest was to be attributed to this tax, but rather to the general depression in trade; nor did he think any case had been made out calling for the interference of the house.—Mr. H. HINDE, Lord HARRY VANE, and Mr. BELL supported the motion.—Sir G. CLERK contended that the tax had not depreciated the shipping and trading interests as was insisted upon by the noble lord.—Mr LABOUCHERE contended that the coal and spirit duties, which had been last year laid on, were wholly fallacies as measures of revenue, while they had inflicted great mischief on the shipping and other interests of the country. He should vote against the tax, because the evil it was producing was out of all proportion to the amount of revenue it brought in.—Sir R. PEEL reminded the house that there was still a deficit in the revenue to meet the expenditure, and they were not therefore in a position to listen to propositions for the reduction of taxes. With respect to the diminution of our export of coals to the United States, it was to be accounted for by the fact that those states had levied a duty of no less than 8s a ton on the importation of British coal. They had not sufficient experience to judge of the operation of the tax, and therefore hoped the house would support the Government in opposing the motion of the noble lord.—Mr. LIDDELL said that although in point of time he thought the motion of Lord Howick injudicious, yet he should give it his support.—The motion being put on a division, by 187 to 126, the house went into committee pro formâ and resumed.

The other orders of the day were then disposed of, and the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Duke of WELLINGTON moved that an address be presented to her Majesty, thanking her Majesty for her most gracious message respecting a provision for her Royal Highness the PRINCESS Augusta of Cambridge, and expressing their lordships' readiness to take into consideration any proposition which might be submitted to them.—Earl FORTESCUE expressed his satisfaction at the propriety of the message; but called attention to the marriages of the Duke of Sussex, who had left two children unprovided for, and for whom some provision ought to be made.—The Duke of WELLINGTON observed that the facts were only known to him as they were to the world generally, but at all events their case could not be considered in connection with the present motion.—The motion was then agreed to.—The Earl of ABERDEEN then moved the second reading of the bill for regulating the admission of ministers to benefices in the Church of Scotland.—The Earl of ROSSLYN opposed the second reading because not only was it not calculated to meet the present emergency, but that it also contained principles to which he could not accord his assent. The noble earl moved as an amendment, that the bill be read a third time that day six months.—Lord BROUGHAM had no doubt whatever of the sincerity and honesty of the seceders, but thought the course they had pursued very injudicious, for when they should begin to feel they would find that they had placed themselves in a state into acets; or, looking at the matter in another point of view, they would experience the difficulty, with the exception of some few popular preachers, of maintaining themselves and their families. He thought the noble earl was not calculated, as he had admitted, to conciliate the seceders, but it was calculated to gratify what remained of the church, and that gratification he was not disposed to give them by conferring upon them privileges heretofore exercised by other parties. The noble and learned lord then analyzed the provisions of the bill, which bill was not, he contended, consistent with the existing law.—The Earl of HADDINGTON opposed the bill, and said he could not see how the abuse of power could be more effectually guarded against by this bill.—Lord COTTENHAM opposed the bill, which went to confer upon the Church of Scotland that for which it had often struggled, but which it never yet possessed, for Parliament would never grant it.—The Lord CHANCELLOR advocated the second reading of the bill, on the ground of the state of affairs in Scotland, and hoped the objectionable portions of the bill might be remedied in committee.—Lord CAMPBELL thought that legislation of some kind was requisite, and he would, therefore, oppose the second reading of the bill, although it in its most materially altered in committee, he would oppose it in all its subsequent stages.—The Earl of ABERDEEN replied, after which the bill was read a second time, and their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. TUESDAY.

The Speaker took the chair at four o'clock. The Leamington Priors Improvement Bill was read a third time and passed.—Lord DALMENY moved the second reading of the Hallsteads and Langley Railway Bill.—Mr. HUME BIRCH opposed the second reading, on the ground that it would be most injurious to private property in the neighbourhood. He moved that the bill be read a second time that day six months.—Lord DALMENY supported the statements of the gallant major. The bill was not opposed by a majority of the landed proprietors.—Colonel WEMYSS said that this was a mere transfer of four or five miles, intended to benefit a few coal-owners, at the expense, and though he was one of them, and would share the profit, he felt bound, on principle, to oppose what he considered a flagrant job. (Hear, hear.)—The house divided.—For the second reading, 49; against it, 81; majority against the bill, 32.—Several private bills were forwarded in their respective stages.—Sir V. BLAKE gave notice of a motion, for Monday next, on the subject of the recent civil and military demonstrations in Ireland, for the purpose of knowing whether or not they were approved of by the house, and as he conceived that the subject was a matter of privilege, he trusted he should be permitted to have precedence with his motion.—Lord R. GROSVENOR asked the question of which he had given notice with regard to the interments in the precincts of towns. He wished to know in what manner the Government intended to proceed with respect to the bill before the house on this subject.—Sir J. GRAHAM said, having given his best attention to the bill, he was bound to say that he was not prepared to give it his support. (Hear, hear.) On the other hand, he would also say that the subject to which the noble lord had called his attention was one of very great importance, and, he was bound to add, one of very great delicacy and difficulty. He could not say Secretary of State, he could not say whether he should proceed with his bill or not. Whatever objection there might be to the details of the bill, he thought its principle ought to be adopted.—Lord J. RUSSELL moved, "That the house should resolve itself into a committee of the whole house to consider the laws relating to the importation of foreign grain." The noble lord contended that no class in the kingdom was satisfied with the law as it now stood, not even that of the agriculturist. The real cause was to be found in the depression of the manufacturing interest re-acting upon it. It ought to be clearly understood that it was utterly in possible to name any given amount of price in corn by legislation. As a great article of consumption it baffled all attempts to fix it at a steady rate of value. The sliding scale had been described by Mr. Canning as a measure which would prevent importation except at a particular period of the year, and that then it would come in like a deluge. During the greater part of the year, while prices were high, corn could not be admitted; but, just prior to the harvest, when the farmer was in anticipation of a good price for his produce, the deluge of foreign corn was poured in, and he found himself grievously disappointed. The blame of these inundations of corn was attributable to reckless speculators; but speculators, he hoped, there always would be; and if they were actuated by reckless, it was to be remembered that it was the law which made them so.—Mr. GLADSTONE said there appeared to be but little difference between the noble lord and himself as to the consideration to be attached to certain interests, but he entirely differed from him as to the propriety of disturbing those interests by proposing a new change in the Corn-laws before the recent one had had anything like a fair trial. He was of opinion that the present corn-law did not afford the same temptation as was given by the old law to import corn in a mass at a particular period of the year, as might be proved by a reference to the amounts of delivery. The great fluctuations of price under the old law could not be alleged against the present one, for under its operation there had been no sudden action on the currency—the effects of the Bank were full, while the complaints of the British shipowner had been removed.—It would be dishonourable on the part of the Government if it disturbed the virtual contract entered into with the agricultural body in passing of the existing law, and he would not be a party to unsettling throughout the country that it was not passed with any latent intention of repealing it. Nothing had yet occurred to justify a change, and notwithstanding the ostentatious attempts to alarm the public, the deposits of the country showed that a great portion of them were satisfied with the law as it now stood.—Mr. LABOUCHERE supported the motion of Lord John Russell, and regretted that a measure so recently passed as the sliding scale should have given rise, owing to the unsound principles on which it was based, to incessant agitation and a probability of indefinite change. Mr. HUME contended that protection was spoliation and injustice, and ought to be abolished. He declared there were any peculiar burdens on land. He objected alike to a sliding scale and a fixed duty, the latter being a fixed impediment to trade. He contended, for a totally free trade in corn.—Mr. WAKLEY was glad the fluctuations in corn in England had been less than in any country in Europe except Sweden. He denied that he advocated the corn-laws for the sake of the landed interest; and he believed that gentlemen reckless, it was from the agricultural population if the changes now called for were made.—Sir W. CLAY agreed with those who held that the corn-law could not remain in its present state. It crippled manufactures, and those should have given the class more interested in the immediate settlement of the question than the landowners themselves.—Colonel WOOD was opposed to a fixed duty. Let the present law be reconsidered or abolished.—Mr. ANSTEY, M.P. for Cambridge, said, it was idle to expect a return of prosperity without making a change—that was now inevitable.—Mr. Villiers would vote for the motion as a means of keeping the question open.—Sir Robert PEEL and the fluctuations in corn in England had been less than in any country in Europe except Sweden. He denied that he advocated the corn-laws for the sake of the landed interest; and he believed that gentlemen reckless, it was from the agricultural population if the changes now called for were made.—Sir W. CLAY agreed with those who held that the corn-law could not remain in its present state. It crippled manufactures, and those should have given the class more interested in the immediate settlement of the question than the landowners themselves.—Colonel WOOD was opposed to a fixed duty. Let the present law be reconsidered or abolished.—Mr. ANSTEY, M.P. for Cambridge, said, it was idle to expect a return of prosperity without making a change—that was now inevitable.—Mr. Villiers would vote for the motion as a means of keeping the question open.—Sir Robert PEEL said, that even if the motion of Lord John Russell should be carried, the noble lord could still have no hope that he could make any proposition in committee which would be agreed to by those who would support the motion for going into committee The differences between the advocates of a total repeal and of a fixed duty would then become at once apparent; and the whole proceeding, therefore, must necessarily terminate in nothing. He had no doubt but that the proposition of the noble lord would be moderate enough, but fixed it could not be according even to his own appreciation of future circumstances. The right hon. baronet replied seriatim to the chief arguments of the supporters of the motion, and said he considered the measure of last year a compromise between all the interests concerned, and which was asserted to by the noble lord who moved the motion of being adhered to. Believing that it was most mischievous to be constantly tampering with the corn-laws, and believing also that it was impossible that any settlement of the question could be arrived at in consequence of the motion of the noble lord, he should at once, in opposing the motion, avow his determination to maintain the law of last session.—Lord J. RUSSELL replied, and said that hope/anonymous success was no ground for not bringing forward such motions. If such a reason were admitted as valid, the questions of parliamentary reform and of Catholic emancipation never would have been carried. He grounded on the success of reform with far less support than he expected to receive on that occasion.—After a few words from Sir R. PEEL in explanation, the house divided, and the motion of Lord J. Russell was negatived by a majority of 94 to 10.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—WEDNESDAY.

The house did not sit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

Mr. HUME gave notice that on Tuesday week he would bring forward his motion respecting the discontinuance of the pension to the King of Hanover.—Mr. M. GIBSON asked if it was the intention of the Government to persevere with the Factories Bill and the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, a general feeling being prevalent that the former measure would be abandoned for the present session, and the latter postponed.—Sir J. GRAHAM said, what had taken place? Sir R. PEEL said that the postponements were attributable to the frequency of adjourned debates. His right hon. friend (Sir J. Graham) would make a statement on the subject of the Factories Bill to-morrow evening.—The house then resolved itself into committee on her Majesty's message, and Mr. HUME objected to the grant of a dowry to the Princess Augusta of Cambridge in private as well as public life, as compared with that of the other members of the royal family, was deserving of the admiration of the house. The royal family of Russia exceeded £700,000 per annum, exclusive of parks, palaces, &c., and this while the country was in almost a state of bankruptcy, for it was unable to meet its engagements.—Lord J. RUSSELL considered that the arrangements which had taken place? Sir R. PEEL said that the postponements were attributable to the frequency of adjourned debates. His right hon. friend (Sir J. Graham) would make a statement on the subject of the Factories Bill to-morrow evening.—The house then resolved itself into committee on her Majesty's message, and Mr. HUME objected to the grant of a dowry to the Princess Augusta of Cambridge in private as well as public life, as compared with that of the other members of the royal family, was deserving of the admiration of the house. The royal family of Russia exceeded £700,000 per annum, exclusive of parks, palaces, &c., and this while the country was in almost a state of bankruptcy, for it was unable to meet its engagements.—Lord J. RUSSELL considered that the arrangements which had taken place?

> That it is the opinion of this committee that the ample allowance granted for a lengthened period to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge should have enabled him to make provision for his children; and that it was neither wise nor just, in the present state of distress of the manufacturing and labouring classes of the community, to propose any grant for the said Royal Highness the Princess Augusta of Cambridge.

Mr. LIDDELL rose amidst loud cries of "Divide," and protested against the language and motion of the honourable member for Montrose.—Mr. R. INGLIS contended that the Crown had lost 47 millions, which sum the people had gained by the bargain which it had made with the Crown for the surrender of the Crown lands. Having thus lost the means of making such grants as the one before the house, the Crown had a right to look upon its means of making provisions such as the present, it was but reasonable that Parliament should be called upon to do so. This grant was no expension of the time to which the former grants applied, and he thought it was not unreasonable to give £3000 per annum to the granddaughter of a King. He thought, however, that the grant should not come into operation until after the ceasing of the pension to the Princess Sophia Charlotte Strelitz. Colonel Wood reminded the house that the name of the Duke of Cambridge was at the head of numerous charities in this country, and they should not therefore refuse this grant to his daughter.—Mr. WARD said that that reason was not allowed to apply in the case of the Duke of Sussex, when it was proposed that his income should be increased.—Sir R. PEEL said it was the wish of the Government to make the sum the house such a proposition as would be deemed reasonable by every honourable member. There could be no doubt but that the income of the Duke of Cambridge was a large one, but then the demands upon it for charitable purposes were also very large; and it was for the interests of the public that means should be given to enable royal princes to promote by their example the numerous charitable institutions by which the country abounded. The line was not in this case extended, and the house, therefore, in agreeing to this proposition would not be establishing a new precedent. Indeed, in the case of the Princess Sophia Charlotte Strelitz, on informing her Majesty that this pension might be equivalent to the sum of £6,0,0, he must say that if he had done so he feared her Majesty would not have ratified the unfriendly intimation (much like the high arithmetical authority of the hon. gentleman. (Increased laughter.)—Mr. HUME replied; and on a division the motion of the hon. member was defeated by a majority of 228 to 67.—The resolution in favour of the grant to the house agreed to, the house resumed, and the report was ordered to be brought up to-morrow. The other orders of the day were then disposed of, and the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS—THURSDAY.

The Lord CHANCELLOR having taken his seat on the Woolsack.—The Earl of ABERDEEN moved that the Committee on the Scotch Church be postponed till that day week.—Lord MONTEAGLE moved for certain returns connected with the union of parishes in Ireland, which, after a long conversation in which the Duke of WELLINGTON, the Marquis of LANSDOWNE and the Earl of RIPON, and the Earl of WICKLOW took a part, were ordered.—Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The Lords' amendments to the Thames Lastage and Billastage Bill were read and agreed to.—The Sunderland Roads Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Great North of England (Clarence and Hartlepool) Railway Bill was read a third time and passed.—An immense number of petitions against the educational clauses in the Factory Bill were presented; and after some desultory conversation relative to royal pensions, Sir J. GRAHAM said—I think it will be convenient to the house and the country if I now make an announcement, on the part of her Majesty's Government, with reference to the educational clauses in the Factory Bill. By the permission of the house I was allowed to propose certain extensive modifications in the original framing of the measure, which I hoped would obviate the objections which were stated on the part of the Dissenting body generally. In that hope I am bound to say I have been entirely disappointed. The objections have not been removed by the modifications which have been introduced. The opposition to the measure remains unabated; and, therefore, having given the subject the best cons deration, I have to announce to the house and to the country that we have come to the conclusion that it would be most consistent with our public duty not to press the educational clauses in the present session—(Cheers). If I might for one moment speak of myself, I am bound to say that I feel disappointed at this result. I have been accused of framing these clauses in a Sectarian spirit. I can assure the house that they were framed by me in a spirit entirely opposed to Sectarianism—(Hear, hear). I had hoped that it might have been possible to obtain general concurrence in a scheme of national education. I can assure the house that I never discharged a public duty with more sincerity, and perhaps pain, than in abandoning this clause, a course which I could not take without an apparent disrespect to my fellow-countrymen.—Sir J. GRAHAM, in reply to a question, said that he intended to take the County Courts Bill to-morrow; and with respect to the Eccles astical Courts Bill, it was the intention of the Government to proceed with it in its amended shape.—The house then went into the consideration of the Princess Augusta of Cambridge's annuity, and, after some opposition by Mr. HUME and Mr. Williams, the annuity was agreed to.—On the order of the day for the third reading of the Cork Corn Bill being read, Colonel SIBTHORP moved, as an amendment, that it be read that day six months.—The house divided—for the third reading, 150; for the amendment, 73; majority, 75. The bill was accordingly read a third time and passed.—On the motion to go into committee on the Arms (Ireland) bill, Mr. WYSE moved that it be referred to a select committee to inquire into the justice of its provisions.—Mr. BLEWITT seconded the amendment.—Lord ELIOT contended that the bill was substantially the same as that which had existed for fifty years.—Mr. WARD supported the amendment.—The Irish ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Mr. PIGOTT, Captain JONES, Captain BERKELEY, Mr. P. BOSWORTH, Mr. HUME, Lord DUNGANNON, Mr. ROSS, and Lord HOWICK took part in the discussion which followed, and on the motion of Mr. S CRAWFORD, the debate was adjourned.—The Grand Jury Presentments (Ireland) Bill was read a second time; committee on Monday.—The Ch Oaths Bill (Ireland) was read a third time and passed.—The Assessed was read a third time and passed.—The Sugar Duties Bill was read a second time; committee on Thursday.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

Their lordships met at the usual hour, but, with the exception of the presentation of a number of petitions, nothing worthy of notice took place. Their lordships adjourned over Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

After the presentation of a great number of petitions on various subjects, Mr. BLEWITT gave notice that he should, on Monday next, ask the members of her Majesty's Government whether, in their opinion, it was not inconsistent with the dignity of his Majesty the King of Hanover, that his Majesty, while filling a foreign throne, should have a seat in the British legislature.—On the motion for granting an annuity of £3000 a year to the Princess Augusta of Cambridge being made by Sir R. PEEL, Mr. HUME met the motion by a direct negative. The house then divided, when the numbers appeared—For the motion, 141; against it, 37; majority, 104.—The house then proceeded with the resumed debate of the Arms (Ireland) Bill.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

ROBBERIES.—At an early hour on Tuesday morning the shop of Mr. Smith, a hab rdasher, in High street, Hoxton, was discovered to have been robbed, the thieves having contrived to force the iron bar of the window and rake downone of the shutters—and breaking a pane of glass, they extracted three boxes filled with rbands, and other property, through the aperture. On the same morning, also, an alarm was given that the house of Mr. Ironside, in Westmoreland-place, Hoxton, had been robbed; a quantity of plate, consisting of spoons of various sizes, of the King's pattern, and marked "T. C. J." A window was broken, as if thieves had enter ed that way; but upon inspection of the place by the police, there was no appearance of a forcible entry from the outside, and a suspicion arose that some follower of the servant girls had committed the robbery.

FIRE AT A STATION-HOUSE OF THE FIRE ESTABLISHMENT.—About six o'Clock on Tuesday evening, considerable consternation took place in the Southwark-bridge-road, in consequence of a large body of flames being seen to issue from one of the chimneys of the engine-house of the London Fire Establishment. The alarm was occasioned from the close proximation to the house of Mr. Cooper's timber-yard, the livery-stables of Mr. May, and the ponce-station of the division of police. The men of the station instantly rushed for the purpose of rendering assistance to the brigade to work the engines, &c., but to their astonishment the doors of the engine-house were closed, and the engines, which are so promptly in action at other fires, were kept out of sight. The brigade were, however, observed to be most actively employed, by getting on the roof of the house, and pouring buckets of water down the chimney: this, with other measures adopted, was attended with speedy success.

RELICS OF WASHINGTON AND FRANKLIN.

Considerable interest has recently been excited in the United States, by the presentation to the American Government, through Congress, of the sword of George Washington and the staff of Benjamin Franklin. The ceremony is described by a correspondent at Washington as "one of the most impressive spectacles ever witnessed in the council of a nation." Occurring at a time when the opposing party of both houses of Congress were marked by fierce contention, it was beautiful to see how magically the bitter feelings of partisans were at once quelled, as the members of each house assembled like a band of brothers to receive these memorials of the hero and of the sage. This was more particularly manifested, when the venerable ex-president Adams rose, and moved the resolution of acceptance and thanks. The sword has been presented by Samuel T. Washington, of Kanawha, co. Virginia. The father of the donor was one of five nephews, to each of whom the illustrious Washington bequeathed a sword; [1] with an injunction (to use the words of his will), not to unsheathe them for the purpose of shedding blood, except it be for self-defence, or in defence of their country and its rights; and in the latter case, to keep them unsheathed and prefer falling with them in their hands, to the relinquishment thereof."

The father of the donor of these relics selected the sword presented to Congress, in preference to the others which were more splendid (particularly the costly one presented to the hero by Frederick the Great), because it was emphatically the weapon of Washington. It was constantly worn by Washington, from the time he was Colonel of the Virginia troops in Forbes's campaign against the French and Indians, throughout his whole military career. It is a plain couteau, or hanger, with a green ivory handle, mounted with silver. The guard is of the same metal, and formed of two serpents' heads. On one side of the guard is engraved the head of an animal resembling a wolf, surrounded with cannon. On the reverse is engraved an open helmet, encircled also with cannon. The scabbard is of leather, silver mounted, on the upper ward of which is engraved "J. Bailey, Fishkill." This name, together with the size of the scabbard, evidently too short for the blade, has induced the belief that this was not the original scabbard, but one belonging to another sword, which the disfigurations wearer presented into use during the exigencies of a campaign. As "Fishkill" was in those days too small a village for the manufactory of swords, the name must be that of a previous owner.

Attached to the sword is a buckskin belt, secured by a buckle and clasp, on which is engraved G. W., and between the letters the figures 1775. This belt is represented on the buckle sustaining the flags at the back of the sketch. At that date Washington was in his twenty-sixth year. It was just two years after the singularly defeat of General Braddock by the French and Indians. The blade of the sword has been somewhat ornamented, but the traces of it are nearly all effaced: the length of the entire sword is three feet.

The staff of Franklin, the fit companion of Washington's sword, is thus described in a codicil to the last will and testament of that philosopher and patriot:—"I give to my friend, Samuel Mather, a gold-headed walking-stick, with a are still in finely preserved relief. In the accompanying sketch the handle of the sword, and the head of the staff, preserve every detail of ornament.

RELICS OF WASHINGTON AND FRANKLIN.

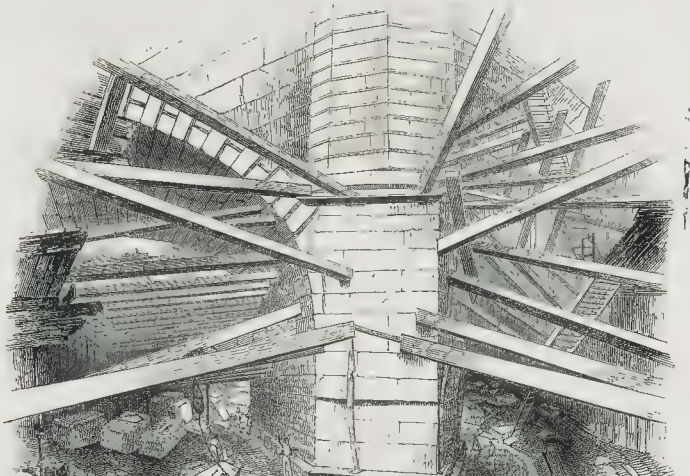
The following song, suggested by the eloquent remarks of Mr. Summers, on the presentation of the sword of Gen. Washington and the cane of Dr. Franklin to the Congress of the United States, was sung by Mr. Russell at his concerts in New York:—

The sword of the hero!
The staff of the sage!
Whose valour and wisdom
Are stamp'd on the age!
Time-hallow'd mementos
Of those who have riven
The sceptre from tyrants,
The lightning from heaven!

This weapon, oh Freedom!
Was drawn by thy son,
And it never was sheath'd
'Til the battle was won!
No stain of dishonour
Upon it we see!
'Twas never surrender'd—
Except to the free!

While Fame claims the hero
And patriot sage,
Their names to emblazon
On History's page,
No holier relics
Will liberty hoard,
Than FRANKLIN'S staff guarded
By WASHINGTON'S sword.

GEO. P. MORRIS.



COFFER DAM, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE.

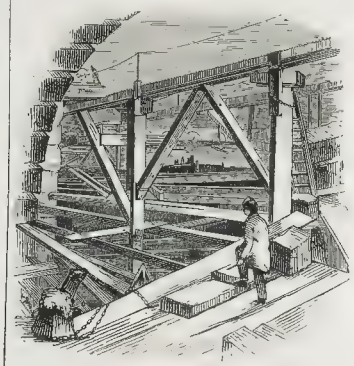
REPAIR OF WESTMINSTER BRIDGE.

The repair of this metropolitan bridge, commenced in the year 1838, is now hastening to completion; so that a glance at the cause of the defect in the structure, as well as at the means taken for its remedy, will, doubtless, be acceptable to our readers.

Westminster Bridge was designed by, and executed under the direction of, M. Labeyie, a Swiss architect and engineer of great celebrity, and he states the quantity of stone contained in the structure to be nearly double that employed in building St. Paul's Cathedral. The material is Portland stone. It was commenced in 1739 and completed in 1750. There are certain defects in its construction, which the better skill of the engineers of our day has enabled them to remedy. The piers, it seems, were originally built in caissons, and lowered to the bed of the river, without removing the stratum of gravel and sand; and the current becoming very strong since the removal of old London-bridge, by constant action it undermined the whole structure. Labeyie likewise neglected the precautionary measure of fixing sheet-piling round the piers, except in the case of four. The consequence of these constructive errors was a settlement of the various piers, attended with an extensive alteration of the original level of the arches and roadway; whilst, from the soft nature of the stone, such parts of the piers as are exposed to the action of the atmosphere, by the alternate rising and falling of the tide, have become much injured.

Mr. Walker, the eminent engineer, upon examining the foundation of the bridge, discovered that the edges of the caissons on which the piers of the arches were originally built, and which extended a short distance beyond the superincumbent masonry, had become undermined; and although (though, in some cases, sunk below their original level), yet that their projecting ends were forced upwards, and that the wash of the tide was hourly working under their edges, and thus rendering the foundation insecure.

To remedy this evil, Mr. Walker commenced by forming an extensive coffer-dam, by driving down two rows of piling into the clay below the gravelly bed of the river; and having done this, the whole of the gravel and clay between the inner and outer faces of the coffer-dam was excavated to a considerable depth below the level of the caissons. This excavation was then filled up with puddling, thus excluding the possibility of any leakage, either through or under the piling; and by which means was obtained a certainty of carrying on the work, not merely secure from occasional interruption by water, but in perfect dryness at all times. The coffer-dam being thus made secure, the whole of the water, gravel, sand, and soil between the inner face of the coffer-dam and the foundation of the piers, was removed to a level of three feet below that of the caissons themselves, which were left perfectly dry. To restore the foundation, Mr. Walker has surrounded all the piers, at a distance of six feet from the stone-work facing, with a series of piles of green beech, 15 feet long, their lower ends being driven many feet into the clay, and their upper extremities cut off flush at a level with the edge of the foundation. This range of piling has bolted on to it walling-pieces, at the distance of every two or three feet, the bolts extending through or under the piling being made fast to the bed of the caisson itself. The space between the inner piling and the caisson has then been filled up, withing a short distance of the top, with concrete, on which is laid squared masonry paving 18 inches in thickness, accurately fitted. The piers of the bridge themselves, on the southern side, are carried out, or extended, some 12 feet beyond the face of the original pier, and are based on platforms of wood, resting, at distances of three feet, on bearing-piles. The whole of the masonry is executed with Bramley-fall stone, cemented with pozzolano. The new stone facings of the piers average two feet in thickness, i.e., the headers are two feet six inches thick, and the stretchers one foot six inches, and they have dove-tailed joints. It will thus be seen that the outer edges of the caissons on which the pieces rest are completely surrounded and defended from the under-wash of the water, whilst the foundations are extended and rendered completely solid; first, by the beech piling, which, being at all times covered with water, and never exposed to alternations of wet and dry, may be supposed to be almost imperishable; and secondly, by the intervening concrete and stone covering.



COFFER DAM—FROM THE PLATFORM.

The under-surfaces of the piers and arches are being completely repaired, and, where necessary, faced with fresh stone-work, and all injured or unsound arch-stones replaced by new ones. In the first place, the diameter and form of the stone to be replaced having been determined by accurate measurement, three pieces of stone are prepared, which, when placed together, exactly correspond with the size of that to be displaced; the injured arch-stone is then cut out, and a large piece corresponding exactly with the lower portion of that removed—i. e., having its inner surface larger than its exposed face—is then laid in its place, but having upon its lower surface a projection or joggle fitting into a cavity in the lower stone on which it rests. The two upper portions, which are nearly perfect cubes, are then placed upon the top of the new stone, and are thus fastened to it—corresponding holes are made on the surface of the upper and lower stones; in the hole of the upper one is fixed a sort of slate bolt, kept from falling out by a string, and which keeps the end of it level with the surface of the stone in which it is eventually to enter. Upon this latter being put into its proper place, with the hole on its lower surface containing the bolt brought right over the corresponding hole in the lower stone, the string is cut, and the bolt let fall with its lower end into the under stone, and part of its upper end in the upper stone, thus accurately connecting the two. We are indebted for the substance of the preceding details to the Times.

The portions of this ingenious repair as yet executed are solid, substantial, and perfect, and may be quoted as specimens of good work. The cost will be very considerable, the amount of the contractor, Mr. W. Cubitt's tender in 1838, being £87,000. One of the greatest triumphs of the work was the successful closing of the second coffer-dam in 1841; indeed, it was a marvel in hydraulic engineering to find this dam (erected in a tidal river, with a rise and fall of 16 feet of water, and exposed to every trial of one of the severest winters on record), so completely resist the efforts of its most insidious adversary, that after the wear and tear of five months there was scarcely sufficient water from leakage to supply the ordinary demand of the works; and this too on ground that was declared unsuited for the purpose by the engineer who constructed the bridge, and by all who succeeded him up to the time when the present repairs were commenced. During their progress, several interesting relics have been discovered in the bed of the river; especially a Roman amphora, of great beauty, in the year 1841.

MARRIAGE OF THE PRINCE DE JOINVILLE.—By the latest accounts from the Brazils the approaching marriage of the Imperial Princess Donna Francisca with the Prince de Joinville was the all-absorbing topic of conversation. On the 19th of April Baron Langsdorff, the French special Ambassador, formally demanded her hand, in the following speech, in presence of the whole court:—"Sire, I come, in the name of the King, my august master, to demand of your Imperial Majesty the hand of her Imperial Highness the Princess Donna Francisca, your sister, for his Royal Highness the Prince de Joinville. Nothing will be more gratifying to the heart of the King, my master, than such an union, which will draw closer, not only the family bonds by which the two dynasties are already united, but also those of friendship, which unite the two countries. I venture to hope that your Majesty entertains the same sentiments. Having had the honour of being permitted to approach the sanctuary of his Majesty's family, when the pomp of sovereignty which now surrounds us is laid aside, I have found, sire, those private virtues, those affections, so amiable and so sweet, which France admires in the royal family which governs it. On being separated from a brother, who has watched, with the greatest love and anxiety, over the tender years of a beloved sister, the Princess Francisca (whose virtues recommend her to the love and respect of all the world) will go to reside in the bosom of that royal family whose sentiments are so sincere and generous; her happiness will only change places, and will receive, on accepting for her spouse one already celebrated by name, the guarantee of its permanency, which the eminent good qualities and the so charming virtues of his Royal Highness cannot fail to secure her." To which his Imperial Majesty graciously replied:—"I consent with all my heart, to an alliance which is so dear to me, and at which all Brazilians will rejoice. My sister, to whom you will please address yourself, will, I have no doubt, confirm what I have said, since we are all persuaded she will find in the affections of the royal family of France a consolation for the regret she must experience in quitting the country which gave her birth." The baron then addressed the Princess:—"Madame—The happiness of the Prince de Joinville will not be complete without your deigning to confirm the answer the Emperor, your august brother, has been pleased to give. It is from yourself that his Royal Highness wishes to obtain your hand. More favoured than princes in general, he has already had an opportunity of appreciating all the good qualities which distinguish your Imperial Highness." The Princess answered:—"Sir—It gives me great pleasure to confirm the reply of my august brother. I am confident that the attentions I shall receive from the members of the royal family of France will console me for the regret I shall feel in having left my native country, and a beloved brother and sister."

DANIEL WEBSTER.

This distinguished individual, who has just retired from the office of Foreign Secretary to the Government of the United States, was born on January 18, 1782, at Salisbury, in New Hampshire, his father being a respectable farmer, who bore arms with honour in the war of independence, and for many years filled the office of judge. At this period Salisbury, now the centre of a vast population, was on the extreme frontier of civilization. It was, therefore, in the midst of forests that Mr. Webster may be said to have passed his early years. He received the rudiments of education from his father, and in 1801 he entered the College of Dartmouth, where he completed his studies with great éclat. Having chosen the bar, he studied the practice of law, first in his native town, and next at Boston, where he was appointed advocate in 1805. After having practised for two years in a small village in the neighbourhood of his birthplace, Mr. Webster established himself at Portsmouth, the commercial capital of New Hampshire, where he acquired high reputation for his eloquence and ability.

In 1812, through the confidence of his fellow c tizens, he was nominated one of the representatives of the state of New Hampshire, in the lower chambeer of Congress, where, notwithstanding his early age (for he was scarcely 30), he made a striking début, and immediately took a part in all the most important discussions. The measures of the party who favoured the war between the Union and Great Britain, and who sought to establish a sort of conscription, found in Webster an intrepid adversary; whilst he supported to his utmost the plan of increasing the navy, and of fortifying the northern frontiers. In the question of the establishment of an united Bank in the midst of the difficulties which beset the United States at the close of the war, Mr. Webster displayed the knowledge and talent of the political economist and financier, combined with the brilliancy of the orator, and an ardent love of his country and her institutions.

In 1816 Mr. Webster was compelled to retire from the House of Representatives. He had lost much property in a fire, which, in 1813, consumed the town of Portsmouth; and his duties as a public man, so far from allowing him time to repair the losses which he had suffered, subjected him to considerable expense. He, therefore, retired from public life, and settled at Boston, where he has since resided. For eight years he applied himself so closely to his profession as firmly to refuse all political offers from his new fellow citizens. His success exceeded his expectations. His reputation for legal skill greatly extended itself: the circumstances of his retirement gained him confidence, and he soon ranked among the first jurists throughout the Union. Clear and simple narrative, great perspicuity, becoming gravity, an air of truth evidently from a heart full of the love of justice, these are the means by which Mr. Webster obtained an irresistible ascendancy over a jury, and, at length, all his fellow citizens.

In 1823 he re-entered the House of Representatives, and soon became one of its most popular speakers. In 1827 he was unanimously elected to a vacant office in the Senate; and in this new theatre his fame rapidly increased; and the services which he has rendered to his country and their constitution are deeply imprinted on the American nation.

PORTRAIT OF DANIEL WEBSTER.

As a statesman, Mr. Webster is worthy of rank with Jefferson, Hamilton, and Adams; and his administration of foreign affairs has been characterised by enlightened views, prudence, boldness, and reflection; all which qualifications were exercised in his recent negotiation of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States. Upon all the points of dispute on the Maine frontier question, the slave trade, and the mutual giving up of criminals, his language has been well fitted for the occasion, and especially for a republic seeking respect from the aristocracies of the Old World; and, upon all the above points, Lord Ashburton has acknowledged the high credit due to the American minister.

The principal speeches delivered by Mr. Webster in Congress and elsewhere were published a few years since at Boston; as his political discourses rank so highly as to be considered by the Americans to be "pages of the constitution."

Mr. Webster's physiognomy is strikingly characteristic of his active life. His dark eyes, though deeply sunk, have an irresistible brilliancy; and his large and thick black eyebrows are expressive of energy and decision. His manners are full of dignified simplicity, and his entire character is marked by modesty. He has been unjustly reproached with indolence and love of pleasure; for his whole life testifies that in the service of his country he is surpassed by none in disinterestedness and activity, and that he has in no instance sacrificed public affairs to his own enjoyment.

EXHIBITION AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

(Continued from page 340.)

249. "A Welsh Glen." T. Creswick.

> The meeting cliffs each deep sunk glen divides,
> The woods wild scattered clothe their ample sides.

A view of one of those retired mountain basins, where the gathered stream, wearied of "winding at its own sweet will," rests in a tranquility so profound, that the very sun-beams, as they struggle through an occasional crevice, seem to disturb the general serenity. Painted with a full brush in a pure and forcible manner.

252. "A Scene from 'Bombastes Furioso.'" J. Franklin.

> Army. He's but a general, damsel, I'm a king.
> Distaffina: Oh! sir, that makes it quite another thing.

Travesties, in a picture seldom, perhaps never, succeed; for like the spirit of broad jokes, the fun being essentially ephemeral, the pleasure derived from its contemplation very soon evaporates, and the thing becomes stale. For this reason we do not like Mr. Franklin's performance. It is very ably painted, and contains much strength of genuine comic humour, but this, in a permanent form, wearies and offends us. We want the actors to proceed to raise another and another laugh; but their drolls are stationary and not even suggestive of successors.

279. "Highland Cearnich defending a Pass." R. R. M'Ian. This picture is an acquisition to the national history; but it is, unfortunately, placed so much above the line of vision that no detailed account of its merits can be given. It is a scene of the civil wars, and, in its main incident, represents a Highland family and their followers in the act of discharging a huge granite block from the summit of a perpendicular cliff, at a moment when, in its descent, it may be calculated to deal death and wounds to some twenty or more of the Cromwellian leaders in the pass beneath. No particular story has been followed in its composition. In many Highland glens similar scenes took place, especially in a place called "Glencholm's Pass," between Strathglass and Glen Affrich, where four Caterans, or broken men, defended themselves against a powerful body of troops. But the spirit of all these desperate encounters has been gathered and embodied in the picture. The artist has described his "history" with great force, and with much truth of costume and character; but his colouring might be very greatly improved.

PORTRAIT OF THE H. S. ASHLEY PENSENEY. PAINTED BY E. LANDSEER, R.A. For description see ante p. 412.

HIGHLAND CEARNICH DEFENDING A PASS. PAINTED BY R. R. M'IAN.

237. "Waterloo, 18th June, 1815, half-past Seven o'clock, P.M." Sir W. Allan, R.A.

This picture represents the last desperate effort of Napoleon to force the left centre of the Allied Army, and turn their position. In the centre of the picture are several battalions of the Imperial Guard, formed into one massive column, led on by Marshal Ney, who, in endeavouring to ascend the rising grounds occupied by the British, is received in front by Captain Bolton's battery, while General Maitland's brigade of Guards attack the French on their right, and General Adams's brigade assail their left. This combined attack throws the head of the French column into irreparable confusion, perceiving which the Duke of Wellington, who with his staff is immediately behind Captain Bolton's battery, orders the general advance of the Allied Army, covered by a range of batteries seen on the right and left of the Duke's position. To the left of the duke is the village of Mont St. Jean, and that of Waterloo, of which the church spire is alone visible. In the distance is the forest of Soignes. The farm of La Haye Sainte is seen at the bottom of the slope, close to the road from Brussels to Genappe; a little above the farm house is the cross road to Wavres, and the hauge-row where, during the early part of the day, the battle raged furiously, and where Picton fell. In the neighbourhood of the farm, and along the line towards Planchenoit, the French are seen in full retreat. On the extreme left of the spectator the 33d Light Dragoons are driving back the French Cuirassiers from their final attempt to silence the guns at the north-east angle of Hougoumont, from whence the smoke is issuing, the chateau being then in flames. Beyond the smoke is the 71st Regiment, above which is seen the Nivelles road and the church of "Braine la Leude" in the extreme distance. Napoleon and his staff form the principal group in the foreground, comprising Soult, Bertrand, Drouet, Labedoyere, &c.

Louis XIV. would have given a dozen Vander Meulans for the painter of this picture; for in Sir William Allan he would have had a man who could paint the effects—the dreadful instinct of a battle, as well as the meretricious trappings of its general officers, and the tinsel glories of mere military victors. Here we are not confined to the idolatrous exhibition of one grand monarch twirling his truncheon at another; but we have a great conflict in its entireness—force against force—strategy against strategy. The actors are lost in the action—the French reserve, as the last representatives of the Imperial army, move sullenly on the British position, and are rece red with "admirable coolness" by the brigades of Maitland and Adams, who, flanking them with a terrific fire, the life of the enemy expires. In treating this great subject, the painter has used a grandeur of style for which we had not previously given him credit; he seems to have felt that the fame of Wellington rests on the small number of his battles, which, indeed, is less than those of any other great general; and that his fame for posterity is more moral than military in its nature. This feeling is made the governing principle of the picture: the horrible details of blood shedding, the heroic personalities of hand-to-hand slaughter, are suppressed, and the united effects made subject to the grand result—victory, complete and irreversible. Wellington's general order to the allied armies to advance is felt to be the proclamation of peace to Europe—peace to the world.

The plan of the battle appears to have been most carefully studied, and it has consequently all the accuracy of a map combined with the life and beauty of a picture. The colouring is perhaps the only element of the picture in which improvement could have been desired, as we conceive it to be cold and leaden in the distances, and greatly deficient in variety and strength in its middle ground: the somewhat garish foreground groups of Napoleon and his staff require a distribution of colour which should give them a more manifest union with the rest of the scene. The picture has, we are glad to learn, been purchased for five hundred guineas by the Duke of Wellington.

409. "View on the river Medway." C. Stanfield, R.A. A scene near the Nore; several of England's wooden walls, new and "taut," but laid up in ordinary, waiting commissions, rock on the waters of the middle distance; the sea in furrows, driven by the double influence of tide and wind, rolls, wave over wave, in sprightly undulations. The natural fluency of the Stanfield's pencil in the delineation of marine subjects is familiar to all lovers of art, but, we believe, their admiration was never arrested by so beautiful and faultless a performance. It is painted in a clear, broad manner, free from mannerism, and true to nature.

412. "Evening." J. Creswick, A. "Day shuts," and peaceful and happy is its close. Like the tranquil scene which it portrays, the picture woos us to contemplation; and thus the painter's aim is accomplished. We regard this to be Mr. Creswick's finest work: it is painted very much in the manner of Sir George Beaumont's "Jacques," in the National Gallery; but while it equals it in feeling, it surpasses it by many degrees in the breadth and beauty of its execution.

416. "Scene from Moliere." C. R. Leslie, R.A. To catch a stray smile from the humour of the French comedy is, for an Englishman, no mean achievement; but to embody the fun of an entire scene is nothing less than a great victory, and this fame belongs to Mr. Leslie. This picture is admirably conceived and finely painted. M. Purgon's maledictions are really pregnant with the very miseries they imprecate.

432. "Sands of Mont St. Michel, Normandy." E. W. Cooke. In this picture, the desolate grève and the lazzaroni-like pecheurs of "the rock," form the foreground, while in the distance are spread the treacherous laves, bounded by Mont St. Michel and Tombelène. The subject is a grand one; but it is here treated with a tameness amounting to insipidity; the sublimity and romance of the briny deserts—once the fertile theme of the Norman minstrels—being made subservient to a cold, uneventful quietude. Mr. Cooke is a very able painter; but his fame will certainly not be enhanced by dealing with noble opportunities in a superficial manner.

553. "The Poor Teacher." R. Redgrave. Here we are called to contemplate the heart-breaking sorrows of a gentle being, left by the death of her natural protectors to struggle with the rough usages of a proud and pampered world. She is evidently a person who has seen, not merely better days, but who has lived and breathed in the atmosphere of a refined and elevated existence. From rank and station—from the graces, the pleasures, the intelligences of independence, she has been torn by misfortune; and with nothing left but the sad inheritance of a delicate spirit "tuned to her issues," sent to beg her bread as a humble teacher of the village poor. She had, however, one friend, upon his counsel she depended, and a large portion of her happiness was found in paying strict obedience to his advice; but even he has not been spared, death has bereft her of her last solace, and now, sad girl—she resigns herself to the meekness of a tearful unquestioning despair. With an honest, generous, sympathising world she would be equal to any struggle, but, under the meanness and baseness of its rebukes, she faints. Such is the pathetic subject of a picture which, we are free to say, has no equal in the range of domestic art in Britain. As a picture, its finish is marvellous, while its breath is in no degree frittered away or impaired.

Her reason crushed, her resignation dumb,

We have now concluded our review of the paintings of the exhibition; to which, for the furtherance of art, we have devoted more space than has ever yet been given by a public journal. We also take to ourselves the credit of being the first to attempt an illustration, by drawings made on the spot, of some of the principal pictures in the exhibition. This we have been enabled to do by the liberal consent and co-operation of the president and council of the Academy, and of the several artists concerned, to all of whom we tender our thanks and congratulations.

NOT ON THE HANGING COMMITTEE.

My painting tho' high in its art,
Is low in its place—more the pity;
The reason I quickly impart,
I'm not on the "hanging committee."

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 24th.

SUNDAY, June 18.—First Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 19.—William IV. died, 1837.
TUESDAY, 20.—Accession of Queen Victoria, 1837.
WEDNESDAY, 21.—Longest Day.
THURSDAY, 22.—Battle of Mcrat, 1476.
FRIDAY, 23.—Two Moons seen in London, 1679.
SATURDAY, 24.—Midsummer Day.

HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE JUNE 16.
Morning..... 35 minutes after 4 | Evening..... 56 minutes after 4

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"F. L. D."—We scarcely think the engraving referred to by our correspondent would help the cause.
"Old Mitre."—Had our correspondent been a regular subscriber he would have known that we have given two Supplements besides those charged.
"A Subscriber."—We believe the parties referred to are cousins.
"J. G. C. W."—If the circumstances be as stated, heavy damages might be obtained.
"Viator," and many others.—We are happy to receive their approval.
"S. B., Oct! — er, should be careful.
"W. P. M."—We do not remember to have received the plate; the portrait is ... at present, of sufficient interest.
"Richard" should apply to the publisher.
"Willie" is thanked; but an event of 1539 cannot be considered news.
"Charley Lop," Parse.—Apply to either of the principal bookseilers in Paris, who will supply the volumes of our journal.
"A Cricketer."—The case can have been played but little of late; but the suggestion may be useful.
"Our Native Land" will not suit.
"W. H. B." should write to the Income Tax Commissioners, and state to them the circumstances.
"Veritas."—We have not room.
"A. Taylor," C. New York, should get our print mounted.
"W. J. Z.," York.—Only original airs are adapted for our journal. Our last song, "The Forest Days," is by the author and composer of "The Brave Old Oak."
"Hockley," Newbury.—We believe he is not liable.
"S. S. L."—The subject is under our serious consideration.
"A Poor Tradesman."—The mode of proceeding depends upon the amount, which is not stated.
"Dei," Rio.—Declined.
"T. H. B."—The paper must be posted within seven days from its date.
"V."—Vol. II. will be completed on June 24; and a title page and index will be ready on July 1.
"C. R. C.," Nottingham.—The papers were not suited for our journal, and we do not undertake to return rejected articles.
"J. Stuart Worthyman" is thanked; his suggestions shall not be lost sight of.
"T. N. N." should apply to an assessor.
"Harrow Speeches."—The report did not reach us till our last day of publication.
"A. B.," Walderchare, should order that edition of our paper which leaves London by Saturday night's post.
"Inquirer," Stafford, had better apply to a respectable solicitor in his own neighbourhood, than have any communication with the society referred to.
"A Glasgow Subscriber" is thanked for his suggestions.
"C. A. R." should consult his banker.
"J. A. C. K." will find the origin of the Derby and Oaks in our account of Epsom Races last year.

Our correspondents "Mensa," "H. T.," and "Z. Z." are informed that the portrait of Dr. Chalmers was sketched from the life by Mr. Constable, of Edinburgh, and sent to us by Jas. Cawan, Esq., of the same place.

"Nasealon."—"The College Breakfast" is inadmissible.
"A New Subscriber."—Thanks for the subject suggested. Father Mathew has been engraved in our journal.
"Dunfries."—The portrait has not appeared; will our correspondent forward a sketch, or refer us to a print or picture?
"M. M.," Battersea.—We have already engraved several pictures in the present Exhibition. We think our correspondent's design scarcely practicable with useful effect.
"A Subscriber," Great Marlborough-street, is recommended to write to Mr. Webster, as we do not know the particulars of the scheme.
"L. H. L."—1. The Exhibition of the Royal Academy is at the National Gallery, Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross. 2. The charge of 2d. is correct.
"H. H. S." The marriage would be illegal.
"Ben," Ipswich.—The letters on the London post-mark is merely to ascertain, if required, the name of the officer who stamped the letters sent from the office on that day.
CHESS.—"W. C.," Constantinople.—Thanks for the problem; we shall be glad to hear from you again, early as possible.
Several chess correspondents shall be answered in our next.

Want of space this week compels us to postpone the Chapter of the Novel, also our Chess article.

 The Second Volume of this Journal, beautifully got up, with title-page, and an index upon a new and improved plan, will be published on the 1st of July.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1843.

A journal which enjoys the enviable distinction of being monopolized by all that large section of the lowest classes which thinks it no shame to be considered the reverse of respectable—a journal whose church is the tap-room—whose drawing-room is the stable-yard—whose religion is blasphemy—and whose strength is invective, has, for a series of years enjoyed that particular circulation which such qualifications were sure to acquire, and that peculiar influence among the low, the abandoned and the profligate, which no honest or respectable paper would either exercise or accept. For years it has been allowed to wallow alone in the filthier gutters of the community—no one wishing to follow it thither—no one emulating the luxury of its peculiar mud, or seeking to be patronized by its depraved readers. Unnoticed by the press generally, save by withering sneers of contempt for its low wretchedness; unnamed in controversy, and inconsequential in influence, it still held its army of readers, and it has not disbanded them yet. It is essentially the organ of the crime districts of England, and its circulation will always be proportioned to the existing amount of depravity in the land. It keeps its venom well set in the teeth of society, as a sort of retaliation upon families for preserving the morality of their servants by forbidding its perusal in any decent home. We repeat, however, that its circulation has been great, and that, in proportion to the foulness of its atmosphere, the insect has grown to swarm.

But suddenly the subject of newspaper diffusion took a new aspect—and the novelty was attributable to the production of this journal. The experiment of tempting the better taste of the people with pictured illustration into paths of reading which were at least sound, moral, and instructive—of putting the seal of art upon the honesty of politics and the authenticity of news, without making brutality a necessary ingredient of the one, or crime and misery the eternal pabulum of the other—succeeded to an extent which rejoiced the well-thinking, and disturbed the tranquillity of those who were afraid that their readers, much as they had endeavoured to corrupt them, were still possibly not bad enough to give unto the devil a soul-adherence, but might yet be converted to better principles after all. The respectable press—the Times, the Herald, the Post, and the host of high contemporaries of all grades of politics inspired us on, and crusaded against the reign of newspaper ruffianism by declaring it to be attacked in its vital essence by the success which this journal had attained—by its patronage from the richer, and its attractiveness to the poorer grades—the one class not only taking it itself, but recommending it to the other as a brighter and purer means of newspaper instruction than they had hitherto been accustomed to receive. Above all, the press, without one spark of jealousy, hoped that we should supersede the abomination and immorality by which it had been disgraced by the unblushing abandonment of its lowest and most vicious offshoots.

Bitterly, and with the writhing of the reptile, has the paper we have alluded to felt that we have done this. Hitherto, as it had been lowest in good repute—yet as it was the only organ of those whose repute was proverbially bad—it stood highest in circulation among the weekly journals. Suddenly, after only nine months of existence, it found the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS heading it in the prowess which was its darling boast. The Government Stamp Returns for December stood thus:—

The ——— (we prefer omitting the name of the paper)	225,000
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS	261,250
In favour of the NEWS	36,250

No sooner was this statement published than the "galled jade winced." There was a hullabaloo of invective—a charge of fraud—of the exercise of money-power—and every possible alternative of ingenuity to distort the Stamp Returns. To these attacks, to set ourselves right with the public, we made the following reply:—

"The ———, in its last number, attacked the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for its publication of the Government December Stamp Returns, which exhibited the unprecedented circulation of this paper, and which proved that we had progressed up to that circulation in the usual course of events. The ———, however, intimates that we had purchased stamps for the unworthy purpose of public deception, and stakes its veracity upon a prophecy (he is a poor logician who has to imagine data in the future, instead of taking them from the past) to the effect that the next returns from January to March (moved for before the ——— published its prophecy, and therefore beyond the reach of any money influence of ours) will show a great reduction in our circulation—a reduction, jeers our amusing prophet, to some 16,000 instead of 60,000. We join issue upon this point, and we leave it to wait the publication of the next returns."

Now we have waited till the next return; it was admitted that the time was passed when we could influence it, for Dr. Bowring had already moved for and obtained it when the ——— made its charge; the return is now published, and the result for March the month precisely corresponding with the December of the previous quarter, is—

The ———	275,000
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS	292,500
Excess in favour of this Journal . . .	17,500

Upon this more-and-more rate the great organ of public depravity makes a new onslaught, and will no doubt make a fresh one on the publication of every fresh stamp return; but as we have not named the paper now, so we shall not notice it again. It is loud in its demands for an average; and we will frankly state that we do not average the weekly sale of that journal, which, by saying that three or four years is the only test of newspaper circulation, puts us out of the pale of the experiment, because we have been little more than one year in existence. If we do not, however, fairly average more than any other journal in the empire, it is plainly because we can't—because we have no means of printing as many as we could supply. It is known to our readers that we have two new machines nearly prepared for working, and that, when they come into play, neither the low journal we have alluded to, nor any more respectable contemporary, can hope to compete in circulation with the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

We notice with some regret the retirement of Mr. Webster from the public councils of America, and with equal pleasure the report that the feeling in that country is beginning to harmonize with that gentleman's opinion of the advantages of a commercial treaty with this. Mr. Webster was nearly the most respected man in the United States. Nations that would not put faith in the more solemn engagements of his country would take his single word. His name was a tower of strength in the administration of public affairs, and it will shine brightly in the annals of American history. We hope his secession from office may be but temporary and brief. In another column we have introduced his portrait to our readers.

It is now more than ever incumbent on the Government of this country to watch with jealous care the progress of events in Spain. The condition of that land, so renowned in history, has long offered to the world the most deplorable of spectacles. Shorn of its ancient might, a prey to foreign insult and internal discords, her energies prostrate under the numerous influences of ignorance and superstition, she is but the bleeding carcase of that giant frame which once stretched the long arms of it power over two hemispheres, and has left memorials of its greatness on every continent. Time it is that the wounds which have so long galled her should at length be closed, that peace should revisit her shores, and that the enjoyment of good government and tranquility should afford scope for the calling forth of her magnificent resources, and at length restore her to her true position among European states.

The Government of the Regent has lately undergone a fresh attack of that chronic affection of change, whose disturbing forces have tried his administration so severely. In Spanish affairs mutation has long been a rule without exception. One Cabinet is hardly formed ere it falls, and is succeeded by another; the country has scant time to breathe from the shock of one agitation, ere some fresh cause of disturbance supervenes to distract and paralyze her energies. Split into hostile factions, which pursue one another with rancorous antipathy, no common bond of union has yet been found to knit together these discordant elements into one compact body. None, save that sword which the fortunate soldier who now guides her destinies is too honest and too patriotic to wield for the purpose of repressing the rage of party at the cannon's mouth, of the public liberties. In the late overthrow of the coalition formed by Lopez and his colleagues every friend of Spain has reason to rejoice. They appealed to no great national principles on which their tenure of office might rest with some assurance of stability and duration. Personal ambition and enmity were their watchwords; and their grand object was the wicked and unprincipled one of curtailing the authority of Espartero, the sole means by which, in the present divided state of feeling among Spaniards, any promise of maintaining peace and order is held out.

The new ministry of Becerra and Hoyos enters on its duties with greater prospect of permanence and usefulness than any that has been formed for some years. It possesses the favour of the Regent, and the great mass of the army; the sympathies and good wishes of the middle classes generally, tired of eternal contest and revolution; and the confidence and support of the population in most of the large towns. Its accession to power has been marked by several judicious measures: an amnesty for political offenders; the abolition of the tolls levied at the gates of towns, a most obnoxious tax on internal transit, and the declared intentions of the Government to abide by the spirit of the constitution in giving freedom to the press, and in declining to levy taxes which have not received legislative sanction, denotes a healing policy, and will themselves assuage some of the worst miseries by which Spain is afflicted. Insurrectionary movements of trifling importance have been suppressed at Malaga and elsewhere with an ease that shows that the strength of the Government is based on the good wishes of the people. But the new elections, consequent on the dissolution of the Cortes, will be a fresh fountain of discord, which foreign as well as domestic enemies will be sure to trouble. French intrigues are already actively at work, to profit by this new complication of affairs; and it is to the counteraction of these, and to the strengthening of the Regent's hands by all legitimate means, that the efforts of the British Cabinet should now be directed. If the present Administration be defeated in the coming struggle, there is too much reason to fear that their term of office may be brought to a premature close; as least it will linger on, divested of all the authority and privileges which can make it worth preserving. What, if this happens, is to follow? A new ministry formed under the influence of France, ever the inveterate opponent of Spanish independence and prosperity, which will consign the hand of Isabella, and with it the destines of Spain, to the disposal of Louis Philippe, unless this consummation should be averted by another war of succession, reviving the days of Marlborough and Anne. The statesmen of the Tuileries have already given signs, which cannot be mistaken, that this is the object at which they aim. Europe ought never to forget the arrogance which dictated the measure of sending a special envoy to all her capitals, to threaten war with France should Isabella II. espouse any prince but one of the Bourbon line. Should that event take place, Continental and British statesmen will alike have cause to rue the supineness by which alone it can be permitted; and the people of England will most assuredly exact a stern account from all who may contribute to such a result.

The City articles of the Post and Herald have called the attention of the commercial world to a company entitled the British Hollands Distillery Company, established for the distillation of Hollands in this country, which are said to combine the flavour of the Dutch Schiedam with the purest quality of spirit known either here or abroad. The question opened by the scheme is that of the encouragement of home manufacture—which, if not advantageous to the revenue, is at least greatly so to the community. It appears that the home produce can be sold at a price considerably under what is charged for duty upon the foreign spirit, and as Hollands are distilled from grain there can be no reason why—with benefit moreover to our agriculturists, it should not be as well distilled from English grain as from Dutch. The whole project of the company in question is likely to be immediately and acutely opposed, and this is well, as perhaps, teach us that even the revenue may be improved, as the consequence of the larger consumption causing the smaller duty, by increase, to exceed the sum derived from the larger duty on Schiedam.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Queen held a Court and Privy Council on Saturday afternoon at Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by Lady Portman, Lady Caroline Cocks, the Earl of Warwick, Colonel Buckley, and Sir E. Bowater, honoured the Italian Opera with their presence in the evening. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, attended by Lady Anna Maria Dawson, also honoured the Opera with her presence.

On Sunday morning the Queen and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the Royal suite, and the household, attended Divine service in the Chapel Royal, Buckingham Palace. The Queen Dowager attended Divine service in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent attended Divine service in the chapel in Kensington Palace. The Duchess of Cambridge, Prince George, and the Princesses Augusta and Mary, and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, attended Divine service in Grosvenor Chapel.

On Monday the Queen and Prince Albert took their accustomed early walk in the Royal Gardens, and an airing in the afternoon in an open barouche and four. The Royal dinner party in the evening included the Duchess of Kent, the Viscountess Canning, Hon. Miss Stanley, Hon. Miss Hamilton, Hon. Mrs. G. Campbell, the Earl of Liverpool, the Earl Delawarr, the Earl of Jersey, the Marquis of Exeter, Viscount Combermere, Earl of Beverley, Earl Jermyn, Right Hon. G. Dawson Damer, Lord Ernest Bruce, Lord Charles Wellesley, Lord George Lennox, Colonel Hall, and Sir George Anson. Her Majesty and Prince Albert afterwards went in State to honour Drury-lane Theatre with their presence. The Royal cortège left Buckingham Palace at ten minutes before seven o'clock. A party of the Royal Horse Guards escorted her Majesty from the Palace to the theatre. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent also went to Drury-lane Theatre, attended by Lady Anna Maria Dawson and Sir George Couper.

On Tuesday the Queen held a Chapter of the Most Ancient and Most Noble Order of the Thistle in Buckingham Palace. The Knights Brethren were robed in their magnificent mantles of green velvet, and also wore their collars. The Queen wore the mantle and insigns of the Order; Prince Albert also wore the mantle and insignia. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness having been conducted to the Chapter-room by the Lord Chamberlain and the Lord Steward, the Knights Brethren were introduced, attended by the officers of the Order. The Most Honourable John Marquis of Bute, and the Right Hon. William Earl of Mansfield were invested by her Majesty with the Collar and Jewel. The ceremony was performed in the usual solemn manner in the presence of the Ministers and Officers of State. A guard of honour of the Scots Fusilier Guards, with the band of the regiment, was on duty on the Palace-lawn. Her Majesty and Prince Albert honoured the Italian Opera with their presence in the evening. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent also honoured the performance of the Opera with her presence.

The Queen gave a grand dinner on Wednesday at Buckingham Palace. The company consisted of her Majesty the Queen Dowager, his Majesty the King of Hanover, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, their Royal Highnesses Prince Edward and Duchess of Cambridge and Prince George and the Princess Augusta, his Royal Highness the Crown Prince of Wurtemburg, the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, the Duchess of Buccleuch, the Countess Brownlow, Lady Anna Maria Dawson, Lady Caroline Legge, Lady Augusta Somerset, Count Kielmansegge, the Lord Chamberlain, the Earl of Aberdeen, the Earl of Haddington, the Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, Baron Falke, General Von Hattorf, Baron Maltzrtie, General Sir John Slade, the Earl Howe, Baron Knesebeck, Baron de Nanclery, Comte de Zeppelin, and Lord George Lennox. The band of the royal regiment of Horse Guards attended during dinner. Her Majesty had afterwards an evening party. The suite of state rooms were opened. The application of Professor Faraday's new solitaire tubes was applied to the small cut glass lustre in the vestibule, which was fitted up with eight gas-burners. The result of this system is the effectually carrying away all the burnt air and noxious products of combustion, and also an increase of light. Its effect was particularly pleasing, and added very much to the appearance of the lustre. The burners were surrounded with large ground globes and cut glasses.

THE KING OF HANOVER.—On Monday, a deputation, consisting of the clergy, magistrates, and principal inhabitants of the village and parish of New, Surrey, had an audience of his Majesty the King of Hanover, for the purpose of presenting an address agreed to at a numerous meeting of the inhabitants, assembled in vestry, expressive of the great pleasure they experienced at his Majesty's expense of the country during the late military short period. His Majesty returned a most gracious reply. His Majesty arrived at his residence in St. James's Palace on Tuesday, from Kew, and in the evening honoured the Earl and Countess Brownlow with his company at dinner, at their residence in Belgrave-square.

THE INTENDED ROYAL MARRIAGE.—The nuptials of her Royal Highness the Princess Augusta of Cambridge with the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz are, it is understood, now finally arranged to take place on Wednesday, the 28th instant.

BUCKINGHAM PALACE.—Some sensation has been created in the royal household by an order recently issued by command of her Majesty. It is well known that the Queen and Prince Albert are early risers, and that every morning at nine o'clock they invariably attend prayers, which are in the chapel in Buckingham Palace, at which the ladies and women of the bedchamber, maids of honour, and all the domestics are strictly enjoined to attend, excepting only those who are in what is termed "close waiting." On Sunday also it is expected that all the royal household attend divine service twice at the new chapel.

HER MAJESTY'S SUMMER EXCURSION TO THE COAST.—The contemplated visit of her Majesty to her Irish dominions, during the summer, accompanied by her illustrious consort, having been abandoned, in consequence of the alarming and excited state of the population of Ireland, it is now expected that the Sovereign and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, with (probably) their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the infant Princesses, may pay a second and an early visit to Walmer Castle, the official residence of his Grace the Duke of Wellington, the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. In the event of this arrangement being carried into effect, it is considered more than probable that the Royal Yacht and Albert yacht will be anchored off the castle during the Sovereign's sojourn at Walmer, in order that her Majesty and the Prince may take frequent excursions along the Kentish coast, and visit the ports of Dover, Deal, Margate, &c. by sea. Various and extensive alterations and improvements are being effected at Walmer Castle, nearly every portion of that ancient edifice being now undergoing embellishments and repairs. Several workmen have also been employed by the Ordnance Department to effect considerable improvements in other portions of the fortress. The long open stone passage, leading from the drawbridge to the principal entrance (which was enclosed during the visit of her Majesty, in November last, by means of the material composing the celebrated tent of Tippoo Saib, taken at the capture of Seringapatam) has been roofed in and glazed in, thus adding greatly to the comforts of the inmates of the Castle, and to the general improvement of the interior of the Lord Warden's residence.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

MONUMENT TO MILTON.—Considerable curiosity was created on Monday last in Watling-street by the erection of a tablet on the walls of All-hallows Church, to the memory of Milton, the poet. It bears as an inscription the following well-known lines:

> "Three poets, in three distinct ages born,
> Greece, Italy, and England did adorn:
> The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,
> The next in majesty: in both the last.
> The force of Nature could no further go,
> To make a third she join'd the former two.

"John Milton was born in Bread-street on the 9th of December, 1608, and was baptised in the parish church of All-hallows, Bread-street, on Tuesday, the 20th day of December, 1608."

We regret to announce the death of Thomas Brockelbank, Esq, which took place at his seat, Westcombe-park, near Greenwich, on Saturday last. Mr. Brockelbank had been all his life engaged in active business on the river Thames as a lighterman, barge-owner, timber merchant, and lastly, as managing director of the General Steam Navigation Company, a situation of great responsibility and importance. The deceased gentleman, in the course of a well spent life, amassed a large fortune, and has left a numerous family to inherit it. He was in his 69th year.

CATHOLIC INSTITUTE OF GREAT BRITAIN.—A very numerous meeting of this body was held at the Freemasons' Tavern on Monday last. Lord Camoys in the chair. The Chairman having addressed the meeting on the purposes for which the Institute had assembled, the report was read, after which, the Hon. W. Langdale moved the adoption of the report. He represented to the meeting the necessity for a vigorous cooperation in order to secure the permanent existence and stability of the Institute, and the success of the objects for which it had been established. It was a disgrace to the Catholics to witness the state of ignorance in which many of the children of the poorer classes belonging to that religion were allowed to remain. This arose from the deficiency of the funds at present devoted to the purposes of education, and he therefore hoped that the Catholics who were able to afford it would contribute liberally in order to enlarge those funds.—The Rev. Mr. O'Neil seconded the motion, which upon the adoption of the report, and it was carried unanimously.—The next resolution was proposed by the Hon. E. Petre, who complained of what he described as the unjust and tyrannical character of the educational provisions of the Bill. It was opposed to the principles of civil and religious liberty, and he trusted the Catholics of London would petition against those clauses. A petition against the amended Factory Bill was proposed by Mr. Bernard Burnett, which was seconded by the Rev. Mr. Sisk, and unanimously adopted. Several other speakers addressed the meeting, amongst whom were Mr P. Howard, the hon. member for Carlisle, who stated that it was his intention to oppose the future stages of the bill. The meeting then separated.

ANTI-SLAVERY CONVENTION.—The second anti-slavery convention was held on Tuesday in the hall of the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street. The convention was very numerously attended, and a large number of representatives of religious bodies of the United Kingdom, of America, and other parts of the world, was present.—In the absence of Joseph Sturge, the chair was taken by Samuel Gurney. Mr. Sturge read an affecting letter from the venerable advocate of abolition, in which he deeply regretted his bad health and infirmities prevented his personal attendance, and stating he had put down in writing what he had intended, as chairman of the convention, to read to that body. It was then unanimously decided that Mr. Clarkson's address should be entered upon the minutes.—Mr. Evan Morgan read the report of the proceedings consequent on the Anti-Slavery Convention of 1840, which, on the motion of the Rev. J. Burnett, was unanimously adopted. The convention then adjourned, but sat again in the evening, and finally adjourned until next day. A letter was read from Paris during the course of the morning, stating that the Anti-Slavery Society there had been most anxious to appoint one of their vice-presidents, M. Odillon Barrot, to represent them at the convention, but that his Parliamentary duties would prevent his attendance; and that M. Odillon Barrot sincerely regretted this, as he had previously promised to accompany him on the occasion.—The Duc de la Rochefoucaut d'Liancourt and M. Amadée Thayer, treasurer of that body, promised, however, to attend.—Second Day. The business of the Convention was resumed, on the minutes having been read. Mr. Richard Peck, in the absence of Mr. Samuel Gurney, being in the chair. After the minutes of Tuesday's proceedings had been read, and a few trifling amendments had been agreed to on the motion of the president, present proceeded to discuss the subject of the Creole and American slavery in general; and, on the motion of the Rev. J. Woodward, a sub-committee was appointed to take into their consideration—"The question of the Creole and the principles of national law involved therein, as well as that of the fugitive slaves from the United States of America to Canada and elsewhere, and to make a report thereon to the Convention at its earliest opportunity."

MEDICAL CHANGES.—Dr. Bright has resigned his office as senior physician at Guy's Hospital, and has been succeeded by Dr. Addison. Dr. Barlow and Dr. Rees, have been appointed physicians, and Dr. Golding Bird assistant physician, to the same hospital. At St. Thomas's Mr. M'Murdo has succeeded the late Mr. Tyrrell; and Mr. Guthrie has resigned the surgeoncy, at the Westminster Hospital, his resignation having been followed by that of Mr. H. Thompson, the assistant-surgeon, who has declared himself a candidate for the surgeoncy, and, from his relationship to the treasurer, and his connexions, will doubtless succeed. Mr. C. Guthrie, Mr. H. Phillips, Mr. Alcock, and Mr. Lucas are candidates for the assistant surgeoncy, which it is generally expected Mr. C. Guthrie, will obtain. The large number of governors that have been made recently will materially influence the elections. Mr. Guthrie has been appointed consulting surgeon to the hospital.

ASYLUM FOR FEMALE ORPHANS.—A General Court of the Governors of this institution was held on Monday, at the house in the Westminster Bridge-road, Lambeth, William Shadbolt, Esq., in the chair, when seven female orphans were elected on the funds of the institution.

GRAY'S-INN.—W. Cracroft Roke, Esq., was, on Wednesday, called to the degree of barrister-at-law, by the Honourable Society of Gray's-inn.

LINCOLN'S-INN.—The following gentlemen were called to the degree of barrister-at-law by the Honourable Society of Lincoln's-inn, on Wednesday, viz.:—Nathaniel Stainton, Esq., Charles William Wood, Esq., Charles Groom, Esq., Richard Bagally, Esq., and Henry White, Esq., B.C.L.

LONDON TEMPERATURE.—Up until Thursday last the degree of Fahrenheit in the shade had not exceeded 85, and the highest in the sun 87; whereas last June the shade register indicated 83, and the sun 121, exhibiting 38 and 34 degrees less this year than last; but the most extraordinary difference is in the mean daily average, which, during the 13 days, makes a variation of more than 9 degrees less in the shade, and 22 degrees diurnal diminution in the sun, than the averaged daily temperature of the corresponding days of last June

On Tuesday a bazaar was held at Denmark-hill, Camberwell, in behalf o the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. Owing to the unpropitious state of the weather few persons were present.

POSTSCRIPT.

Friday Evening.

The Queen and Prince Albert took their accustomed early walk on Thursday in the royal gardens at Buckingham Palace. Prince Albert rode out on horseback in the afternoon, attended by Sir E. Bowater. The royal dinner party included the Duchess of Kent, Lady A. M. Dawson, Colonel and Mrs. Damer, Mr. and Mrs. Anson, and the Rev. C. L. Courtenay. The Prince of Wales paid a visit to the King of Hanover at his residence in St. James's Palace. The Duke of Cambridge and Prince Frederick of Mecklenburg visited the King on Thursday. His Majesty honoured the Duke of Buckingham with his company at dinner. The Queen Dowager, attended by the ladies of her suite, took an airing on the same day in an open carriage.

The Duke of Cambridge, attended by Col. Keate, presided on Thursday evening at the dinner of St. Luke's Hospital, at the Albion.

A Cabinet Council was held on Thursday afternoon at the Foreign-office. The Council sat two hours and a half.

The Rev. T. A. Power, who left Ireland from Gibraltar, on his way hence by Malta to Rome, died suddenly in the steam-vessel from Naples to Civita Vecchia.

QUEEN'S PRISON.—Captain Hudson, R.N. (and not Lord Denman's nephew, as stated in our last) has been appointed keeper of the Queen's Prison. The salary is £800

On Wednesday a number of gentlemen of respectability assembled at dinner at the London Tavern, and presented a magnificent service of plate, which had been voted to Sir John and Lady Pirie, on the 1st of December, 1842, in testimony of the courteous, exemplary, and distinguished manner in which they sustained their high honours and discharged their important duties as Lord and Lady Mayoress of the City of London; Mr. Cotton, the Governor of the Bank of England, in the chair.

FORNASARI'S BENEFIT.—The most brilliant singer who has for many years made his début will take his benefit on Thursday next, at her Majesty's Theatre, and his talents well merit the most bumper house of the season. With great good taste Fornasari has chosen for his occasion the "Puritani," in which he first made his singular success. In addition to this the "Provas d'un Gran Seria" will be given, for the first time in four years, with a new ballet, "Ondine." This accumulated entertainment will embrace, within at a single exception, every member of the present superb operatic company and forms de ballet. It will also be the last time the "Beissario" can be given this season.

ANOTHER DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT LIVERPOOL.—On Thursday morning, about seven minutes past one o'clock, the policeman on duty in Crosshall-street, discovered that a fire had broken out in the outer room of Messrs. Thomas and Henry Croft's somgery in that street. In a few hours the premises were entirely destroyed. Such was the fury of the flames that the premises on the opposite side of the street were several times set on fire, but as quickly extinguished. They have been entirely preserved, though the inhabitants fled in terror, taking with them such of their goods as could be most easily removed. One or two of the tenements sustained damage from the fall of the front wall of the soapery, about half-past three o'clock. The back wall shortly afterwards, when the whole area presented a mass of blackened rubbish, amid which stood up the tall, ornamental chimneys, which were recently erected for the purpose of carrying off the smoke of the manufactory. The damage has been estimated from £14,000 to £18,000. The buildings is insured in the Sun Fire office for between £5000 and £7000, and the stock in the Phœnix for between £7000 and £8000. It is not known how the fire originated.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—NEW COURT.—EXTENSIVE ROBBERY OF DOUBLOONS.—On Thursday James Boon, a sea-faring man, was indicted for stealing 220 doubloons, value £715, the property of Philip Hart. upon the evidence, it appeared, from the statement of the prisoner, that the prisoner was a waiter in the Thames steamer, which, on her passage home, called at the island of St. Thomas, where a bag containing the above property was given to the purser. On arriving at Martinwood the money was missing, and it was subsequently found secreted between two beds. The prisoner was found guilty; he received an excellent character. The Common Serjeant said he thought it was a sudden temptation, and sentenced him to six months' imprisonment.

ROBBERY OF BANK-NOTES BY A CABMAN.—On Friday William Bradshaw, a cab-driver, was indicted for stealing ten £5 Bank of England notes, the property of the Rev. Alexander Murray.—The prosecutor stated that he resided at No. 7, Crescent, Clapham. On the 30th of May he received ten £5 Bank of England notes from the bank of Messrs. Coutts. He called the prisoner, and desired him to drive him to Camden-town; he, however, alighted at the York and Albany tavern, and had not left the cab more than five minutes before he missed the property. The notes were stopped at the Bank, and two of them were traced to the prisoner.—The jury found him Guilty, but strongly recommended him to mercy on the ground of sudden temptation. The Common Sergeant said he would take time to consider the verdict.

DISTRESSING CASE.—On Friday Louisa Sawyer was indicted for stealing one brooch, a ring, and an immense quantity of other valuable property, belonging to J. F. Chappel, her master, and other articles, the property of Elizabeth Maddison, in the same dwelling-house.—Mr. Bodkin prayed the court to allow the prisoner to plead guilty, which was granted, he (Mr. B.) said this was a very deplorable case. The prisoner was one of seven orphan children of a once respectable tradesman, and, although only nineteen, she had for several years lived in respectable service and down to this time conduct her character was unsullied. The prosecutor was anxious to recommend her to the merciful consideration of the court, inasmuch as she had been induced by a woman of desperate character to take a trifling article, and who, after getting her into her power, insisted on her following it up by taking the other property.—The prisoner was sentenced to five days' imprisonment.

OLD COURT.—On Friday William M. Brown, a highly-respectably dressed young man, pleaded guilty to having forged different bills, to the amount of near £2000 Baron Gurney deferred the sentence.—It is said that the prisoner's father keeps his carriage.

ASCOT RACES.—FRIDAY.—The Dinner Stakes of 100 sovs. each, h ft. Old mile. (12 Subs.) Mr. Wreford's c, by Bay Middleton, out of Margelina, walked over.

The Wokingham Stakes of 5 sovs. each, for three-yrs-old, &c. (Handicap.) Last three quarters of a mile. Lord Chesterfield's Dil-bar, 1; Lord Exeter's Alberic, 2; Mr. King's Dahlia, 3. Nine ran.

The Members' Plate of 50 sovs. added to a Sweepstakes of 10 sovs. each. Three quarters of a mile. Mr. Braithwaite's f Gaiety, by Touchstone, out of Golsbana's dam, 1; Lord Exeter's Antidote, 2; Mr. Booth's Donnybrook, 3. Six ran.

The Second Class of the Wokingham Stakes, of five sovs. each. Handicap. Mr. Jarvis's Promedary, 1; Lord Exeter's Wee Pet, 2; Mr. Treen's Temerity, 3. Nine ran.

Sweepstakes of ten sovs. each, for three-yrs-old, &c. Lord Lynedoch's Elegance filly, 1; Mr. Bates's Vitellius, 2; Mr. Kimber's Nyghau, 3. Two others ran.

The Selling Stakes of 5 sovs. each, and 50 added. Mr. Scott's Windsor, 1; Mr. Petit's Kinds and Odds, 2. Seven others ran.

FOREIGN.

SPAIN.—We have received the Madrid journals of the 7th, but they supply us with no news of interest. The capital was tranquil, but an excitement was evidently getting up against the Regent, and an attempt was making by a party to depose him, and establish a Junta, with what the faction would call National Guardians for the young Queen. Some of the Opposition journals say the Regent has applied to the British Ambassador for the intervention of England, and a story is told of the defection of a Spanish war steamer, and of a British ship having been sent in chase of her; but the account does not appear to us to be entitled to credit.

THE REAL RULER OF FRANCE.—"If it be true," says the Courrier Français, "that the apathy of the Ministry be such that it might be imagined they had resigned, the most incredible activity prevails at Neuilly. From morning till night there are conferences, councils, and receptions. In fact, it is calculated that, on an average, not less than 250 couriers or orderly dragoons bearing despatches pass through the palace gates every day."

ASCOT-HEATH RACES

ASCOT GRAND STAND.—THE RACE.

This year of 1843 — (what part of the year we know not how to call it, for just now it is certainly not summer, and there is a drizzling, Novemberish atmosphere about us which makes us doubt if it be June)—this year of 1843, we repeat, has been most unpropitious to the turf. In a double sense the Derby received a damper, partly in showers first, and partly in defaulters afterwards, and the winners have been haunting Tattersall's, like so many Canadian emigrants, in search of a settlement. The debtors, on the other hand, may be considered as having arrived in America already, upon the banks of the "Oh, I owe." Since then we have had Ascot water parties—the crowds beat by the weather—the worst drivers and the most delicate ladies obliged, in their crisis of difficulty, to take the rains—the sun, like the King of the French, confining himself to St. Cloud, and the light wine-bibbers, the moselle-mongers and champagne-quaffers obliged to swallow or take in the largest imaginable quantity of heavy wet. Drenching, drenching has been the order of the race days and race journies—drenching in the skies—drenching in the stables—drenching in the gutters—drenching by rail and road! The rains accompanied the trains—the horsemen ran faster than their horses—dresses became draggle-tails in drags, and many a man, whose forte was in his tilbury, would have given his riding-whip for a shelter in Tilbury Fort. Many people, in fact, were inconsistent enough to say of the race what the tippler at Offley's said of his short measure of brandy—that it was no go, and abstained accordingly. The sweating of the horses revived the ancient lawsuit of steam against team—the whips lamented their trips—and many a poor dragsman, without passengers, declared his coach to be all dickey; he had four-in-hand and that was all. On the courses, it was wetting against betting all day long.

But to our theme—Ascot.

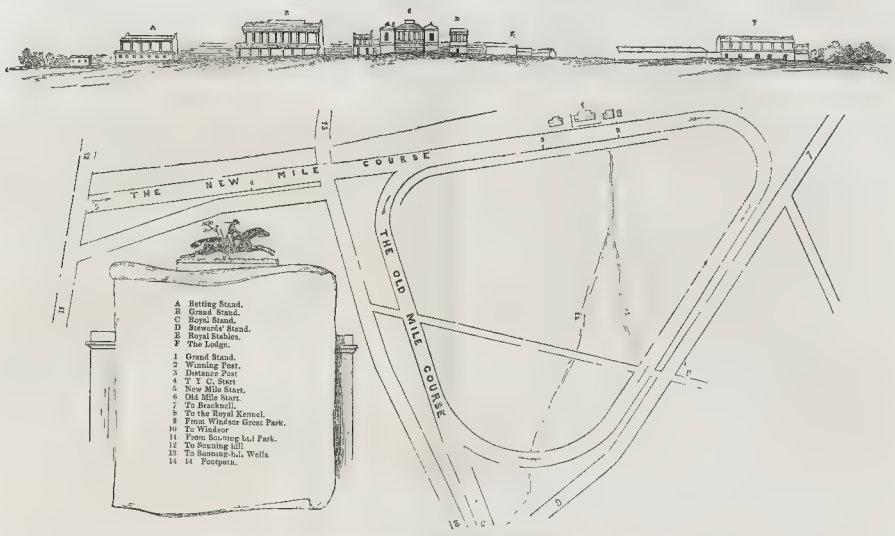
Who when the weather is fair, the sky smiling, and heart exultation at the full does not love Ascot—race of the nobility—race of the aristocracy—race of the Queen? What a beautiful course does it present! See our own plan, as well laid as any plot (of grass or treason); what a glorious assemblage of dashing equipages unfreighting their divine beauty—the patrician loveliness of England—at the Grand Stand! Look up—there is a gush of sunshine from that galaxy of smiles—there is fair hearty excitement beaming forth happy radiance upon all around, and harmonizing with the variegated picture. See that aristocratic promenade peopled with beautiful women during the intervals between the races. There are as many hearts as wagers won there. Then listen. The time for the Cup race is approaching,

ASCOT PLATE.

ROYAL HUNT CUP.

ASCOT CUP.

NEWSPAPER
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS



PLAN OF ASCOT-HEATH RACE COURSE.

and a bevy of royal carriages comes rolling upon the course. A dim indistinct murmur ushers them on from the distance—it gathers into a loud whirring agitating sound—it grows like the gathering of a passion—it has swollen into a mighty shout—"The Queen! the Queen!" There is a short silence—a brief interval of expectation—a rush of multitudes under the royal stand—a beautiful sovereign gallantly escorted by a young and honest husband, presents herself to her people, and in a moment the air rings with joy. That hearty burst of gladness would dissipate a year of pain. Thus it used to be, and thus it will be again, although our gracious Sovereign has made this year an exception to the condescending presence at Ascot which her subjects have been wont so fondly to enjoy. Those, however, who have seen her go of yore will find pleasure in catching even the reflex of her former journey upon our page. Her royal retinue, too, has ever added animation to the dazzling tableaux of the Ascot course. The Master of the Buck-hounds, the high official patrons of the turf—the huntsmen, the yeomen, all bedight in high costume or bright livery, have made a sprightly episode of the peopled landscape; and the mounted nobles—young bloods on fiery horses galloping from stand to carriage, from post to rung—have thrown striking elements of grace and beauty into the scene. At Ascot, too, the regulations are better than at Epsom—there is a wiser organization of police, a selectness about the visitors, an absence of riff-raff, and a less determined intrusion of the swell mob. In fact there is more brilliancy about the Ascot-heath races than any other hipppodromic exhibition we wot of, and we rejoice in the comme il faut ease and elegance by which they are universally pervaded.

THE ROYAL STAND.

So much for our general prestige in favour of Ascot. For the special doings of the present year we refer to the details accompanying our cuts, and we commend the reader to take interest in our group of jockeys, the stable or unstable portraiture which it displays, the flight of pigeons and the bird's-eye view which they and the reader may take together—which the pigeons, the pigeoners, and the pigeoned may inspect alike. We must find room, too, for the Cup and Plate, exquisite pieces of highly-wrought workmanship, and one of them — the modelled poem by Cotterill—a delicious gem of art. These we will honour with due description, giving the Queen's Cup precedence, as in duty and loyalty beholden and behoved.

As is customary at the present day, the prize is no longer a real cup, but its value remains though its form is changed. In this instance we have a splendid tazza or salver, containing in high relief an illustration of Schiller's poem "Pegasus im Yoche" (Pegasus in the yoke), moulded in silver after Chifney. Robinson. Wheatley. W. Scott.

JOCKEYS.

THE AERIAL COURIERS.

the designs of Mr. Edmund Cotterill. For the information of those who may not be familiar with the poem, we may mention that the story is an allegory, illustrative of the impossibility of taming down the fervid spirit of the true poet to the commonplace labours of the piqdding, work-a-day world, and is thus exemplified :—A starving poet resolved one day, for lack of bread, to sell the winged steed of the Muses, and brought him to the market. The steed neighed shrilly, and caracoled proudly—every one was lost in astonishment at his beauty, and broke out into loud exclamations of praise. "Das edle, könig-liche Thier!" The noble, the royal animal! "But," they added, "what a pity that his slender back should be shadowed by two ugly wings, he would otherwise have made a capital post-horse. The breed may be a rare one, but who wants to drive through the air?" with other like disparagements. One farmer, however, at last took courage; the wings, it is true, were of no use, but they could be tied down or cropped, and then the horse would be fit for draught; he was willing to lay out £20 on him, and the poet consenting he bought him for that money. The noble steed is now harnessed to a cart to try his mettle, and he whisks away with it at such a rate (very nearly upsetting it, however, at the edge of a precipice), that the farmer, thinking to save the work of two other horses, resolves to put him as leader to his team, observing, "Der Koller giebt sich mit den Jahren," in other words, "in time he will get used to the collar." But he reckons without his host, for Pegasus, true to his nature, dashes off at score, and dragging the waggon over flood and fell, never stops till he has landed it on the summit of a lofty mountain. The farmer is now at fault, but after long reflection, he at last hits upon the idea of subduing his energies by yoking him in the plough with his heaviest ox. Pegasus again tries, but this time in vain, to scour the country; his dull companion cannot emulate his speed, and the hippogriff loses heart; "Unwillig steigt der Grief" he refuses to stir, and casts himself upon the ground, leaving his unhappy owner to curse his bargain and belabour him with his whip. In this predicament a bright, fair-haired youth—Apollo himself—accosts the farmer and promises, if Pegasus be unyoked, to show him something wonderful. His proposal is accepted, and the youth laughing throws himself on the back of the steed, which no sooner feels the master's sure hand than he champs the bit and bounds with joy and pride. He is no longer the same being, he feels himself royal—a spirit—a god; he rushes eagerly upwards to heaven, and quicker than the eye can follow him he is lost in the depths of ether:—

Und eh' der Blick ihm folgen kann,
Entschwebt es in den blauen Höhen.

Mr. Cotterill has chosen the moment when, released from the yoke, the winged steed and his immortal guide are mounting to their skies, leaving the farmer Hans and his brute companion to ponder in stupid amazement. His Pegasus is a noble creature, full of fire and motion, and worthy the great German poet's eulogium, and the figure of Apollo is graceful and full of life. The vigour and animation which mark the god of light and his celestial courser are well contrasted with the Bœotian peasant and the dullard ox, and the climax of the story is altogether admirably told. The workmanship, in bright and frosted silver, is, as usual, very well executed; but comparing Mr. Cotterill's model with the cast, we find that the latter falls short of the original in several respects; a fact which is, no doubt, to be ascribed to the work being slightly hurried to be ready for the prescribed day. It is, however, a noble prize, and the winner has cause for congratulation. The manufacturers are Messrs. Garrard, of Panton-street, Haymarket.

Pass we now to

THE ASCOT CUPS FOR 1843.

Ascot is this year graced, in addition to the prize which we have described above, with works of unusual splendour, the Royal Hunt Cup and Ascot Cup, which have been executed by Messrs. Mortimer and Hunt, the eminent silversmiths, of New Bond-street. The Royal Hunt Cup is composed of a beautifully-finished group of a stag and dogs in silver, in the spirited style of Snyder, on a bronzed base, with which the silver forms a fine contrast. The stag, wounded by the rifle, is still struggling forward, pressed by the dogs behind. The artist has chosen the distressing moment when the stag is just sinking from exhaustion, and the dogs are about to seize their prey. The modelling is exquisite; the agony of the stag and the energy of the dogs are beautifully portrayed; and, as a piece of animal modelling, it cannot be surpassed.

The Ascot Cup is Herne's oak as now seen in Windsor Forest, surrounded with beautifully-modelled deer in various attitudes, by the same artist. The oak, which is well known, is quite dismantled by age; and the top is made to remove and be replaced by a rich falcon (adapted for lights), adorning it in primitive beauty. The well-known legend of this oak is told in Shakspere's well-known lines—

There is an old tale goes that Herne the Hunter,
Some time a keeper here in Windsor Forest,
Doth all the winter time, at still midnight,
Walk round about an oak.

The poet's conception is perfectly carried out.

Now may the reader plunge into all the details of the race.

The announcement last week, that for the first time since her accession, the races would not be honoured by the presence of the Queen, contributed, in some degree, to diminish the lustre of this far-famed meeting. The butterflies that exist only in a fashionable atmosphere, or under courtly influence, and those to whom a sight of the Sovereign is the "all and all" of Ascot, were deprived of a motive for looking on a pastime for which they have no feeling; unfortunately, too, the weather, in the early part of the week, was unpropitious in the extreme—the rain set in early on Monday, and continued without ceasing throughout the day. The approaches to the course were ankle deep in mud, and the course itself in a state that we have rarely seen equalled—worse it could not possibly have been. The jockeys had a wretched time of it; their jackets presented any colours but "colours of the riders"—their persons were drenched to the skin, and their features, on returning to scale, were anything but a feature to be very distinguishable; the ceremony of washing and scraping was quite as needful with them as with their horses; of those who were concerned in the day's proceedings, none had so much cause to rejoice when the last race for standing for the last race, and yet some will say that they get their money easily. As it is usual to speak of the "officers" on these occasions, we may state here that the meeting was under the superintendence of the Earl of Eglinton, Master of the Buckhounds, and the Stewards of the Jockey Club for the time being (Duke of Bedford, Hon. S. Byng, and Lord Stradbroke), Mr. Hibbard officiating as clerk, Mr. Clark as judge, and Mr. Charles Davis (the Queen's huntsman), as starter. A body of the police, under Superintendent Grunsell (L), and Inspector May (K), Partridge (A), and Diway (A), were useful in keeping order, preventing encroachment of property, and in clearing the course—the latter portion of their duties being rendered light of execution by the weather. Of the arrangements, too much cannot be said in praise; they were in all respects calculated to increase the comfort of the visiters, and to make the sport as good in reality as it looked upon paper. To afford every possible facility to those connected with the Press, a room in Messrs. Ryan's stand was appropriated to their use, a boon that we have never seen granted at any other meeting. The racing, as announced on Monday, commenced at one o'clock with:

The Trial Stakes.

Mr. Ford's Poison, by Plenipo, 3 yrs	(Bell)	1
Duke of Bedford's John o' Gaunt, 5 yrs	(Robinson)	2
Mr. Greer's Grace Darling, 3 yrs	(Loy)	3

Eight others started, but were not placed.

Betting.—5 to 2 agst St. Laurence, 4 to 1 agst Poison, 5 to 1 agst Ma Mie, 6 to 1 agst John o'Gaunt, 8 to 1 agst Grace Darling, and 20 to 1 agst Wee Pet. Ma Mie went away with the lead, which she retained for about a quarter of a mile only; St. Laurence took her place, and with John o' Gaunt in attendance made the running to the distance, where he gave up. Poison then passed John o' Gaunt, beat him at the stand, and ran in a very easy winner by two lengths, Grace Darling a bad third, and St. Laurence fourth; the others beaten off.

The St. James's Palace Stakes, of 100 sovs. each. (4 subs.)

Lord Westminster's c. by Touchstone	(Templeman)	1
Lord Exeter's c. by Beiram	(Darling)	2
Mr. Greer's b. by Bay Middleton out of Rosalie	(Nat)	3
Lord Jersey's c. by Sliane, out of Cobweb	(G. Edwards)	4

7 to 4 agst the Langdale colt, 2 to 1 agst Rosalie, and 3 to 1 against each of the others.

The Ascot Derby Stakes, of 50 sovs. each, for three-year-old colts. Swinley Course. (9 subs.)

Sir G. Heathcote's Amorino	(Chapple)	1

*By a "curious coincidence," the words of Schiller have a direct reference to the spot where the Queen's Cup has been manufactured. He says—

"Auf einem Pferdemarkt vielleicht zu Haymarket—
Wo andre Dinge noch in Waare sich verwandeln,
Bracht' einst ein hungrigen Poet,
Der Musen Ross, es zu verhandeln."

Mr. Thornhill's Elixir .. .. (Chifney) 2
General Wyndham's c. by Velocipede—Guerdon .. .. (Nat) 3
Lord Exeter's Czar .. .. (Darling) 4
.. Antidote (Galata c.) .. .. (Mann) 5

Even on Elixir, 5 to 2 agst Lord Exeter, and 7 to 2 agst Amorino. The favourite made the running, followed by the Guerdon colt and Lord Exeter's two, Amorino lying off; in making the last turn Antidote dropped off, and at the distance Amorino joined the three horses in front, of which, in a few strides, he took a slight lead; the run home was remarkably close, Amorino winning by a head, and Elixir beating the Guerdon colt for second by no more; Czar was an excellent fourth.

The Ascot Stakes.

Mr. Dawson's Teetotaller, 4 yrs, 7st 9lb.	(Riley)	1
Mr. Payne's Johnny, 6 yrs, 7st. 12lb.	(Nat)	2

African took the lead at starting, and, with Pannakeen, Ilions, and a host of light weights at his heels, went at a good pace to the top turn, where he was displaced by Ilions, who went on two lengths in advance, African second, Teetotaller and Ajax next, and nothing else near. At the Brick-kiln turn Teetotaller headed Ilions, and Johnny approached the leading horses, mending his position gradually, until, in making the last turn, he had passed everything but the leader; on him he waited to the stand, made his effort, failed, and was beaten by half a length; Ajax an indifferent third, Eaglesfield fourth, and everything else beaten off. Pannakeen dropt dead the moment he reached the judge's chair.

Match, 200 sovs. Last three quarters of a mile.

Mr. Ford's Sequidilla, 7st. 7lb.	(Nat)	1
Duke of Bedford's Oakley, 8st. 7lb.	(Robinson)	2

Betting, 7 to 4 on Oakley.—Won by half a length.

Sweepstakes of 200 sovs. each. (14 subs.)

Colonel Peel's Murat	(Chapple)	1
Lord G. Bentinck's Gaper	(Rogers)	2
Lord Chesterfield's New Brighton	(F. Butler)	3
Mr. Greville's Portumnus	(Nat)	4

Betting—Even and 6 to 5 agst Gaper, 5 to 2 agst Murat, and 4 to 1 agst New Brighton. Gaper started with a strong lead, and made play at a moderate speed for half a mile, and afterwards at a good pace, New Brighton lying in his wake, and the other two a couple of lengths in the rear. In making the last turn Portumnus gave up, Murat joined New Brighton, was with Gaper in a few strides, headed him at the stand, and won very cleverly by half a length; New Brighton a bad third.

The Gold Vase, given by her Majesty, added to a Sweepstakes of 20 sovs. each. Two miles. (14 subs.)

Colonel Charritie's Gorhambury, 3 yrs, 7 st. 7lb.	(J. Howlett)	1
Sir G. Heathcote's Sirikol, 3 yrs, 6 st. 13 lb. ..	(Chapple)	2

Betting—5 to 2 agst Charades the Twelfth, 3 to 1 agst St. Franc, 6 to 1 each agst Sirikol and Hyllus, 8 to 1 agst Gorhambury, and 10 to 1 agst Fakeaway. At the distance Gorhambury challenged Sirikol, and they ran a close race home, Gorhambury winning on the post by a head. The same pair, it will be recollected, ran second and third for the Derby.

The Windsor Town Plate of £250.

Mr. Wreford's b. f. by Camel, 3 yrs	(J. Howlett)	1

On Wednesday the first event decided was—

A Sweepstakes of 100 sovs. each.

Mr. W. Kimber's Neigbeu	(J. Day, jun)	1
Lord Orford's c. by St. Patrick, out of Mercy ..	(Nat)	2

The Coronation Stakes, of 100 sovs. each.

Sir G. Heathcote's La Stimata	(Chapple)	1

6 to 1 agst La Stimata.

The Swinley Stakes of 10 sovs. each.

Lord Exeter's Maria Diaz, 3 yrs	(Pettit)	1
Duke of Bedford's Eliza, allowed 5lb. 4 yrs	(E. Edwards)	2

5 to 4 on Eliza. The non-favourite took the lead, cut down her opponent off hand, and won as she liked.

The Produce Sweepstakes of 50 sovs.

Mr. Wreford's f. by Sultan Junior, allowed 3lb. ..	(J. Day, jun)	1
Col. Peel's c. by Touchstone, out of Vittoria, 3lb. ..	(Nat)	2

The Royal Hunt Cup of 200 sovs, added to a handicap of 10 sovs. each; for 3-yr olds and upwards. Old Mile. (43 subs.)

Lord Chesterfield's Knight of the Whistle, 5 yrs, 8st. 8lb.	(Nat)	1
Col. Peel's Garry Owen, 6yrs, 8st. 3lb.	(G. Edwards)	0

At the distance the Knight went away from his horses, and ran in an easy winner by three lengths. A dead heat for second between Garry Owen, Epaulette, and Bourra Tomasha; Mallard fifth, and behind him the rush. The pace was excellent.

THURSDAY.

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs. each, &c.

Colonel Peel's Mundig		1
Duke of Richmond's Elysium		2
Mr. Theobald's Highlander		3

The Queen's Plate of 100 guineas, for three yrs old, &c.

Lord Lowther's Sivertail colt		1
Mr. J. Day's Kate Kearney colt		2
Mr. Stephenson's Ma Mie		3
Colonel Charritie's Gander		4

The Mickleham Hall Stakes of 200 sovs. each, &c.

Lord Chesterfield's New Brighton		1
Lord G. Bentinck's Gaper		2

GOLD CUP.

Lord Albemarle's Ralph	(Robinson)	1
Mr. Petit's St. Francis		2
Lord Verulam's Robert de Gorham		3
Mr. Holmes's Vulcan		4

Won easy.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The position of out-of-door amusements is still the same, if not worse, than when last we had occasion to allude to it. Such midsummer weather was never known, probably, since the origin of the jeu de mot, wherein an English summer is said to have set in "with all the severity of the season." Racing alone induced people to leave the shelter of their roofs during the present week, and even on Ascot on Tuesday and Wednesday speedily forget the trip. A more unmitigated scene of misery than the course on that day presented cannot enter into the imagination of man—or woman either, with her symmetrical trench-shoes, barrel fashions deep in a quagmire, and her cachuncr done to death by the pitiless winds and waters. This, however, is not the place for a description of "the moving accidents by flood and field," which distinguished the week's meeting. To us belongs the business of the course there as elsewhere, and to that we address ourselves. Ascot-heath Races opened this year with a very decided spirit to be doing, or done. The experience of the last meeting was scoffed to scorn, and men shouted on the terrace of the Grand Stand in the ecstasies of speculation, as if—

Life only had two pleasures for their choosing,
The one being winning, and the other losing.

The character of the betting on the first day will be gathered from the fact that, on that occasion, the field won every race. The great difficulty of analysing the betting likely to exist made us be very cautious in our last weeks' programme of the sport in hinting at the possibility of the issues, save in a very few cases. In reference to the Ascot Derby, indeed, we said, "with its nine nominations, it will be a very short field, and it would seem to require only remaining to be added to the account of the meeting. An indication likely to serve the cause of racing materially was given in the expulsion, from the weighing-house, of the proprietor of one of the winners of the great races. The party was superintending the weighing of his jockey, when Lord Rosslyn ordered him peremptorily to make himself scarce, or a policeman should do it for him. After a faint remonstrance he departed crestfallen. This individual was a very heavy defaulter in the Derby of 1842. Many rumours are in circulation as to the cause of the Queen departing from the usual custom of her Majesty's visiting Ascot on the Tuesday and visit on the Tuesday and Thursday. We believe the sole reason was that Windsor Castle could not be made ready for the reception of the court, in consequence of the unwonted length of the present season." With the exception of the business done on the running then and there carried on, the betting at Ascot was very limited, a few commissions only on the Leger and Derby executed at the prices subpœned. Hampton Races commence on Wednesday next, and should the sun condescend to shine, it will be a brilliant meeting, for who the deuce will keep in doors an hour longer than he can avoid after the imprisonment he has already suffered?

THE ST. LEGER.—5 to 2 on Scott's lot: 2 to 1 agst Cotherstone; 15 to 1 agst Nutcracker; 20 to 1 agst Progress and Ugly Buck.

THE DERBY 1844.—4 to 1 agst Scott's lot; 25 to 1 agst Ugly Buck; 40 to 1 agst Valerian; 50 to 1 agst Assay. 50 to 1 agst Ironmaster.

THE CHINESE COLLECTION.—The success predicted in our early notice of this beautiful exhibition has been fully realized. The life-like diapason of the figures introduces the spectator at once to the habits of the Chinese people; the superb display of lanterns is characteristic of their gaudy pageantry; and the excellent models of their junks and pleasure-boats, prove their adaption of the conveniences of life in their aquatic pleasure-trips. The specimens of their tools and furniture correspond closely with those now in use; and among the articles of dress, the smartness of the shoes excites much curiosity. The collection is altogether the most complete as it is the most rational exhibition of the day.

THE MISERABLE WEATHER.

The loyalty of Britain is worn out,
Even that our gracious Queen her throne sustain;
For her liege subjects now, beyond a doubt,
Are all disgusted with the present rain.

What is the cause of all this downfall—what Makes June appear with such a watery eye?
The Earth has not of late so thirsty got,
Indeed she rather wishes she were dry.

The landlord can't give over groaning now,
Because, alas! his grief is overgrown;
The Scottish farmer has not mown his hay,
For grief will only let him "hae his moan."

The Irish haymaker of woe is full—
By wet out-witted—all his being bowed,
No more he blunders out his merry bull,
Indeed how could he, when his spirit's cowed?

The winds around his shivering ears do blow
Such tunes as once did stir his native town,
For as they o'er the levelled corn sweep on,
They seem to whistle "Croppies now lie down."

The wild gusts are disgusting, and 'tis sad,
Nay more a shame and what the French call honte,
To think this June should be so very bad,
That the winds will blow, and the flowers won't.

Here's Patter versus Clatter come again,
As women tramp the streets in noisy clogs
It is as if—so great the flood of rain—
The Isle of Sky would drown the Isle of Dogs.

Tobacconists have almost failed in trade,
All people's pipes are full—they can't tell how;
And pawnbrokers this sad complaint have made,
That there is nought but water spouted now.

If but to take a walk the people try,
When the sun shines a moment, just to chisel
The creatures into thinking 'twill be dry,
It soon begins to rain, and then they mizzle.

Men keep their ground, and first, and second floors,
Or in their dismal attics lie a-bed;
And as they know they can't get out of doors,
Of course they do get out of sorts instead.

The first of June there was a fancy fair
For Lord Howe's victory, got up with much pains
At Greenwich—but we heard no Lord Howe there
Except the wonder-cry, "Lord how it rains!"

If we made June our washing month, and men
Got all their twelvemonth's linen up together,
We could not want a change of linen then,
Nor get it dry—without a change of weather!

Wednesday, June 14, 1843.

EPITOME OF NEWS.

Among the novel importations that the new tariff is almost daily bringing to our ports is one announced of a cargo of ice from the United States. It arrived from Boston in the Shannon. The ice thus entered is principally in large blocks.——It is expected that a first dividend of 5s. in the pound on the estate of Messrs. Parker and Shore, of Sheffield, will be paid about the end of June.——It is stated that the Vice-Presidentship of the Board of Trade, vacant by the promotion of Mr. Gladstone, was offered to Mr. Hogg, M.P. for Beverley, an East India director, and chairman of the late Nottingham election committee which unseated Mr. Walter, sen. Mr. Hogg declined the office, and Lord Dalhousie, who married a daughter of the Marquis of Tweeddale, and sister of the Marchioness of Douro, was appointed to the vacancy.——Lord Denman has purchased the large tract of land between Sydnam and Stoney Middleton, including the towering rocks in Middleton Dale, with the view, by tasteful alterations, of making his villa at that place more picturesque.——Tuesday next is the anniversary of her Majesty's accession, when it will be observed with the usual rejoicings.——Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, it is said, contemplates a short sojourn at Malvern Wells, and has given a negative decision on the subject of the infant Earl of Coventry's seat, Croome Park, as her Majesty's autumnal residence.——The Gazette de Cologne announces, that the long-pending negotiations between Belgium and Prussia, relative to a reduction in the tariffs, were on the point of being concluded in a satisfactory manner, with regard at least to certain articles.——An official order has been forwarded to the Custom-house at Gloucester, intimating that Mr. Samuel Mayer, whose foolish letter to Sir James Graham, with regard to the assassination of Mr. O'Connell, has produced so much excitement, is no longer to be retained in the Customs.——One of those brutal conflicts called prize-fights took place at Rainham, in Essex, on Monday last, between two fellows named Burke and Castles, for £25 a side. After 37 rounds Burke was declared the victor. It is said that several distinguished members of the aristocracy were present at this ennobling exhibition.——The Emperor of Russia, upon hearing that the village of Solez, in Government of Pelaskar, had been destroyed by fire, despatched immediately one of his Aides-de-camp with five thousand silver rubles, to be distributed amongst the poor sufferers, and a promise of further assistance to rebuild their habitations.——Boz's work entitled "America Notes" published in England at one guinea, is printed and sold in America at three cents-three-halfpence.——The greater part of the bell-tower of the church of St. Mary at Konigsberg, in Prussia, fell down about six in the morning of the 2nd inst. Fortunately no person was injured.——The Journal de Frankfort states, from Vienna, that the steam-boat Vienna, which plied between that city and Presburg, had run on a bank, and been sunk. Several of the passengers were drowned, and a large quantity of merchandise was lost.——We learn from Saumur that a violent storm burst over part of the department of the Maine-et-Loire on the 5th instant, and did considerable damage. It commenced at Rosiers, on the right bank of the Loire, and took the direction of Mans. Hailstones fell as large, it is stated, as pigeons' eggs, and corn meadows and fruit trees were dreadfully injured. Huge trees were uprooted, and not a single bud remains on the vines.——Mdme. Montgolfier, the widow of the celebrated savant who was the inventor of the first air balloon called "Montgolfier," is still living, and has just entered her 110th year.——Thorwalsden, the celebrated sculptor, had, on the 1st of June, opened his splendid collection of pictures and marbles to the view of the public at Copenhagen. The pictures, particularly, are said to be of great value, and he has declared his intention to leave the whole after his death, upon certain conditions, to the city.——Upwards of fifty thousand labourers are at present employed upon the St. Petersburgh and Moskow Railway. The whole distance will be nearly five hundred English miles; and nevertheless, it is confidently hoped that the gigantic work will be completed in less than two years.

AIR.—MURDER AND COLLIERY RIOTS.—On Monday morning, in the High Court of Justiciary, Edinburgh, the colliers implicated in the murder of Dawson, at the strike riots, near Ayr, in November last, were put upon their trials. The parties indicted were Michael Murray, Daniel M'Cauley, and William Welsh, colliers. The prisoners had fled from Scotland, and were not apprehended until long after their associates were tried and condemned in December last. Welsh not appearing, sentence of outlawry was pronounced against him; and the prisoners Murray and M'Cauley both pleaded guilty to the charge of mobbing, rioting, and assault, as libelled; on which the Solicitor-General agreed to depart from the charge of murder. The Lord Justice Clerk, after hearing the opinions of Lords Mackenzie and Cockburn, sentenced the prisoners to transportation for ten years, and addressed them on the brutal ferocity and savage violence of their attack upon a body of unoffending and unprotected men, whose only crime was their willingness to work for their subsistence.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

The Bishop of Oxford held an ordination on Sunday at Oxford.

The rector of Morpeth has contributed £1000, the Earl of Carlisle the site, valued at £400, Lady Elizabeth Grey £5, Lady G. E. Grey £5, towards the projected new church at Morpeth.

OXFORD.—The second of the three open scholarships at Trinity College, was on Monday last adjudged to William Gifford Palgrave, son of Sir Francis Palgrave, from Charterhouse School.

ELECTION FOR THE CHAPLAINSHIP OF ST. SAVIOUR'S.—On Tuesday morning a vestry meeting was held at St. Saviour's Church, for the purpose of proceeding to the election of a chaplain vice the Rev. W. Mann, deceased. The candidates were the Rev. Edward Thompson, M.A., the Rev. T. Troughton Leale, the Rev. J. R. Barber, M.A., the Rev. Samuel Benson, M.A., the Rev. W. S. Rowe, M.A., the Rev. Thomas Gibson, M.A., the Rev. R. Plumer Wader, M.A., and the Rev. G. W. Conder, M.A. Previously to the commencement of the election all the candidates, with the exception of Messrs. Benson and Rowe, resigned. At eleven o'clock Mr. Rowe also resigned, the numbers being for the Rev. Samuel Benson, 119, the Rev. W. S. Rowe, 3. Mr. Benson was then declared duly elected. The emoluments are estimated at about £400 per annum, the fixed salary being £300.

IRELAND

MANUFACTURING PROSPERITY.—SOMETHING SIGNIFICANT.—The gunpowder works, within five miles of Cork, formerly held by the Government, are now at full work. At the suggestion of Major-General Lord Downes, which will be received with universal satisfaction by the citizens of Limerick, Government have directed that the store of gunpowder in the private depôts of Limerick shall be transferred, for security (?) to the ordnance magazine, artillery barracks.

DUBLIN.—The usual weekly meeting of the repeal association was held at the Corn Exchange on Monday last, but owing to the absence of Mr. O'Connell the proceedings were divested of a good deal of their interest and excitement. The business of the day closed about a quarter past six o'clock, when Mr. John O'Connell announced the repeal rent for the week to be £717 11s. 10½d. Tremendous cheering followed the announcement. This amount is nearly double the rent of the previous week.

Her Majesty's steamer, Cyclops, Captain Austin, C.B., arrived at Kingstown on Sunday, from Cork and Waterford, at each of which ports she left several companies of marines, and has on board a company of marine artillery for Dublin. She is a fine war-steamer, 1100 tons and 300 horse power, mounting six guns of large caliber.

Master Linton has reported to the Chancellor that there is now due to the corporation of Cashel, by Mr. Pennefather, the sum of £12,000 for rents, which he received since 1835, for the lands which were improperly leased to him by the late corporation.

COUNTRY NEWS.

BRISTOL.—The severe embarrassments of the Ebba Vale and Sirrhowy Iron Company, carried on by Messrs. Harford, Davis, and Co., have produced great consternation at Bristol. This event is ascribed to the present unequalled depress on in the iron trade, the price of iron being now but a little above £4 per ton, being the lowest ever known. Even within the last few months the decline has been from above £5 per ton to the price above quoted. This depression, as may be imagined, has produced the most serious state of distress and alarm in the iron districts of Monmouthshire, Glamorganshire, and other neighbouring counties, and it is well known that some of the most eminent and wealthy houses have recently made applications to Government for grants of money, on the ground that the dismissal of their workmen would be the possible consequence of the present low prices. The embarrassments of the Ebba Vale and Sirrhowy Company are of serious consequence, as between 5000 and 6000 persons are constantly employed by them, their mass being somewhere about 25 000 or 30,000 tons per annum. The liabilities of the firm cannot be correctly ascertained, but they are understood to be at £300,000 to £400,000 sterling. The general opinion seem to be that they will not fall very far short of the latter sum. The consequence of this lamentable occurrence will, it is feared, be the embarrassment of many private individuals who have been in the habit of depositing with the firm; and the consternation has been greatly increased by the fact that numerous benefit societies in the city have placed their funds in the hands of the company.

BROMSGROVE.—Most of the nailers having returned to their work, and tranquility being restored, the troops returned to Birmingham on Saturday; and the additional police also withdrawn.

FALMOUTH.—ALTERATION IN THE PACKET STATION.—On Thursday se'nnight a public meeting of the inhabitants of Falmouth was held in that borough, for the purpose of memorialising the Lords of the Treasury against the intended removal of the packet-station from that port to Southampton. Resolutions were adopted that a memorial should be prepared, and that a deputation should proceed to London for the purpose of presenting the same in person to the Government. A very strong feeling prevails in Cornwall upon the subject.

ROMSEY.—On Monday last a commission of lunacy was opened at the White Horse inn, Romsey, about eight miles from Southampton, before Francis Barlow, Esq., one of the commissioners of lunacy, and a special jury, to inquire into the state of mind of Joseph Anthony Swinburne, described in the commission as of "Grove-place, in the parish of Nursbington, in the county of Southampton, Esquire." The alleged lunatic, it was understood, is possessed of considerable wealth, consisting of funded and landed property, and is said to be connected with the ancient family of Sir John Swinburne, Bart., of Castle Capheaton, Northumberland, who is allied by marriage to several distinguished and noble families, and amongst others to his Grace the Duke of Northumberland and Earl Ashburnham. The unfortunate gentleman having been examined, the jury, after a brief consultation, found a verdict, dating Mr. Swinburne's unsoundness of mind from the 27th of April, 1830.

LIVERPOOL.—ANOTHER FIRE.—On Friday se'nnight the town had another narrow escape from a serious conflagration. Between two and three o'clock was seen to issue, by the policeman on duty, from the windows of the cellar of one of the new warehouses, commonly known as "Gibson's," extensive from the Pleasure at the Salthouse Dock up Salthouse-lane. The alarm was instantly conveyed to Mr. Whitty, who was speedily on the spot with an engine, and, though the flames burst from the windows of the building with apparently irresistible fury, they were conquered without having effected any material damage. The rooms in the upper part of these warehouses were filled with cotton, the basement contained shumac and other merchandise, and at the time of the warehouse-keeper the clock was hung pyramids of sulphur. The warehouses being free, the cellars were not vaulted, and the windows were on a level with the foot-path. It is s.-pposed that some person, while passing, either carelessly or wilfully threw a lighted substance into the cellar, which communicated with the sulphur, and but for the promptitude and efficiency of the police, and a plentiful supply of water being at hand, the whole of the premises might have been destroyed, and an incalculable property which was contained there n. As it was, the sulphur only was consumed. The wind b ew high from the north-west; and, had the fire broken out in the night, the most disastrous consequences might have ensued.

WALES.—NARROW ESCAPE.—Last week, while twelve men were at work in a coal-pit, the property of Mr. William Davies, at Llansamlet, the sides of the pit suddenly collapsed, shutting up the men in the bowels of the earth! Fortunately the men were aware of an old passage from the pit they were in to another, and succeeded, after encountering many obstacles, in reaching the latter, and thence were conveyed to the surface in perfect safety.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

(Sittings in Banco.)

THE QUEEN V. GREGORY.—CRIMINAL INFORMATION.

In this case a rule nisi had been obtained, calling upon the defendant, Mr. Barnard Gregory, of the Satirist newspaper, to show cause why a criminal information should not be filed against him for publishing a series of libels reflecting upon the character of his Serene Highness the Duke of Brunswick. The rule was applied for in the last term, and the nature of the libel was then stated. It will be recollected that it was argued by the Duke, in his affidavit, that the defendant had charged the Duke with being an immoral character, and had insinuated that he had been concerned in the murder of Eliza Grimwood. Mr. Erle now showed cause against the rule, and contended that no one except a person, who, like the Duke of Brunswick, took up the Satirist newspaper for the mere purpose of discovering in it libels which he might take to himself, could imagine that the passages relating to Eliza Grimwood had reference to his Serene Highness. The Duke had, before these articles had been published, indicted the defendant for libel, and the indictment had been removed by certiorari into this court, and had not yet been tried. The Court, moreover, had had it down as a rule that it would never interfere in cases of this sort where the parties aggrieved had taken the law into their own hands. Now the affidavits disclosed that in the month of February last, Mr. Gregory appeared at Covent-garden Theatre in the character of Hamlet, and that on that occasion the Duke of Brunswick and his attorney, Mr. Valance, attended at the theatre, accompanied by a party, for the purpose of hooting Mr. Gregory from the stage, in which they succeeded, and that the Duke of Brunswick and Mr. Valance had frequently boasted of having done so. The Duke, therefore, had no right to come before the Court for the redress he sought, and therefore he submitted that the rule must be discharged with costs.—Mr. Serjeant Shee followed on the same side, and in the course of his speech dwelt in severe terms upon the seclusion to which he contended the Duke had been doomed by his own misconduct.—The Duke of Brunswick (who was seated among the Queen's Counsel, next the learned counsel, Mr. Serjeant Talfourd) interrupted the learned counsel in the course of his speech.—Lord Denman: If these interruptions are renewed I shall order hat person sitting there to be removed.—The Duke of Brunswick at first seemed inclined to address the Court, but on receiving a hint from Mr. Serjeant Talfourd his Serene Highness sat down.—Mr. Serjeant Talfourd submitted that the rule must be made absolute, even upon the showing of Mr. Gregory's own affidavit. The crime of which the defendant had been guilty in making these false attacks upon the Duke had been aggravated by the course which he had instructed his Counsel to pursue, and by the affidavits which he had filed, in which he sought, by the evidence of discarded servants—and he verily believed that the evidence was false—to fix upon the Duke the imputation which were now solely directed to rest upon himself. But it was the Duke lived in comparative seclusion—true it was he did not go to Court. He might object to being received there in an inferior capacity, and he had not, he did, that he was an act of the Macready dynasty that we can contemplate without approval; and, at the close of the season, we have only to regret that there was not sufficient public taste to meet more heartily and generously the refined spirit in which he catered for its improvement.

Having thus said our say, and so as we think performed a duty, we have only to record the event of her Majesty's and Prince Albert's visit to Drury Lane on Monday last, just as we witnessed its occurrence. We may premise that it created an enthusiasm that was cheering in the extreme.

At six o'clock all the streets adjoining the theatre presented a scene of the greatest excitement. Each side of the steps of the entrance in Brydges-street was lined with spectators, and both the pathways in Russell-street, where stands the private box door, were literally impassable from the throngs with which they were filled. The pit, boxes, and gallery of the house were densely crowded, and the standing places behind the upper boxes, which are peculiar to Drury Lane, were filled with those of the audience who were not lucky enough to obtain seats, and who were leaning forward with intense anxiety to watch the entrance of her Majesty. The royal box was, as usual, built out from the stage box to the left hand, and the projecting portion, in which were the seats for her Majesty and Prince Albert, was supported by gilt pillars, fastened to the stage. The hangings were of rich crimson, and the box terminated at the top in the form of a tent. The box was fitted up by Mr. Crace. The two adjoining boxes had been converted into one, by the removal of the partition, and had been appropriated to her Majesty's party.

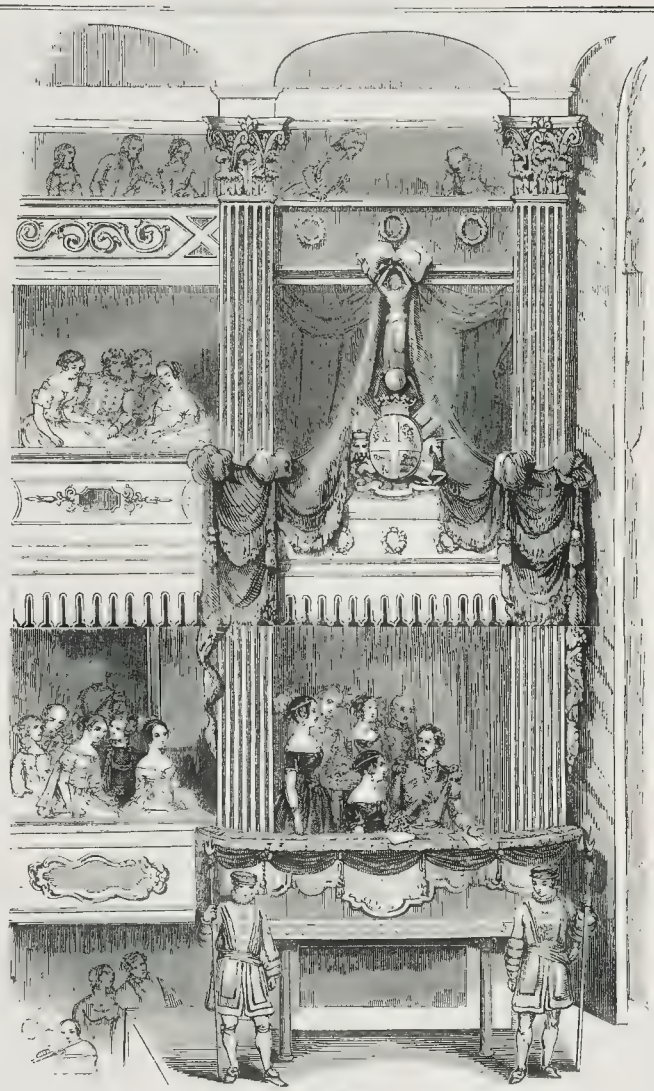
It will be seen that we have given illustrations of not only the royal box, but of the ceremony of escorting her Majesty thither, according to the etiquette of state visits.

A few minutes after seven o'clock the royal visitors appeared, and at the same moment the curtain rose for the national anthem. Loud acclamations burst forth from every part of the house, which her Majesty and the Prince, who was dressed in a full military uniform, answered by repeated acknowledgments.

The play was "As you like it" —a play in which Macready's impersonation of the melancholy Jaques has been held by critics to be one of the finest dramatic interpretations of Shakesperian meaning upon the English stage. He has made this character, so far as the acting is concerned, a new creation—and not new only, but "beautiful exceedingly." He was never more warmly or deservedly applauded for it than in the presence of his Sovereign on Monday night. The old exciting episode of the drama—the wrestling scene—we have transferred to illustration. The farce of "A Thumping Legacy" followed, and evoked the royal risibility with hearty force.

At eleven o'clock the performances terminated, and the national anthem was, according to custom, repeated, with fresh acclamations from the audience. Not only the regular vocalists of the theatre, but Miss Rainforth and Miss M. B. Hawes (if we mistake not), assisted on the occasion. As her Majesty rose to depart a new volley of cheers was given, and hats were waving in all directions as she receded from the public view. The street, at this hour, presented the same animated scene as on the Queen's arrival. Crowds awaited to see her enter the royal carriage, and as it rolled away, followed by the Guards, the applause of the multitude might be heard in the distance.

The following night, Tuesday, the house was again crammed, and on Wednesday, to a still full audience, Mr. Macready took his farewell of the public for the present season. His appearance for this purpose (after playing Macbeth) in the character of the man and not the actor, was the signal for an ecstasy of applause. Showers of bouquets fell at his feet—clouds of cambric were raised in the air—and shouts, not less enthusiastic than those which greeted royalty itself, bore testimony to the warmth of his admirers, and the earnestness with which they acknowledged the merits of their favourite tragedian and manager.



THE QUEEN'S BOX.

LIGHTING THE QUEEN TO HER BOX.

A necessity for giving his long farewell speech in full will preclude the possibility of our adding further comment.

The following is a copy of the speech:—

Ladies and Gentlemen—As the present management of this theatre must close to-night, I now appear before you to lay down my office, and give some account of my stewardship. It has been currently reported, and generally believed, that the want of encouragement from the public, and the consequently low nightly receipts, are the causes of my resignation. I beg leave to contradict the assertion—(Loud cheers). By a reference to my accounts of Covent-garden and Drury-lane Theatres, I find that the nightly average of last season's receipts was greater than those of both my Covent-garden seasons, and that even in this year of unprecedented depression and increased taxation, the average of our nightly receipts is only £13 below that of my last Covent-garden season, which, with profits to the management, paid £7,000 rent to the proprietors, and that it exceeds by £91 per night the average of my first Covent-garden season, which paid a rent of more than £5,500. If not at present amounting to a remunerating return, such a result, at such a time, may, in my opinion, be confidently taken as an earnest of future and permanent success. It certainly has not discouraged me. The question that obviously arises as to the application of such receipts is answered, I think, by the property itself. Upon taking possession I found, I may without exaggeration say, a poor and scanty collection of lumber. The whole female wardrobe would have been dearly valued at £40! not one scene fit to be placed upon the stage. not even a rope in the whole building to work a scene. The condition of my occupancy—that "the theatre should be put into a tenantable state," could not be fulfilled. A very inadequate sum, in annual deduction for rent, was allowed towards its fulfilment; and thus the burden of restoring the various departments of this large establishment from decay and ruin to their present state, has fallen really upon myself. I do not urge these facts in accusation of individuals; but against the law, which gives to persons totally unacquainted with the drama and with all appertaining to the dramatic art, an irresponsible power over it, every impartial voice should be lifted up—(Hear).

A brief history of my own connection with the two large theatres will, I think, demonstrate the partial operation of this oppressive law. Covent-garden Theatre, it may be remembered, during my tenancy, was raised by public favour from a degraded position into repute and estimation. The treatment I received from its proprietors justified me in applying to the then Lord Chamberlain for a personal license—for new permission to exercise my art—to pursue my rightful calling without infringement of the law. My application was refused. At Drury-lane Theatre my exertions and my sacrifices have been much greater, and proportionately larger results have been obtained, inasmuch as the drama has been re-established in this patent theatre, from which the patent holders themselves had suffered it to be excluded. The principal performers, ladies and gentlemen, have testified their confidence in my system, by deliberately consenting to hazard one-third of their incomes in its support: and I have volunteered myself still further sacrifices towards perfecting what is so far advanced; but as I cannot subject myself to the liabilities required of me, I have reluctantly, and with deep regret, resigned my charge. The consequence is, both these large theatres are now untenanted. The holders of their patents are unable themselves to present the glorious works of Shakspere to an English audience, and yet are armed by the law with power to forbid their representation elsewhere. For were I now, after all I have given and endured to maintain the drama in these theatres —were I excluded by circumstances as I now am from them—to attempt in a theatre lately licensed by the Lord Chamberlain for the performances of brutes and brute-tamers, were I to attempt there the acting a legitimate play, the law, "with all their might to urge it on," would be put in force to prevent, or to punish me—(Shame, shame). May I not ask for what public benefit such a law is framed, or for what one good purpose it is persisted in?

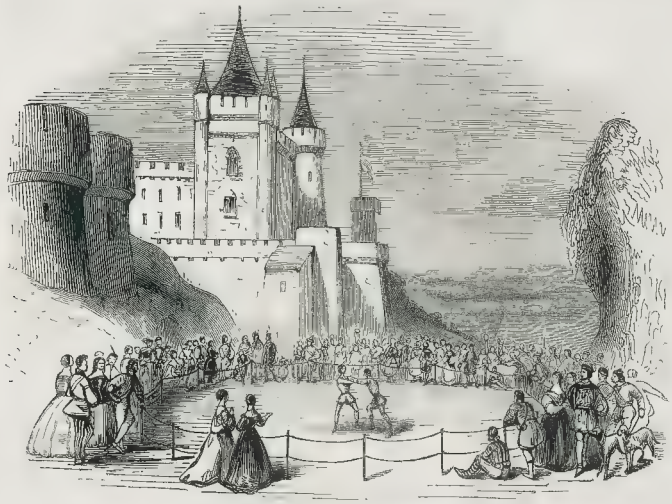
In regard to the proprietors of this theatre, let me once again, and emphatically, disclaim all intention of imputing blame individually—for many of them I entertain the highest respect and esteem—it is the law under which they act that I complain of, and condemn as the drama's worst enemy.

In conclusion let me merely add, that I have endeavoured to redeem, throughout my management, every pledge of my introductory address:—I have endeavoured to make your national theatre worthy of Shakspere and of our country. In this attempt I hope I have not entirely failed; I have at least striven my utmost, and the encouragement I have received from you would have been sufficient to sustain me in the struggle, if, as should have been the case, this theatre had been adequately appointed.

For that encouragement, ladies and gentlemen, I return you my warmest acknowledgments. To the respectable portion of the public press I am anxious to offer the expression of my gratitude for its sympathy and aid; and with my own, with the performers' thanks, let me indulge the hope that time may bring about a better state of things, and that I may yet again, under happier auspices, be honoured with your favour and approval.

With a feeling of sorrow, but no desponding, ladies and gentlemen, I respectfully and most gratefully take my leave.

Mr. Macready retired amidst loud and continued cheering.



WRESTLING SCENE IN "AS YOU LIKE IT."

HAYMARKET THEARE.

The very clever little drama entitled the "Little Devil" continues to be played with the success which greeted its first arrival upon Mr. Webster's stage. The imp Asmodeus—this time in the guise of a minstrel boy—is played by Vestris with her wonted naiveté, while Charles Mathews takes the rôle of Vicentia D'Estella, and infuses into it a sparkling and admirable vivacity. Nothing could be more amusing than his invocation of the supposed Asmodeus, or the way in which he imagines the spirit influences his destiny; the scene where he thinks the Devil is claiming his share of his intended wife is also an admirable piece of acting, and quite convulsed the house with laughter. This is the episode which our artist has engraved. His singing of the dicing song was also exceedingly good. Miss Julia Bennett, who plays Clotilda, fully maintained the favourable impression she had created. She is really an excellent actress, and will certainly become a great favourite; in addition to which she sings very nicely, joining with much effect in some of the duets. The plot of the drama has been so recently given that we need not recapitulate it here. It has, however, been extremely well adapted, the dialogue being invariably neat and pointed; and, altogether, the piece well deserves the applause it receives throughout.

MADAME VESTRIS, CHARLES MATHEWS, AND STRICKLAND, IN "THE LITTLE DEVIL."—NICOLO CLAIMING "HALVES."

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

ANOTHER MUS. DOC.—In the plenitude of their bounty another Doctor of Music has been created by one of our universities in the person of Spohr; only think, the great Spohr to be pregated with brainless brethren, who have been honoured by the title of Doctor for knowing no more than the pounds, shillings and pence of their art. How ridiculous it would be to say Doctor Beethoven, or Professor Handel! Luigi Spohr (sans titulo doctoris), we are delighted to hear will visit us shortly—time enough to direct the eighth Philharmonic Concert, at which he will produce some novelties expressly written for that fine orchestra, and probably appear as an instrumentalist himself on the occasion. A complimentary concert to him is to be given on Friday, July 7, when his oratorio, "The Fall of Babylon," will be performed on a most extensive scale. This is as it should be.

THE LONDON PROFESSIONAL CHORAL SOCIETY.—This most praiseworthy fraternity will give their annual concert on Friday, July 27, when, amongst other novelties, Küngen's "Hallelujah of the Creation" (a good title,) will be performed.

MADLLE. LUTZER.—This accomplished German vocalist (Nightingale, as she is called in her native land) will shortly appear in two operas in the Bohemian language at Pest.

NEW BALLET.—A new ballet, by M. Perrot, to be called "Ondine, ou La Naiade," is in rehearsal at her Majesty's Theatre, and will be shortly produced.

ROSSINI.—This gran Maestro, we regret to state, is again in a very precarious state of health at Paris. A selection of his works was to have been performed in honour of his visit to that capital, but his indisposition has caused it to be deferred.

RUBINI.—This distinguished tenor is singing at present at the Italian Opera of St. Petersburg, enchanting his hearers and enriching himself at an unprecedented rate.

MENDLESSOHN.—The recent composition by this scholar, musician and instrumentalist ("The Choruses of Antigone"), we learn is in preparation of performance at Dresden, where a grand musical festival, under the direction of H. H. Reissiger, Wagner, and Muller, is to take place shortly. The choruses are to consist entirely of male voices. Wagner's "Rienzi" is soon to appear at Hamburgh.

FANNY ELLSLER.—This extraordinary danseuse is at present engaged at the Theatre Royal Brussels, with the extraordinary salary of £80 per night, for 12 nights.

THEATRICAL PORTRAITS.

HERR STAUDIGL.

Competition in vocalism was never at a higher state than it is in the present musical season of our metropolis. The prime donne, the flûte of soprani and contralti, are now congregated among us, and, by their many and various perfections in their several departments, not only "puzzle the will" but the judgment as to which should be considered the first of her time. Tenors are more scantily sprinkled, but those we enjoy have rendered us not only satisfied but indifferent to the advent of any greater future promises. Of the bassi it is hardly possible to imagine any thing beyond the three stars, Lablache, Fornasari, and, "though last not least," Staudigl, who, like the southern cross, form a constellation in themselves of the most dazzling brilliancy. Of the two former we have had frequent and glad occasion to speak in the highest terms of unqualified delight—of the latter we will say a few words devoted to himself, in a spirit which we trust will be alike favourably received by that great artiste and our readers in general. Horace has said, "Poeta nascitur non fit," he may have been right as to the mens divinior poetæ, but in the musician, no matter what his inborn propensities to his art may be, education is necessary, and to such a degree that we are obliged to alter the Horatian maxim and say that "musicus nascitur et fit." Herr Staudigl is the product of this double influence of Genius: in him there is a cause for conflict between the two parents, Nature and Art, and we cannot do better than adopt the decision of the "wisest man the world e'er saw," and cut him in two to satisfy their respective pretensions. Staudigl is a renowned man in his own country—has been since his first appearance as an actor and singer; moreover, Jos. Staudigl, K. K. Hof-Opern Sänger, is known to be a sound musician, not merely "capable of merit in others," but "foregetive" in his own imagination: witness several songs of his own composition—"Wogentäuschung—An die Nacht," "Das Süsseste und Schwerste," "Der Himmel im Thale,"

HERR STAUDIGL AS CASPAR.

all of which, with many others we could name, prove him to be "a fount himself, tho' drinking other streams."

Our opportunities of seeing and hearing this great artiste have been few upon the English stage. The meagre part of Oroveso in "Norma" afforded him no scope for the development of his mighty powers; Handel's Polyphemus allowed them a little expansion; but they were again crippled in the Rossini-and-water music of Alcander in Pacini's "Sappho." The element of Staudigl's muse (for he is so attended) is extremely spirituelle—the greater the task he has to perform the more does he possess an "ingenium par materia;" and we know not what higher praise to bestow than that he is always faithful to the expression of the most delicate subtleties of the most metaphysical authors. How he has embodied Caspar, that wild piece of musical poetry! The great Kean was so taken with this part that he once intimated a wish to have played it. Charles Horn was the only man on our stage who had a notion of the character; but see Staudigl in the part, and you could almost fancy you saw Carl Maria conducting, so much does he enter into the spirit of the Fuseli-musician! Staudigl possesses a voice of prodigious extent and power—of most passive obedience to its master, with a tone for "tenderness awhile—terror anon," and a style of purity and attention to both words and music that constitutes him one of the first mental musicians of his day.

HERR STAUDIGL AS "OROVESO."

SIGNOR MARIO.

As we predicted in a former number that Mozart's chef-d'œuvre, "Don Giovanni," would not be often repeated, it was played for the last time this season on Thursday se'nnight. It is vain to inquire into the cause of the "few and far between" "angel visits" of this matchless production of genius and art. At one time we are inclined to metaphoricise and think that, like the sun, it cannot be long gazed upon without dazzling the beholders, whose un-eagle-like vision can rest undisturbed only upon "minores stelle;" at another we suspect that the fault lies in the treasury, which department estimates the merit of everything by what it will bring to its coffers; and here again we are puzzled, for no better houses attended any performance than those which crowded to enjoy the Don of all tragi-comic operas. We relinquish the hopeless task of solving the difficulty, and hasten to the more pleasant one of recording the réunion of strength wit which it took its departure from us (for the season) on Thursday se'nnight. The cast, as we have before observed, has never been surpassed, and in some particulars never has been equalled. We have seen the libertine hero personated by Garcia, Ambrozetti, Zuchelli, Tamburini, &c.; but with all the magnifying glass-power which Memory uses when considering those who made the earliest impressions upon her, we are forced to consider the Giovanni of Fornasari as something beyond that of his predecessors. Of Lablache's Leporello it would be vain to say more than that it is perfection. Grisi's Donna Anna is a truly splendid performance; her singing that anguished broken recitative, "Il padre mio," is in the highest degree tender and passionate.

MARIO, AS DON OTTAVIO.

Moltini's Elvira is very charming, and altogether vindicates the character hitherto called ungrateful. What can be more bewitching than the etherial Persiani's Zerlina? When ever had we such a Masetto as Sig. F. Lablache. And to come to the immediate object of our illustration, what predecessor in the part of Ottavio ever sang the music of Mozart with the soul, the purity, the love-breathing quality of voice of Mario? We fearlessly answer our own question, and say—none! Not even the great Rubini himself! We never heard "Il mio tesoro" sung by any one before Mario's time with the chastened ease and tenderness which he infuses into it, with his own feeling for the author's meaning, and the young freshness of intonation that breathes from him without exertion,

Like the unfor'd aroma of a flow'r!

Another advantage which Mario possesses over Rubini is, that he does his best always, never making points-d'orgue whereon he puts forth his reserved strength or graces, isolating himself from the general effect, and stepping out of a finely-grouped picture in the vanity of being considered as an individual portrait. Mario is superior to all this; and we hesitate not to say, that if he have good sense enough not to be early turned from study and reflection by the applause which he already richly deserves, he will, ere long, be the first tenor singer of the day! Let him look to his great song-companion, Lablache, who constantly studies!

Adieu! Gl'vanni! Adieu! Mozart! at least (after the 15th inst.) till next season for one or two nights!

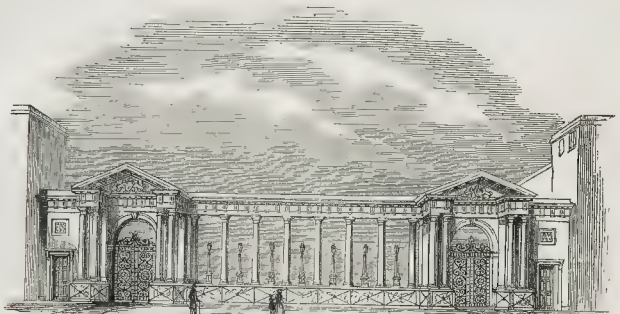
THE FASHIONS.

Paris, Rue Chaussée d'Antin, June 12.

Mon cher Monsieur,—But a few years back and Fashion was a tyrant, whose slightest decrees were sovereign laws, and before whom every one was bound to bow without murmuring. Now, however, the case is altered; the tyrant has become a good-natured, well-accommodating lady, who sets herself willingly to all the caprices of her subjects; and whose decrees are sufficiently elastic to permit any one, if not to transcribe them openly, at least to modify them, provided that elegance be not lost sight of. Fashion may decide that bonnets shall advance more or less on the face, and that skirts of dresses shall be more or less furbelowed, or more or less ornamented, but she never interferes in the private affairs of the toilette, which detracts from your physiognomy or injures your tournure, to meet the exigencies of the case by slight deviations from the strict rule. There are compositions therefore to be made with fashion, as well as with conscience; and provided that good taste and elegance are respected, anything may be worn, and the wide sleeve may boldly meet the plain one without such an event creating a sensation, or without exciting public indignation, an event which ten years ago would have been sure to follow any departure from public caprice or prevailing fashions. This explanation is necessary, in order that your readers may comprehend the several apparent contradictions which a superficial observation may lead them to suppose they may detect in our indications; but these will only mislead novices, as every body of experience in such matters will, as far as fashions are concerned, there is a possible medium of variety, beyond which

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Sign. FORNASARI respectfully informs the Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public that his BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY next, JUNE 22nd, 1843, when will be performed for the last time, arranged in two acts, DONIZETTI'S heroic opera, BELISARIO. Belisario, Sign. Antonio Fornasari; Giustiniano, Sign. Puzzoni; Eutropio, Sign. Dal Pozzo; Alamiro, Sign. Lorenzo Ivanoff; Adelaide, Mme. Bolticci; Antonina, Mdlle. Nau. After which will be performed, LA PROVA D'UN OPERA SERIA. By Mdme. Grisi, Signor Lablache, Signor Lablache, Signor Lablache



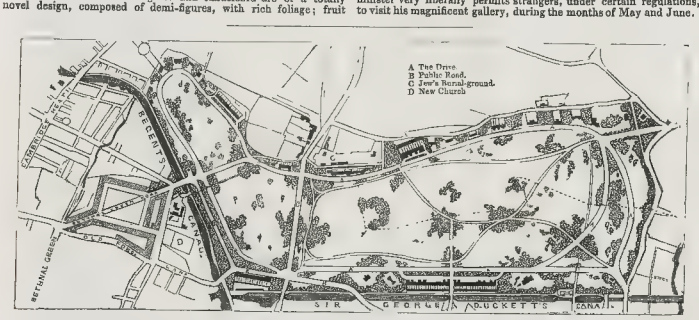
NEW FACADE, GROSVENOR-HOUSE.

This magnificent entrance to the town mansion of the Marquis of Westminster, in Grosvenor-street, has lately been completed from the designs of Mr. Cundy, his lordship's architect. The new façade is constructed of stone, and is 110 feet long; with two carriage ways, having coupled columns of the Roman Doric order on each side; and is connected by a screen of columns, on a continued rustic basement with candelabra and lamps in the inter-columniations.

The archways are surmounted by pediments inscribed with the arms of the Grosvenor family. On each side of the arches are foot entrances, over which are panels containing sculpture emblematical of the four seasons. The gates and candelebra are of a totally novel design, composed of demi-figures, with rich foliage; fruit and flowers of the most elaborate description being introduced, the centre having the family crest surrounded by the order of the garter.

The stone and ironwork of this noble gateway has altogether been most carefully executed; and the effect of the whole is truly beautiful.

Attached to Grosvenor House is one of the finest private picture galleries in Europe. The collection was commenced by the purchase of the late Mr. Agar's entire collection for thirty thousand guineas. It contains some of the finest works of the ancient and modern masters, particularly of Rubens. The Marquis of Westminster very liberally permits strangers, under certain regulations, to visit his magnificent gallery, during the months of May and June.



VICTORIA PARK.

Although the Act of Parliament for the formation of this park at Bethnal-green has been passed for some time, few steps have been taken in its progress. On Saturday, however, the surveyors recommenced their labours in making estimates of the value of property, which in some instances the proprietors are disposed to litigate. The last act, empowering the commissioners with full authority, received the royal assent on the 13th of May, 1842, when five years were assigned for the full completion of the park. The tenants occupying the tenements and lands have received notices to quit by the 10th of October. Amongst these are eleven persons occupying fields, as market gardeners, who have lately cropped their grounds for the winter months, for which they have expressed their intention to apply for remuneration. A valuation has, during the last week, been made of six houses, the remnants of the ancient palace of Bishop Bonner, known as Bonner's Hall, the inhabitants of which have all received notice to quit, and preparations are being made for leasing the field adjacent, and in front of the chief entrance, for the erection of a handsome square of houses. A great deal of the land required for the park is the property of the trustees of Guy's Hospital and of Sir John Cass's charity, who have shown every disposition to forward the views of the commissioners. A new road will, at the suggestion of Mr. Baker, the coroner, be shortly commenced from Limehouse to the southern entrance of the park. It has been decided by the commissioners that the principal entrance shall be through Bonner's-hall-fields, opposite the Greyhound, in Old Ford-lane.

The entire tract of land lying between the Hackney and Whitechapel roads, contains about 290 acres.

PLAN OF THE PROPOSED IMPROVEMENTS IN THE CITY OF LONDON.

PROPOSED IMPROVEMENTS IN THE CITY OF LONDON.

The Special Committee appointed to consider the proposed improvements in the City have recently presented their Report to the Court of Common Council. It contains numerous and important suggestions, commencing as follows:—

It has long been the subject of public complaint, that Newgate-street, Snowhill, and Holborn, the great thoroughfare to the north-western, and that of St. Paul's Churchyard, Ludgate-hill, and Fleet-street, to the western part of the metropolis, are both quite inadequate to the immense traffic of carriages, waggons, and vehicles of every description which throng in those directions; and the numbers of waggons and carts which convey provisions to and from Newgate-market frequently choke that thoroughfare, creating delays and inconvenience to the mail-coaches, and other impediments to the Post-office arrangements. The special committee having examined carefully those plans which have been suggested to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests for a new thoroughfare, commencing in the neighbourhood of Leicester-square, through Lincoln's-inn-fields into the city, crossing Farringdon-street by a viaduct, next considered the practicability of forming a street which would connect the end of Cheapside with such a thoroughfare at Lincoln's-inn, and with a branch diverging into Holborn, which would effectually relieve the great pressure of the public traffic in the thoroughfares alluded to, and at the same time render a viaduct at Holborn-bridge unnecessary. They were of opinion that the formation of a street combining these desirable objects was decidedly practicable, the street to commence at the east end, and continue along Paternoster-row, through Amen-corner, across Farringdon-street to the south-west corner of Farringdon-market in a straight line, the main line to continue across the middle of Fetter-lane to the city boundary, and a branch to diverge from the corner of the market to the end of Fetter-lane, at the summit of the hill in the wide part of Holborn. The special committee having had the levels in this proposed new line accurately taken, find that the greatest inclination of any part of it would not be more than about 3 feet in 100, and that only for the distance of 370 feet. It occurred to them in pursuing the investigation, that this new line would be still greater improved by the removal of the whole of the houses between the north side of St. Paul's Churchyard and Paternoster-row, from the end of Cheapside as far as Ave Maria-lane, which could be done for the additional sum of £150,000. Should this be effected, that magnificent structure would terminate a vista of upwards of onethird of a mile, and the whole would, in addition to the increased facility and convenience which would be afforded to the growing commercial traffic of the city, form one of the grandest improvements of an architectural character yet achieved in the metropolis.

The order in which the special committee have classed the improvements which they consider called for is according to the relative importance of each, and as follows:—

A. From the east end of Paternoster-row to Fetter-lane, and a branch street to Holborn, commencing with the houses at the west end of Cheapside, projecting beyond the line of St. Martin's-le-Grand, all between Paternoster-row, St. Paul's Churchyard, as far as Ave Maria-lane, Amen Corner, crossing the Old Bailey, to Farringdon-street, to Shoe-lane, Printer-street, Great New-street, to Fetter-lane to the city boundary; and the branch street from Little New-street, to the north end of Fetter-lane, Holborn, about 3360 feet in length. The greatest acclivity in the whole of this line will not be more than 1 in 31, and that for only about 370 feet.

B. From the north end of Dowgate-hill to the east end of St. Paul's Churchyard, thence to Earl-street, Blackfriars, through Tower Royal, Little and Great Distaff-lane, crossing the Old Change into St. Paul's Churchyard, about 1360 feet in length, and from the Old Change, through Knight rider-court, Carter-lane, Godliman-street, Bell-yard, Addle-hill, to the east end of Earl street, about 1200 feet in length.

C. Watling-street, from Aldermanry Church to the west end of St. Paul's Churchyard, about 1055 feet in length.

D. The Poultry, on the north side, to the Old Jewry, and 100 feet of the north side of Mansion-house-street, about 1055 feet in length; from the Mansion-house across Bucklersbury and Size-lane to Queen-street, from Watling-street to the east end of Basing-lane, the east side of Queen-street from Watling-street to Thames-street, about 1400 feet in length.

E. Lime-street, east side, from Cullum-street to Fenchurch-street, Leadenhall-market from Fenchurch-street through to the south end of Gracechurch-street, about 860 feet in length; Aldgate, south side, from the Saracen's Head to Jewry-street, and the east end of Leadenhall-street at its junction with Fenchurch-street.

F. Broad-street buildings to the Curtain-road, through Hairmoon-street to Sun-street, thence to Skinner-street, and on to Worship-street, about 1550 feet in length.

G. From Aldersgate-street, opposite the end of Jewin-street, to Smithfield, and from the corner of Little Britain across Bartholomew-close, to communicate with the above line of street to Smithfield, about 1280 feet in length.

H. Threadneedle-street, north side, at its junction with Broad-street, and south side, from the church of St. Benet Fink, to Finch-lane, about 265 feet in length.

I. Holborn-bridge, north side, about 90 feet in length. Butcherhall-lane, east side, about 55 feet in length. St. Martin's-le-Grand, north-east corner, Angel-street.

K. Maiden-lane, north and south sides, about 275 feet in length; Jewin-street, south side from the corner; Redcross-street to Redcross-square, and north corner next Aldersgate-street; Aldermanbury, the west side of the south end; Milk-street, east side next Cheapside; White Rose-court, Coleman-street, and Mason's-alley, Moor-lane, south side, east corner, and north end, west side, from White-street to Type-street, and south end, Milton-street, east side; New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, through Tudor-street to the Temple.

The Special Committee then state that the Corporation have not the means at their disposal of effecting these improvements; and they suggest co-operation for that purpose with the metropolitan improvements commission, and application to the government.

For the convenience of our friends at a distance from the metropolis, we annex an engraved plan of the proposed improvements.

KEEPER'S NEW LODGE, AND DOG-KENNEL, WINDSOR.

The picturesque building represented in the above vignette has lately been erected near the footpath, across the Little Park, from Windsor to Datchet. It is occupied by Mr. Maynard, one of the royal keepers. In its rear is the private kennel, where are kept the fancy dogs belonging to the Queen and Prince Albert. As her Majesty and Prince Albert, when they visited the canine pets, found it inconvenient to cross the public footpath, it has been levelled or sunk, and across it has been thrown a light iron bridge, which connects in a line with a private footway leading from the slopes near Queen Adelaide's lodge to the kennel. We understand it to be in contemplation to erect near the dog-kennel another building for the fancy and rare fowls.

The Semaphore de Marseilles of the 2nd instant contains a letter from Athens of the 20th ult., stating that very strange rumours had circulated for some days in that capital. "A successor for King Otho was talked of," as if the latter had abdicated, and "the candidates for the throne of Greece were—1st, the Duke of Leuchtenberg, son-in-law of the Emperor of Russia; 2nd, the Duke of Cambridge; and 3rd, Prince Augustus of Saxe Coburg, who lately married Princess Clementine of Orleans."

LONDON: Printed by ROBERT PALMER (at the office of Palmer and Clayton), 10, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and published by WILLIAM LITTLER, at 198, Strand, where all communications are requested to be addressed.—SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1843.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 60.—Vol. II.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1843. [Sixpence.

OFFICE, 198, STRAND.

DISAFFECTION IN IRELAND.

The condition of Ireland still absorbs the attention of the Government, the Parliament, and the community, almost even to the exclusion of topics of dearest interest in England, and all-important questions of domestic legislation. Other excitements, no matter how fierce or violent—disturbances at home, or prospects of alarm abroad—are as it were hushed amid the fury of the louder controversy of repeal, and silence themselves into an anxious listening to the wild out-blasts of agitation which come sweeping from the Irish soil. Spain is in a conflict of rebellion—one of those dire spasms of revolution which unhinge her Government, and make her throne as it were a cradle, rocked rudely by the conflicting passions of the people—and yet our sympathies are weak and passive; and even our English jealousies of French intrigue do not bestir us away from a fixed contemplation of the great Irish question which is earthquaking society at home. The battle between Puseyism and the pure old simple Protestantism, which we have clung to so long, and clothed with a veneration and respect only commensurate with its virtue, may still wax warm in the universities, but in the great external world it bides its breath before repeal. The question of education, those clauses of the Factory Bill which promised an improvement of the social and moral condition of a race of infant slaves—slaves whom benevolence was to emancipate from one thraldom, and knowledge to light out of another—are abandoned by the Government with some mortification, and by the people with a passiveness which proves that they have more absorbing interests in view. The struggle to reconcile the conflicts of sectarianism has ceased and is forgotten amid the turmoil of repeal. Wales rears the head of riot, mad delusionists crusade against turnpikes and tranquillity, the Rebeccaites are strong in their sedition, and still the excitement of politics turns to Ireland alone. The non-intrusion question, the Scotch Church, the English poor-law, nay, almost all subjects of quarrel, grievance, or complaint, have fallen under the shade of the shamrock, and Erin, the great country of agitation, "stands alone in the storm!" Every mail, every newspaper, brings from Ireland fresh elements of turbulence—stirring, enthusiastic, feverish reports of almost rebellious meetings congregating with quite rebellious strength. The threat of physical force, the defiance of millions, is hurled in the teeth of Government with a boldness which becomes no whit the more attractive because it grins through the mockery of peace. The speeches of O'Connell and those who sail with him in the same vessel of desperation, grow into a madness of invective against "England and the English," against the "Saxon," the "Sassenach," the "Alien," far exceeding in bitterness anything of which either gall or daring has ventured utterance before. Men stand in armies, as it were, to listen to the very pibroch of war. They are told how well they could fight if they would, but how they shall not because of peace! The sword is waved before them, and they are shown with what power they can wield it; but it is returned into the scabbard—because of peace! There is the world-moral of peace set up—we must say ironically, sarcastically, falsely—in the very blaze of threat, defiance, passion, exultation in numbers, and such elements of agitation as "peace did ever deem unnatural," and all whose tendency is to "laugh order into scorn." It is absurd to feign a blindness to these facts—to the truth that Mr. O'Connell has so many marching armies of an agitated people at his disposal for peace or war—at his disposal for any mischief to which he chooses to set them, and if he does not tell them to act mischief, he tells them to think mischief, which is the first step towards acting it after all. Nor are even the oratory of the Liberator, and the exhortations of his clergy, employed among the people of Ireland without every sort and order of auxiliary agitation. That wild and beautiful stimulus, which among a warm, romantic, and poetic race—full of heroic and traditionary superstitions—is even more dangerous than beautiful—we mean, passion-clothed, familiar-appealing, ballad-minstrelsy, has been worked, and is working, with force, and depth, and violence, echo-full and sympathetic of the maddest words that have ever been spoken by O'Connell amidst that wild hurricane of the popular spirit with which he has now disordered the sobriety of his native land. Here are words that burn, gathered by us at random from the new "Lyrics of Repeal":—

> Bondsmen! compatriots' scoff of the stranger,
> Grasp the war-torch, and the chain-breaking sword;
> Or crouch, like Isaiah's hounds, at the foreigner's manger,
> And lick the red scourge of your Sassenach lord!
> Rouse you! for shame! from the slumber of ages,
> Sons of the murdered, by forest and waves;
> Shout like the ocean, when fierce tempest rages,
> Rise with the strength of ten millions of waves!
> Sound a loud hymn; for the gathering nation,
> Surging and murmuring, heaves like the sea;
> Sound! and full soon the glad harp-string's vibration
> Shall chime to the chorus of millions made free!
> By the crimson Clontarf, and the Liffey's dark water,
> By shore, vale, and stream, with our heart's blood that runs!
> By Barrow and Boyne, conflagration and slaughter,
> Shall toss their red plumes in the blaze of our guns!

Sober men, virtuous men, patriots, read verses like these, speeches like O'Connell's, with some contempt, perhaps; with much compassion, but certainly with the utmost sorrow of heart. However liberal, however radical the feeling in England, it cannot meet the spirit of this sort of agitation—its unfairness, its illegality, its disloyalty.

Why ferment these accursed differences between England and Ireland, as if the English people were not full of kindred with the Irish, as if they had not learned to nourish sympathies in common, as if, for years, they had not "taken their wrongs to their bosom," and raised their voices for their redress. Did not the popular voice of England carry Catholic Emancipation in conjunction and brotherhood with those who blame and hate her now? Did not reforms—parliamentary and municipal—tread in the footsteps of the first great boon? Did not concessions to the Roman Catholic religion of Ireland, and even abolition of Protestant taxation, in the shape of tithes, go farther still? and are not the people (we do not speak of the Government, though we hope it of that also), are not the people of this country still ready to make further and generous concessions to the people of Ireland, in the spirit of such brotherhood as should exist among communities, with a manly sense of their injuries, and a conscientious knowledge of their rights? We honestly believe that there is no civil nor even religious oppression in Ireland which the English would not honourably and heartily find a spunge to wipe away; how ungrateful, then, how insidious, how almost unnatural it is for agitation to set up enmity between them, and to tinge the feelings of a glowing and excited nation with a fiendlike and soil-rooted antipathy to a land with which—brother or alien—"Sassenach" or simple happy English—it must hold firm and binding companionship to the "crack of doom." As for the plain question of repeal of the Union, it is nonsense to entertain it, except for purposes of riot, disaffection, and bloodshed. Those English who would else do any thing for Ireland are against it to a man. Those English who would repeal her bad poor-law, who would call back her absentee proprietors into the bosom of her soil, who would reform her oppressive landlords, who would lavish wealth upon her wastes and bogs, who would cultivate, educate, elevate her in the scale of civilization, who would even stifle prejudice, and pay almost a concession of conscience to the religious freedom of her people, would halt indignantly at the sound of the trumpet of repeal, and "wage war with worlds" before they would dismember the empire, unsettle the constitution, and insult the Throne. How much of Ireland herself is similarly staunch? How have her nobles and representatives come forward to declare their allegiance to the Union, and their resistance to repeal. And yet how wildly, how fearfully, how desperately is she agitated and shaken from county to county with the one absorbing cry.

Ireland must suffer—nay, she does suffer bitterly for this. Already it is announced that her Majesty has abandoned her intention of visiting the shamrock soil, and that dawn of joy which was beginning to gush upon the loyalty of her people has subsided into a hopeless regretfulness, which takes its only consolation in the excitement of turbulent ambition, and the mad folly of repeal. Not this evil alone. In the crisis of agitation all legislative improvement stands still—the clock remains motionless and unwound. The question arises—not "how to improve the condition of Ireland," but "how to subject Ireland to the law." An atmosphere of despondency pervades all well-wishers of the unhappy country agitated; and those who love her best desire her welfare in nothing more than in the crushing of the O'Connell turbulence, the revival of mutual sympathies between her people and the English, and the restoration of such a degree of tranquillity as may admit of the opportunity of legislating promptly for her wrongs.

THE NEW GRESHAM COLLEGE.

Gresham College was established for the delivery of lectures appointed by Sir Thomas Gresham, during the law terms, on music, astronomy, physic, divinity, law, rhetoric, and geometry. They were delivered at the Royal Exchange till its destruction by fire; after which, the Gresham Committee, consisting of the Mercers' Company, and other citizens, determined upon providing a separate edifice for the purposes of the college. Accordingly, the present building has been erected from the designs of Mr. George Smith, the architect to the committee. It is situated at the corner of Basinghall-street and Cateaton-street: it is of the centered Roman style of architecture, and has an attached Corinthian portico on the principal entrance next Basinghall-street. The interior contains a large library and professor's room, on the ground floor; and a lecture-room on the one-pair floor, capable of holding upwards of 500 persons; separate rooms above are also provided for the different professors, together with apparatus rooms on the basement, apartments for attendants, &c. The building has been erected by Messrs. Baker and Son, at a cost of upwards of £7000.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.—(From our own Correspondent.)—PARIS, June 20.—Your excellent article on Spanish affairs in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of Saturday last has been much approved of in the French capital by all those who take real interest in the welfare of unhappy Spain, whilst at the Hotel de Courcelles (the residence of Christina) and I am sorry to say at that of Château, it has been most bitterly commented on, and, as you may naturally suppose, greatly blamed. I am still of opinion that Espartero will succeed in putting down the insurrection, but it must be confessed he has most powerful enemies, he has to contend with not only the intrigues of his Spanish opponents, but those of a powerful nation. It cannot be denied that the sent of the principal junta is in Paris, at the Hotel de Courcelles; from thence daily couriers are expedited to the frontiers, from thence secret agents are sent into Spain, from thence money in abundance is forwarded to the insurgents. The French Government either connive at what with justice might be called traitorous acts towards an ally, or they are ignorant of what is passing within five minutes' walk from the hotel of the Minister for Foreign Affairs. To credit the latter would be absurd. Can it be possible that M. Guizot is not aware that Generals Narvaez, the sworn enemy of Espartero, and O'Donnell, the chief of the late Christina insurrection, have left Paris with passports à reigle for Malaga?—that Generals Pezuela and Vigo are en route for Catalonia? that five millions of francs in specie have been sent to Perpignan, to be placed at the disposal of the Junta of Barcelona? No! M. Guizot is well informed, and his only excuse can be that he is an instrument in the hands of his minister. Examine for a moment the conduct of the French Government during the Carlist insurrection and now. Then many a Carlist officer of rank caught on the frontiers was, by order of M. Leroy, Sous-Prefet of Bayonne, arrested and transported into the interior, with chains on the neck and feet, dragged from his bed, and escorted on foot from brigade to brigade by gendarmes! Other Carlists who had, and it is within the last three months, fixed their residences in Paris have been ordered to quit the country at a few days' notice, since that a Carlist was condemned to prison for having returned to Paris from England, although he possessed a regular passport, signed by the French Ambassador in London. Now, Don Carlos Liberal pretends to be, Christina conspirators—the Maroto renegade Carlists, are received in the highest circles, and are permitted to penetrate into Spain upon every revolutionary movement. At Perpignan and Bayonne an insurrectionary junta is tolerated, I might say protected, and men publicly enrolled. And whence arises this inconsistent policy? Hatred to England—a desire to diminish the just influence of England in the Peninsula. The insurgents believe, or pretend to believe, that Louis Philippe is a disinterested friend, and therefore follow the instructions sent from France, not they have a so a secret object in view: the Espartero desire to be free of the majority of the Cortes, when in reality they, owing to the youth of the Queen, would become dictators. Christina could also establish a Zea Bermudez, Toreno, or Martinez de la Rosa administration, or would at the same epoch become the sole arbitrator of the destinies of Spain. Thus, what with hatred to England, and the desire to secure the reins of Government, Espartero has a host of enemies to contend against, and every one of these enemies, not the ingenuous purposes of designing intriguers. But will the insurgents succeed? I repeat, in my opinion, with great difficulty. The heroic conduct of Colonel Echalecu in refusing to give up the fortress of Morella to the insurgents, is a case in point. Should General Seoane advance with a respectable force on Barcelona the people will not risk a second bombardment; besides, independent of other fortresses in Catalonia, Espartero has still Leyida, one of the most important points of the principality. Be assured that so long as the mountaineers of Catalonia take no part with the insurgents, their position is very doubtful, and, from a letter which I have seen written by Tristany, it is given as positive that the Carlists intend preserving, at the present crisis, a strict neutrality. Attempts have been and are still making to get up an insurrection in the Basque provinces, but hitherto without success; and of this I feel certain, the Basques will never join the banners of Christina, Lopez, or France. You may be told that France has assured Lord Cowley that it is not her intention to aid England. Of course, upon such a promise; Lord Palmerston can, if he pleases, give some curious details of the co-operation of the French Government under the quadruple alliance. In the meantime, Espartero is forming an army of observation on the line of the Pyrenées, and officers of the staff of the Minister of War have been sent to Perpignan and Bayonne.

The Minister is greatly disatisfied with the commission charged with the examination of the budget, and it is said that several of its members are in disgrace with his excellency. Marshal Soult is said to be the author of the measure that would be carried into effect in 1842, viz., that the army should consist of 300,000 men, viz., 60,000 cavalry, for the service of the interior, and 60,000 infantry, &c., and 13,800 cavalry for Algiers. The commission have made a reduction of 14,000 men, and, notwithstanding the alarming state of Europe, recommend a further reduction. The discussion on this subject in the Chamber of Deputies will be interesting, but should the Ministers be beaten they do not intend to retire. The effective of the army will, for the present year, remain as it is, viz., 8000 or 9000 men, the same as in 1838 or 1839. The Ministers are also in an awkward position as regards a commercial treaty with England. In the Chamber of Deputy, which he said would be discussing and bringing questions about the treaty, which he said would be disastrous and ruinous to French industry, M. Guizot replied, "that he would do nothing without consulting the Chambers." I am sure you will be pleased to hear that I had repeat, that a treaty of commerce [illegible] and that the [illegible] the treaty [illegible] the papers, in reference to the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] praising that her Majesty would be graciously pleased to advance to the claimants for losses sustained by the seizure of British ships and cargoes by the Danish Government in 1807, the amount of their respective losses as ascertained by the commissioners appointed for the investigation of Danish claims, and reported upon the 12th day of May, 1840, and assuring her Majesty that this house will make good the same.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER entered into a statement of the circumstances out of which these claims arose, which have been repeatedly placed before the public, and said he felt himself bound to offer the most determined resistance to the motion. The question was, whether they were to lay down the new principle that the owners of vessels captured at sea during war time should be entitled to compensation, and if this principle were admitted the claims which would be made would be as innumerable as they would be irresistible, if allowed. On a division on the question the motion was defeated by a majority of 37 to 42.—Mr. S. CRAWFORD then rose to move for leave to bring in a bill to repeal the act of the 1st year of Geo. II., cap. 2, 3, 8c., for extending the duration of Parliament to seven years. The honourable gentleman said he would be content to accept, at present, the smallest concession, and would, therefore, ask for triennial Parliaments only, though he was himself in favour of annual Parliaments.—Dr BOWRING seconded the motion.—Sir J. GRAHAM said the motion was neither wise, politic, nor convenient, and was an abandonment of the principles laid down by Sir Robert Peel, by which the duration of Parliament was retained as a balance to the democratic power which was established by the proviso out of that bill. He should oppose the motion, and would, therefore, move, as an amendment, that the previous question be now put.—The house was cleared for a division, when the motion was defeated by a majority of 48 to 23.—Captain BERKELEY then drew the attention of the house to the inexpediency and danger of employing the Excise and Coast Guard officers and commanders, and re-establishing them as sloops of war in her Majesty's navy, and concluded by moving a resolution that the house viewed with apprehension the employment of these vessels after the suppression which had been ordered—The report on the Princess Augusta's Annuity Bill was then brought up, and the house soon after adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—WEDNESDAY,

The house did not sit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

Several private bills were advanced, and many petitions presented.—The Princess Augusta's Annuity Bill was read a third time and passed.—Mr. FERRAND postponed the second reading of his bill for the allotment of waste lands till Wednesday next.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER made a communication to the house that he intended to move that the house should, on Friday, resolve itself in to a committee on the Excise Acts. The year's experiment that had been made of the additional duty of 1s. a gallon on Irish spirits had shown a progressive increase of offences against the excise laws while the revenue had not been increased to the extent anticipated. The right hon. gentlemen declared that he felt so strongly with regard to the moral effect of the change in the Irish spirit duty, that he could not consent to the continuance of the evil.—Mr. AGLIONBY called attention to an oversight in the late Registration Act, whereby, in consequence of a misapprehension by the Post-office, the notices of objections had not been forwarded, and thus every voter in the kingdom would be affected. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER promised to make inquiry to the circumstance.—On the motion of Mr. G. W. WOOD, the Scientific Societies Bill was read a second time.—Lord WORSLEY moved the commitment of the Coroners Bill. On the suggestion of Lord C. SOMERSET, the bill was committee pro formâ, in order to have the amendments, which were numerous, made, and the bill reprinted.—Lord WORSLEY moved the second reading of the Commons Inclosure Bill.—Colonel SIBTHORP moved, as an amendment, that the second reading be given that day six months.—Sir C. BURRELL, Mr. MILES, Mr. C. BULLER, Lord SANDON, Mr. DEVITT, and Mr. AGLIONBY supported the bill; and Mr. FERRAND, Mr. ROEBUCK, and Mr. S. CRAWFORD opposed it.—Lord J. MANNERS wished its postponement only until the committee now sitting on this subject should make its report.—On a division there were—For the motion, 64; against it, 43: majority, 20.—The Simon Fisheries Bill was read a third time and passed.—Mr. S. O'BRIEN obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend an act of the Parliament of Ireland, 19 and 20 George III., for preventing the granting of grants at long dates and tolls, to be paid for passing, save in certain cases.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL obtained leave to bring in a bill to give writs of error in mandamus.—Mr. WILLIAMS moved that Mr. Milner Gibson and Mr. Villiers be added to the select committee on the peerages from Epworth. He made this proposal because, as now constituted, he did not think the committee a fair one.—Mr. WAKEFIELD said that if the Right Hon. Baronet opposite (Sir Robert Peel) was to withdraw his motion, he should not on that day having been disposed of, their lordships adjourned at half-past six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

Mr. WARD gave notice of a motion respecting the Irish Church Establishment on the third reading of the Irish Arms Bill.—The EARL of ABERDEEN (who is involved in the consequence of the Townshend Peerage Bill) took an opportunity of giving an explanation of some of the points arising out of this case, but ultimately deferred his final statement until the bill goes into committee.—The house then went into committee on the Sugar Duties Bill. Mr. CORDEN moved an amendment to the effect that all protective duties in favour of colonial produce be abolished, but this proceeding being out of order, it was withdrawn.—Mr. EWART then moved that the duty on foreign sugar be reduced from 63s. to 24s.—After a long discussion the motion was negatived by a majority of 135 to 60. Mr. HAWES moved that the duty be reduced to 36s., which was also rejected by a majority of 203 to 172. The bill then went through committee, and the house adjourned at one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS. FRIDAY

Their lordships met at five o'clock. The Princess Augusta's Annuity Bill was read a second time. A short conversation took place on the subject of National Education, but no other business of importance was transacted, and their lordships adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

In answer to a question from Mr. S. WORTLEY, on the subject of a new house, Sir J. GRAHAM said that the Government thought it would be desirable to advise her Majesty to issue a commission for a general gaol delivery in the course of the winter, and they had accordingly advised her Majesty that there should be a general gaol delivery throughout England and Wales during the winter.—The house then went into committee on the Irish Arms Bill.

COUNTRY NEWS

KENT.—HOP INTELLIGENCE.—Maidstone.—The few warm days of the last week have been doubtless of service to the bines, which are still unequal, and by no means so kindly as usual at this period. The fly hangs about them, and without some genial weather will not escape be shaken off. A few warm days would do much to improve their air present somewhat sickly appearance, and it may be safely calculated that up to this period no great harm has been done which is not retrievable.—Canterbury.—The bine in this district is very uneven, but has greatly improved within the last two or three days. There are not so many flies as there were. The vine on the oast-house and walls is turning yellow.—Ospringe.—The bines on the bottoms are looking middling, as regards the quantity of bine in some of the grounds, while of ors are short of bine, and the whole of them look yellow, from the wet and cold nights. The grounds on the north side of the parish do not promise at present for a large crop.

LIVERPOOL.—ANOTHER FIRE.—Between the hours of seven and eight o'clock on the morning of Monday last, another fire was discovered in the old excise offices, Hanover street, Liverpool. It seems to have originated in the rear of one of the upper rooms, which is used as a depository for oakum, and is in the occupation of Mr. Joseph Wilson, timber merchant; and the general supposition is that the oakum must have become ignited owing to the carelessness of one of the boys who opened the concern, and who proceeded through the building with a lighted candle or lamp in his hand. Shortly after the alarm had been given, several engines arrived upon the spot, and the flames were extinguished before an hour had elapsed.

NORTHWICH.—The Liberal electors of this borough entertained their representative, Mr. Gisborne, last week at dinner, in the Exchange-hall, in commemoration of their triumph at the last election. The chair was occupied by Mr. Wakefield, mayor of the borough.

SUSSEX.—SUSPECTED INCENDIARISM.—On Friday week, about half past ten A.M., a large hay-stack, belonging to the Rev. John Underwood of Uckfield, was discovered to be on fire. The stack stood a distance of about thirty rods from any habitation, and was fired at each end, and at the bottom to leeward. The enthusiastic endeavours of a I present to subdue the flames were convincing proofs of the high estimation in which the rev gentleman is held, and were most handsomely and feelingly acknowledged by him, while many execrations, "not loud, but deep," were vented on the perpetrators of the outrage. We believe that the pecuniary loss of the rev gentlemen is nothing when compared to his grief at the fiendish spirit which actuated the base incendiary. The police are taking active measures for the detection of the villain, but we greatly fear with our present prospect of success.

ATTACK ON THE CARMARTHEN WORKHOUSE.—On Monday last several hundreds of respectable farmers assembled in the neighbourhood of Carmarthen, and attended by a great multitude of the poorer classes, prepared to parade the town. Several neighbouring magistrates in vain expostulated with them on their conduct. They read a list of the paupers and the changes they desired, which included, not only the removal of all the turnpike gates in the country, but also the abolition of all tithe and rent charge in lieu of tithes, the alteration of the present poor-law, towards which they expressed the most bitter hostility, abolition of church-rates, and an equitable adjustment of their land-lords' rents. The Rebeccaites marched along the quay, and through Bridge street and Spilman-street, by the prison, and past the hall. They were headed by a band of music, and were all armed with staves. They hooted the magistracy. The leading body consisted of some thousands on foot, many of whom were Charitas and rabble of the town, a large number of women was among the crowd, and men bearing inflammatory placards; these were followed by a man in disguise to represent Miss Rebecca: some bearing brooms with which to sweep the foundations of the to l houses and the workhouse, and the rear bro ught up by about 300 farmers on horseback. Before the civil or military force could collect the workhouse the rioters had attacked it. They were met by the high walls with which the building is surrounded, and then burst open the lodge gates and poured into the premises, the leaders rode into the yard and surrounded the premises, and the rioters soon forced an entrance into the building and commenced their work of destruction. The governor during this time was using the alarm bell, and while the rioters were in the act of pulling down the inner doors and partitions of the boards-men and other parts of the premises, an i pitching out the beds through the windows, the military and civil force arrived. The 31st act was immediately read by Mr. Morris; the civil force was ordered to close the outer gates, and to secure the other rioters who were inside and who had just been engaged in the outrage, who were ordered to surrender prisoners, and the body outside were directed to keep back. They would not obey the orders, and an attempt was made to push upon the military; they were ordered to charge, as the rioters within the walls (about 150 in number) were endeavouring to escape, and the immediate object were benum ng in the force. The military charged with the march and 40 in lis in the morning, beneath a broiling sun, behaved most gallantly, and their speed and coolness in aiding in capturing the rioters, and in dispersing the throng, were too much admired. Many of them used the flat of their swords only, and soon set the host of rioters on foot and on horseback scampering. Resistance was at first offered by some of those who were ordered by the magistrates to be apprehended, and it is to be regretted that the soldiers were obliged in self-defence to use the edge of their weapons, by means of which three persons were wounded, one of whom is a woman, but the injuries are not serious. A farmer fell off his horse and had his head cut open by a kick, but is doing well. Depositions were immediately taken against the parties apprehended; several of whom have been fully committed, and the inquiry has been adjourned to the 20th instant, they in custody. Had it not been for the firmness and activity displayed by the magistrates the workhouse would in another tec minutes have been in flames, and where the violence of the misguided men engaged in the fearful outrage would have terminated, no person can well guess. Things are now quiet, but how long they will remain so is a problem, which a few days, or perhaps a few hours, will solve. The rioters have not yet returned to their homes. A brother-in-law of a member of parliament, it is said, is among those in custody, and against whom informations on oath have been taken.—The attention of the authorities appears to be seriously directed towards Ireland as to overlook the alarming state of society in Wales altogether. If an arms bill be required anywhere it is surely in Wales, in the present alarming condition of the country.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

During the present week there has been no betting in Town. The sport was confined—as far as the turf was concerned—to the two pleasure meetings of Hampton and Newton. The former was infinitely the most brilliant known on the classic ground of Moulsey, and the latter was well attended, and terminated on Friday; but to Thurs lay, the gala of the meeting, this brief notice is confined. There surely never was a day more cut out for by Gossip than the Hampton Cup day of 1841. It was a day of pleasant topsy-turvy, it was a real blessing for the pleasure folks to see the day their hearts had been set on for months down and set like summer "in the sweet south." Thursday brought more people to the race ground than the 3 days to Ascot—we had almost said, than the Derby to Epsom. The descent however performed, was one of evident delight to every merry mortal engaged in it. To Bushey Park there were carriages of all kinds, and one or thrown, the occupants of which seemed as much pleased as the groups of Hodrs that perambulated the course, like beds of locomotive tulips. As soon drew nigh, as did tens of thousands of happy faces to the scene, and the sport commenced the whole of the Hurst was a re ony of the gay and glad. The racing was very good, the cheer was better, and courtesy and hilarity the order of the day. We see nothing of the betting, and little of the races: to judge from appearances, all were gainers by the day. To teach us a necessary moral, peradventure, in the sunshine of nature and sout it at made the existence of the scene, one terrible episode occurred, and a wretch, by his own act, hastened off his mortal coil—a gentleman—or one of such seeming, out this throat upon the open course.

The little business that occurred into the 2d day of the day turned "a lung'ring look behind," the settling for the Derby being generally spoken of as much worse than had been anticipated. We may have occasion to remark upon them further. In the meanwhile, as the Ledger is hardly in the market, our cautions will keep.

No betting of any account in London or elsewhere.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

DESPERATE ATTEMPT TO MURDER A FAMILY, AND TO COMMIT SUICIDE.—A case nearly parallel with that of the Stebbing tragedy, at Camberwell, which took place some years ago, was on Monday last brought under the consideration of the magistrate at Queen-square police court. James Abberdein, a man between thirty and for y years of age, of wretched appearance, and having his head bound up with plasters, and his hands covered with blood, was brought to the bar. It appears that on last morning, attempted to murder his son, a boy eight years old, and his daughter, an infant of two years of age, and also to destroy himself.—Elizabeth Abberdein, the wife of the prisoner, was laid into the office in a state of great weakness. She stated that she, with her husband, resided at 3, Francis-street, Back-fields, Westminster, where they kept a shop in the general line. Her husband and she lived on very comfortable terms, and as he was a sober, industrious man, she never saw anything wrong about him until within the last six months, when he began to express apprehensions of their coming to poverty. From this time that they commenced to mind he became restless and uneasy, and on more than one occasion said to her "that he should like to destroy the children, in order to prevent their being reduced to distress;" but as he showed no disposition to injure any of his family, she thought nothing of it. On that (Monday) morning at seven o'clock he got up and opened the shop in the usual way, and served a customer, but, as she afterwards learned, left the shop for a few minutes. Witness was in bed asleep with her infant daughter, when she was suddenly awakened by a loud screaming from her son, who lay in a truckle bed by her. She started up at the cry, and perceived blood on the head, and her husband standing over her with an axe in his hand. She struggled to get out of bed, but before she could reach her husband he struck the boy a second blow, which inflicted another most severe wound, from which the blood flowed copiously. She then seized him, and strove, tried violently to drag him towards the bed-room door, which she succeeded in half locking, and while she was endeavouring to open the passage from her grasp, and rushing towards the boy, struck him a third time on the head with the axe. He then aimed a violent blow at the infant as it lay upon the pillow, nearly cut it in two, and would have made

ALGOA BAY.

This rising settlement, known also as Port Elizabeth, and formerly called Twartkop's Bay, is situated in Cape Colony, and is nearly 500 miles eastward of Cape Town, between it and the newly settled district of Albany. The inlet is about twenty miles broad from east to west: it is a good holding ground, and for six months of the year, when the north-west winds prevail, is perfectly secure; but during the remaining months a heavy sea rolls in from the south-east. The tide rises in the bay from six to seven feet. The shore is a level sandy beach; it receives the waters of three rivers, and has, besides, some fine springs of water on the western side. The surrounding country forms part of the district of Uitenhagen. The bay is much frequented by black whales, and a successful fishery is carried on. The annexed view is from a sketch by a correspondent.

The first party of emigrants went from this kingdom to Cape Colony in 1820; debarked at Port Elizabeth, now Algoa Bay; and as many as 3659 individuals landed here in the summer of that year. There were then but three huts on the beach; now Elizabeth Town rises on the shore, with a population of 3000 souls. Uitenhagen, 18 miles from the Bay, contains 2000 souls. Graham's Town, in Albany, 100 miles up the country, contains 6000 persons, principally English. There are numerous other towns and villages in the district, as Somerset, Graf-Reynet, Beaufort, Bathurst, Sidbury, Salem, Cradock, &c.

A very promising account of the progress of Algoa Bay appeared from a correspondent, settled there, in the Sun of last Friday. The writer allows that the settlement at first was very disastrous; he adds that only one incursion had been made by the natives; further inland these attacks had been very frequent. In 1821 the exports were £1500; in 1841 they were £71,242; and in the first half of 1842, £75,804. This rapid rise is attributed to the extraordinary growth of wool, which increases here ten times as fast as in Australia. The staple is quite equal, and it brings 2s. 6d. per lb. The land equals in value that of Australia, and is one quarter the price. The wheat is stated to be "the finest in the world," and heavier by three or four pounds per bushel than the best English wheat; and it always fetches in the corn-markets of London, Calcutta, the Mauritius, and Australia, more than any English or foreign grain. Yet bread is dear, on account of the high price of labour; but beef and mutton are from 1½d. to 3d. per lb. The climate is healthier than that of England, or either of her other colonies: it is warmer than Canada, and nearly as warm as Australia.

The population of the district is 70,000: its progress is stated to have equalled or surpassed that of any other colony of its time. The writer adds, that it is prosperous, moral, and intelligent; there are in proportion more churches and chapels here than in any other settlement; convicts have never been introduced; and almost every town and village has its Government free schools, which are patterns for the mother country. There are no paupers, and the proportion of males and females in them nearly as in England. If these statements be correct, the settlement must be a fine "emigration field." Field labourers, house servants, and shepherds are much in request: some of the latter class already in the colony have flocks of their own. Mechanics of the useful class are wanted, as bricklayers, stonemasons, plasterers, carpenters, shoemakers, tailors, saddlers, harness-makers, wheelwrights, turners, cabinet-makers, smiths, plumbers and glaziers, coppersmiths, braziers, cutlers, and printers, besides bakers and butchers. There is, however, no demand for those who exist by the superfluities of life. The provision trade is extensive; an establishment having been formed here for the curing of beef several years since, when it was expected that much trade of this kind might be carried on between the settlers and the Mauritius as well as with the vessels touching on their way from India, and eventually also with the West India Islands.

SUEZ.

Further intelligence has just been received from Alexandria, announcing the intention of the Pacha of Egypt to proceed with the execution of the long-proposed work of joining the Red Sea with the Mediterranean, by means of a canal to be cut from Suez to Pelusium. This work, at all times desirable, will now assume increased importance from Suez being the point of communication between Europe and India, by means of steam navigation on the Red Sea, whilst it is a welcome indication of the interest taken by the Pacha in the great work of national intercommunication, referred to by a correspondent in our last paper.

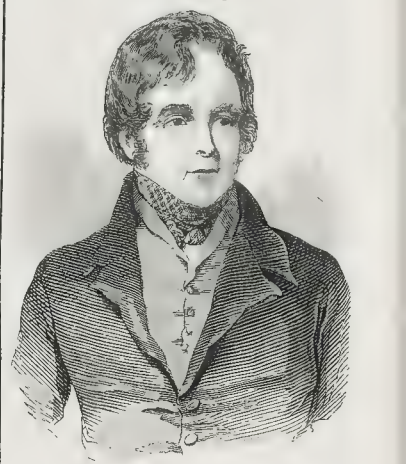
Suez lies on an angle of land at the head of the westernmost of the two arms or gulfs in which the Red Sea terminates, and is 624 geographical miles east of Cairo. The town is poorly walled on three sides, being open to the sea on the north-east, where is the harbour, and a good quay. Within the walls are many open places, and several khans built around large courts; the houses are meanly built; there is a bazaar, or street of shops, supplied with goods from Cairo. The population scarcely reaches 1400. The importance of Suez, however, arises from its position; and the transit of the productions and merchandise of the East from the Red Sea to the Nile has always made this a valuable station. The concourse of pilgrims who annually embark here for Mecca has also rendered necessary a town at this point: nevertheless, with its present resources, it is little better than a mere place of passage.

The advantages which would accrue to the commercial intercourse between Europe and the southern and eastern countries of Asia from a canal navigable for large vessels being cut across the Isthmus of Suez, are obvious, and it has been attempted several times. There certainly once existed a canal on the Isthmus, for numerous traces of it still appear; it did not, however, unite the two seas, but only the Red Sea with the river Nile; this canal was commenced nearly 2500 years ago. When the French, under Bonaparte, had got possession of the country, they intended to give another direction to the commerce of Europe with India, by making a canal, fit for large vessels across the isthmus; and, accordingly, they examined with great care the whole country between the two seas. A few years ago the idea was started of connecting the two seas by a railway, and a company was formed in England for the purpose; but little or no progress seems to have been made in the execution of this scheme. The report of the French engineers, however, shows that the country does not possess invincible obstacles to such an enterprise; and their survey will, doubtless, prove of essential service to the engineers of the Pacha in the proposed canal.

POPULAR PORTRAITS.—No. XL.

THE EARL OF RIPON.

Those who do not constantly breathe the very atmosphere, as it may be called, of political life, must often have felt the inconvenience of the changes of name and title which men who pass through the several stages of political rank sometimes undergo. The metamorphoses of Ovid are not more embarrassing, to follow in the substance, than these changes in the name which, after all, is no part of us; the individual is the same, but the idea of identity in others is, for a time, shaken and confused. Long accustomed to one name, habituated to the familiar syllables at the side of the column and at the head of a goodly array of type in the morning's report of the overnight's speech, it is some time before the reader of debates can reconcile himself to the new title that overrides the old name; under the new sign, we do not, for the moment, recognise the person signified. The change strikes the eye, but the mind does not instantly appreciate it; there is a mental process to be gone through, and when it is over, we cannot help wishing the man had kept to his old designation both for our sake and his own. It would have saved us both some trouble; it would have spared us the labour of recognising his new name, and himself the pains of forgetting his old one. Do not all our readers date their letters wrong as often as right, through all the month of January at least, in every new year? A habit of eleven months' duration is not dropped with less than three weeks' practice and perseverance; and having signed himself "in bill, warrant, or quittance," plain A. B., it strikes us that statesmen and placemen (though proverbially proficients in forgetting old humilities and adapting themselves to new dignities,) cannot, all at once, subscribe themselves aristocratically, though her Majesty's letters patent have entitled them to do so. "New garments," says Shakspere, "do not cling to us fitly, but with the aid of use;" he somewhere says too, that "new-made titles do forget men's names;" but that means the names of other men; do they so soon forget their own? For instance now—did James Scarlett, at once and without difficulty, transform himself (upon paper) into Abinger? Did John Singleton Copley take immediately to the title of Lyndhurst? Did Spring Rice spring and rise in a day to the lofty flight of a Monteagle? No more than Rome was built in the same space of time. And we will stake our literary reputation (a small venture, we must confess), that Powlett Thompson did not escape from that "widely-distributed" cognomen into the genteel and three-volumed novel-like title of Sydenham in less than a fortnight at least.



PORTRAIT OF THE EARL OF RIPON.

We have been led into this inexcusable digression by the various changes of name which the subject of our sketch has undergone. To have changed sides as often would have deprived a statesman of all character for consistency for ever. Such of our readers who were old enough to be politicians in the latter years of the period when "George the Third was King"—when the princes and potentates of Europe were beginning to think of enjoying their own again when the military tornado that had swept over the Continent was subsiding—and when Napoleon and rents were falling together—may recollect the Honourable Frederick John Robinson, who in 1815, or thereabouts, was a middle-aged man, having been born in 1782, and had filled several offices in the Government of the time, coming at last to be Chancellor of the Exchequer, under the ministry of Mr. Canning. In those days, when he was plain Mr. Robinson, he was known for little but being a tolerably good man of business, conversant with all the details of office, and generally suspected of possessing greater talents than a kind of natural indolence would allow him to give fair play to. But men do not always choose their own parts in the great dramas of life or politics; position or circumstances, or sometimes both, cause to be thrust upon them — not greatness perhaps, but importance. Names, comparatively small, are often linked with questions absolutely momentous, and thus live in history, in something the same manner as the amber is said to enclose the straw and prevent it from perishing. It thus happened with Mr. Robinson. The year 1815 found him a member of the Government, and brought with it the most important events, the destruction of the power of Napoleon, and peace with the world at large. The war had continued so long and so uninterruptedly that it came to be considered as the natural state of things, and, although every one rejoiced at the restoration of peace, very few of the great interests were found prepared for it. Among the least ready for the change was the agricultural interest. The great fall in the price of every article the produce of the land, consequent on the importation caused by the peace, was severely felt by the farmers, whose rent had been calculated on a higher scale of prices, and embarrassment, discontent, and distress were almost universal among them. These evils, it was thought, might be remedied by a legislative enactment, and Mr. Robinson proposed that corn-law which, having undergone many modifications, exists at the present day. On the policy of such a law we are not here required to speak; but it is mere matter of history to state that the measure was very unpopular: so strong was the feeling against it that the vicinity of the House of Commons while it was under discussion was daily thronged by a mob that hooted at the supporters of it as they passed, and from that proceeded to more violent measures, for an English mob, though difficult to be excited, is when roused a dangerous and ungovernable mass. They beset the houses of the Ministers, and that of Mr. Robinson himself was a special object of their rage. The military force was called out; soldiers were stationed in his mansion, and, an attack being made upon it, they were compelled to fire on the people, and one man was killed and several wounded. The bill was nevertheless passed, and the excitement gradually subsided; but the past contains the seeds of the present, even as "Dordona's forest" may be traced back to the single "acorn cup," and Mr.

Robinson must be regarded as the origin of the Anti-Corn-law League in all its ramifications, and agencies, and lecturers, and agitation, its travelling orators, and its tons of tracts and pamphlets, meeting the eye and filling the ear whichever way we turn. But many years were to pass before it was again assailed, by different means than the pettings and violence of a mob. Cobden was undreamed of: he was then an obscure "farmer's boy," keeping his father's sheep in their Suffolk fields, unconscious of the future that awaited him—of a time of Drury Lane gatherings, and personal controversies with a Prime Minister in the senate of the nation. But the Corn-law was passed, and with it the name of Mr. Robinson is inseparably connected. For many years after this period he continued in office, and, under the ministry of Mr. Canning, was Chancellor of the Exchequer. While he filled this post he was so remarkable for always contending, in the face of the greatest embarrassments, that the country and its finances were flourishing, that he obtained the name of "Prosperity Robinson," which was given him, we believe, by Cobbett, whose nicknames always had the unfortunate property of sticking to those to whom he gave them. Years again wore on, and Mr. Robinson was created Viscount Goderich; and, in one of those changes and chances of political life which so frequently occur, he found himself raised from the post of a subordinate to that of a chief. He was made First Lord of the Treasury, and took on himself a burden without following the advice of Horace, and first considering whether or not his shoulders were capable of sustaining it. It proved that they were not so; the fearful responsibility of the station scared him; he was deficient in that firmness and decision which can alone support a man in such an office, in such a country as this; and, after holding the office for a period almost ludicrously brief, he willingly gave place to another. The sway of Wellington and Peel succeeded; and on the rise of the Grey Administration he was again in office, but again as a subordinate. In 1833 he quitted it, and his long official labours were rewarded by his being created a peer, with the title of the Earl of Ripon. In person he is rather stout, with a florid complexion. He does not speak more frequently than his official situation compels him to do; but, next time the Corn-laws are discussed in the House of Lords he will be heard opposing their repeal, in which, though many may be inclined to impeach his wisdom, none can deny his consistency. The offices he has filled are those of Lord Privy Seal, Colonial Secretary, President of the Board of Trade, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and First Lord of the Treasury. Under the present Government he is again President of the Board of Control.

ANNIVERSARIES.

SIGNING OF MAGNA CHARTA.

Southey has emphatically observed, that the day on which Magna Charta was obtained ought to be religiously observed in these kingdoms as a national holiday for thanksgiving and joy. The importance of the event would appear to justify such an appropriation, for, of this glorious deed, remarks Sir James Mackintosh, "to have produced it, to have preserved it, to have matured it, constitutes the immortal claim of England on the esteem of mankind."

On the 15th day of June, 1215, upon one of the beautiful green swards of the county of Surrey, this ever-memorable transaction took place. The parties to "the Great Charter of English Liberties"—King John and the barons—met according to a previous arrangement in a meadow between Staines and Windsor, adjacent to the Thames, called Runnimede, and this meadow, which has for ages been regarded as the place where the great charter was signed, or rather sealed, is in the parish of Egham. It has been stated, however, that although the conferences between the opposite parties may have been held at Runnimede, yet the actual scene of the ratification of the covenant was an island in the Thames, still known by the name of Charter Island, which is not within Surrey, but belongs to the parish of Wraysbury, in Buckinghamshire. The fallacy of this assertion is easily proved, for Runnimede is expressly named in the King's subscription to the charter itself, as the place where it was signed. The words are—"in Prato quod vocatur Runnimed' int' Windleshor' & Stanes," as may be seen in an original copy of the charter, preserved among the archives of Lincoln Cathedral. The "Carta de Foresta," which was granted by John on the same day, was also signed at Runnimede. The ceremony took place, not in any house, but in the open field; the assembly continues for some days; but it was no sooner dissolved than the King threw off the mask, which, with consummate hypocrisy, he had worn during the proceedings. Lingard says, that "in a paroxysm of rage, he cursed the day of his birth, gnashed his teeth, rolled his eyes, gnawed sticks and straws, and acted all the freaks of a madman."

This charter is often regarded as the constitutional basis of English liberties; but, in many of its provisions, it seems to have been only a declaration of rights which had been enjoyed in England before the Conquest, and which are said to have been granted by King Henry I. on his accession. However, if it did not properly found the liberties which the English nation enjoys, or if it were not the original of those privileges and franchises which the barons (or the chief tenants of the crown, for the names are here equivalent), ecclesiastical persons, citizens, burgesses, and merchants enjoy; it recalled into existence, it defined, it settled them, it formed in its written state a document to which appeal might be made, under whose protection any person having interest in it might find shelter; and which served, as it were, a portion of the common law of the land, to guide the judges to the decision they pronounced in all questions between the king and any portion of the people.

The names of the chiefs who gained this grand concession from the king are preserved in the charter itself. The first name is that of Robert Fitz Walter, who belonged to the great family of Clare. Next to him come Eustace de Vesci, Richard de Percy, Robert de Roos, Peter de Brus, Nicolas de Stureville, Sociee de Quenci, Earl of Winchester, the Earls of Clare, Essex, and Norfolk, William de Mowbray, Robert de Vere, Talk Fitz Warine, William de Montacute, William de Beauchamp, and many others of families long after famous in English history, the progenitors of the ancient baronial houses of England.

Magna Charta has been painted in a great variety of forms; there are fac-similes of a copy of it which was made at the time, and still exists in the British Museum, and another preserved at Lincoln, already mentioned. Of this charter the late Board of Commissioners on the Public Records caused to be engraved and published an exact fac-simile, and it will be found printed and translated in the first volume of "The Statutes of the Realm." Long after the Charter was granted, to keep the rights thus guaranteed fully in the eyes of the people, a copy was sent to every cathedral church, and read publicly twice a year.

Blackstone gives a satisfactory abridgment of the charter in his "Commentaries;" we have, besides, an express treatise on it. It was called Magna Charta, or the Great Charter, not on account of its extent, for a single page of parchment, measuring 20¼ inches by 14¼, contains the whole of its privileges; but because it recorded so many ancient rights of the nation, and abolished so many unjust oppressions. The finest and most perfect original of the Charter is that at Lincoln. For popular gratification, the Charter has been lithographed, and published at a moderate price.

SIGNING OF MAGNA CHARTA.

THE HAMPDEN MEMORIAL.

The patriot, John Hampden, whom historians of the most opposite parties unite in unanimously praising, was descended from the ancient family of the Hampdens, of the village of Hampden, between Aylesbury and Wycombe, in Buckinghamshire. His political influence throughout this county was very great before his reputation became general. His resistance to the imposition of ship-money, in 1636, induced many other residents in Buckinghamshire to follow his example; and it is remarkable that there is no appearance of an assessment of ship-money having been made upon the county of Buckingham after Hampden's trial. In the civil war, he raised and commanded a troop, with which he joined the Parliamentary army, acting chiefly in Berkshire and the adjoining counties. Being a member of the Committee of Public Safety, as well as a military leader, he was incessantly and variously occupied in all the affairs of the war. As Buckinghamshire had been the scene of his early struggles, so it was that of their close; for, in an engagement with Prince Rupert upon Chalgrove Field, June 18, 1643, Hampden placed himself at the head of the attack, but in the first charge received his death-wound. Two carabine balls struck him in the shoulder, and, breaking the bone, entered his body; he left the field, and obtained surgical aid at Thame, but the wound was incurable, and, after six days' severe suffering, he expired.

For two centuries, therefore, has Chalgrove been pointed out as a battle-field—as one of those landmarks in our history, which alike rivet the reader in his closet and the traveller on his journey, and attract even the wonder of the untaught rustic. Chalgrove-field is a large open plain, extending to nearly 100 acres, upon the verge of Buckinghamshire, towards the county of Oxford. The project of raising a memorial to Hampden upon this plain was suggested, we believe, some years since, by Lord Nugent, who has most ably chronicled the career of the patriot in his "Memorials of Hampden." His lordship's zealous efforts have been aided by several noblemen and gentlemen; but it must be acknowledged that the memorial is scarcely worthy of the man whose virtues it is proposed to commemorate. It is raised upon a mound where the Oxford and Wallington road is crossed by a lane leading on one side to the village of Chalgrove, and on the other to Warpsgrove farm-house. It was here that Prince Rupert, in his retreat towards Oxford, from the country round Postcomb, Chinnor, and Lewknor, having repulsed the main body of the Parliamentary troops under Gunter and Cross, was encountered by Hampden, who led a party of horse to the attack from the direction of Warpsgrove. It must have been very near this spot that Hampden received his death-wounds, shot by some of the musketeers of the prince, who lined the hedge.

The monument has not the slightest pretension to architectural beauty; nor could the latter be expected, seeing that the cost of its construction has been under £170. In form it resembles the lower part of a pyramid, of brick faced with stone, 16 feet high, surmounted with a small cap of stone, and resting on a plinth of the same material, about 10 feet square. It is surrounded by a neat iron railing, the whole being erected on a mound of turf, slightly raised above the surrounding fields, and enclosed by a small fosse, or ditch containing water. On the northern side of the monument is the following inscription, from the pen of Lord Nugent:—

Here,
In this field of Chalgrove,
JOHN HAMPDEN,
After an able and strenuous
But unsuccessful resistance
In Parliament,
And before the Judges of the Land,
To the measures of an arbitrary Court,
First took arms,
Assembling the voices of the associated Counties
Of Buckingham and Oxford,
In 1642;
And here,
Within a few paces of this spot,
He received the wound of which he died
While fighting in defence
Of the free Monarchy
And ancient liberties of England,
June 18, 1643.
In the two hundredth year from that day
This stone was raised
In reverence to his memory.

THE HAMPDEN MEMORIAL.

On the west side are the arms of the Hampden family; and on the south the names of the principal subscribers to the memorial, among whom the following are the most conspicuous:—Bedford Breadalbane, Hampden, Sudeley, F. Burdett, J. Hampden. J. Lee, Fortescue, Brougham, Buckinghamshire, Leigh, Oxwy Cave, R. Hampden, D.D., G. Dashwood, Nugent, Lord Chief Justice Denman, Lovelace, Colborne, C. T. D'Eyncourt, T. Leader, T. Fiennes.

The eastern side has a recess in which is inserted a medallion bust of John Hampden, cut in white marble by Scoular, a pupil of Westmacott. The name of the patriot is immediately beneath the medallion, and the family motto, "Vestigia nulla retrorsum," surmounts it.

MEDALLION BUST OF JOHN HAMPDEN.

The announcement of the celebration of the completion of this memorial naturally excited considerable interest in the surrounding counties of Buckingham, Nottingham, Oxford, and Berks, for the name of Hampden has always been popular in this part of the country, while it has generally acquired a sort of titular association with patriotism. Monday last, the two hundredth anniversary of Hampden's death, was the day appointed for opening the monument, and, accordingly, at an early hour in the morning crowds of country people from the surrounding villages were seen hastening towards Chalgrove-fields; here booths were erected for the accommodation of the company, and stage-coaches and carriages, filled with visitors, continued to arrive until nearly two o'clock, at which hour the ceremony was announced to take place. Shortly after two o'clock the procession moved onwards from the neighbouring hamlet, headed by two rural bands of music, in the direction of the pillar. Among those who took part in the proceedings we observed Lord Nugent, Sir S. Hancock, Sir J. Easthope, the Rev. R. Hampden, D.D., Regius Professor at Oxford; Mr. Tancred, M.P. for Banbury; Mr. L. Stone, and several members of the University of Oxford. At this time there might have been about 800 persons present, and the procession having arrived opposite the memorial, Lord Nugent addressed the following words to the assembled crowd, a sail cloth which had previously covered the medallion being removed at the same instant:—"May this monument last to all posterity, and remain undisturbed and honoured by our children's children." This dedication was received with loud cheers, the band playing "God save the Queen;" after which, his Lordship invited all present to dine with him at dinner at three o'clock in an adjacent barn, which was really converted into a very comfortable dining-room for the occasion. The assemblage then adjourned, three cheers having been first given to the memory of Hampden.

The company at the dinner included the names above mentioned, as well as a very considerable number of the surrounding gentry, in all about 160. Lord Nugent occupied the chair, and was supported by Sir S. Hancock, Professor Hampden, Sir J. Easthope, &c. The toasts of "The Queen" and "The Constitution" having been drunk, Lord Nugent, in a speech referring to the occasion which had brought the company together, thus justified the expression on the monument—"In defence of the free monarchy"—which had been objected to by some persons:—"In the Ashmolean collection at Oxford there was a medallion preserved, shown, on very good authority, to have been worn on Hampden's breast, on which the following quaint couplet was engraven:—

Not against my King I fight;
But for my King and England's right;

for the monarchy of England was bound up with public liberty for the public safety. (Hear, hear.) That person must have read history to little purpose who saw cause to upbraid that house of Parliament who boldly opposed the corrupted judges of the seventeeth century in their attempt to trample on the liberties of the people. (Hear.) His lordship then proceeded to detail the historical circumstances connected with the period of Hampden's death, his opposition on principle to the impost called ship-money, the first assessment of which on his large property only amounted to 31s. 6d., and gave a succinct account of the events of that interesting period of English history, closing with the death of the patriot on Chalgrovefield, while engaged with a small force of 300 men in endeavouring to prevent the Royalist army, numbering 2000, under Prince Rupert, from forming a junction with the King's troops at Oxford. The noble lord concluded with an eloquent description of the death-bed of the patriot, stating that his last prayer had been fulfilled, and the blood of their civil martyrs, the seed of public liberty, had grown up into public blessings, which had secured them the privileges they now enjoyed. (Hear.) His lordship then gave "The Memory of John Hampden, and the cause in which he shed his blood."

Professor Hampden, a descendant of the patriot, in returning thanks for his health being drunk, stated that he recollected it was a traditionary counsel in his childhood, that no member of his family should ever do anything to disgrace the name of Hampden, and so great a blessing was it to succeed to the inheritance of a great man that all should feel stimulated to follow humbly the merits of those to whose names and honours they succeeded. (Hear, hear.) Hampden was not only a great man in the sense of this world, but a truly good and pious Christian. The statement of the noble chairman had shown the touching sentiments which closed his dying moments, while it was also his delight to appear in the field as one of the bravest of soldiers, like another Miltiades on the field of Marathon, though not with the same success, still with the same determined spirit and bold, open courage, in defence of the liberties of his country. (Cheers.) He was equally distinguished by his duties in social and domestic life, and lived on terms of the closest affection with his family and the tenantry by whom he was surrounded—(hear, hear)—beloved by all for the kindness of his heart, and admired for his statesmanlike ability and masculine understanding. (Hear.) Nor could he pass over his attachment to the Protestant Reformed Church of this country; and he was gratified in making this allusion as one great ground of commendation. (Hear, hear.)

Thanks were then voted to Lord Nugent; and at six o'clock the party (among whom were a number of ladies) broke up, highly gratified with the day's proceedings.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 1st.

SUNDAY, June 25.—Second Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 26.—George IV. died, 1830.
TUESDAY, 27.—Allan Cunningham died, 1840.
WEDNESDAY, 28.—Queen Victoria crowned, 1838.
THURSDAY, 29.—St. Peter and St. Paul.
FRIDAY, 30.—Greenwich Hospital founded, 1696.
SATURDAY, July 1.—Battle of the Boyne, 1690.

HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE JUNE 24.
Morning.....25 minutes after 11 | Evening.....55 minutes after 11.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. C.," Hyde-street, Bloomsbury.—We had before the receipt of J. B.'s drawing, the same subject by us.
"F.," Wexford.—By mistake, in our last No., the Ascot Cup was called the Royal Hunt Cup, and vice versâ.
"W. W." Braintree, has our best thanks. The subject shall be attended to.
"B. W."—Send us a specimen.
"A True Scotchman" should see our Journal, Nos. 17 and four following. His wishes shall not be lost sight of.
"J White"—The effect is generally known.
"R. E. H."—The correction kindly forwarded from Barbadoes has already appeared.
"J. G." Leamington, "Phiz"—Mr. Hablot Browne.
"X. Y. Z."—Mr. Brunel, son of Sir I. K. Brunel, and who is the engineer of the Great Western Railway.
"Alpha" may remove the flowers, but not the trees. He can compel the landlord.
"E A. R."—See the Stamp Returns.
"A Subscriber," Grantham.—The Chinese Exhibition is nearer Knightsbridge. There is a block of houses between Hyde Park Corner and Prince Albert's Gate.
"A Subscriber," Conduit-street.—The days are January 8, April 8, July 8, and October 8.
"An Old Subscriber."—James Montgomery, of Sheffield.
"T. W.," Wycombe—Thanks for the interest he has taken. The subject appears in our present paper.
"G. W. J.," Channel Islands.—The subjects are better suited for the "Mechanics' Magazine."
"A. R. J."—Our correspondent is mistaken; the new machines are not yet ready. The other part of his communication shall receive our attention.
"J. A.," Paris—We are happy to learn that the Duchess of Orleans has been highly pleased with our portrait of the heir to the French throne, in a recent number of our Journal.
"H. G.," Newbury—We have not space for "Pegasus in Harness." Will our correspondent favour us with a sketch of Littleton?
"C. E. J.," Tattstack—We will consider of his suggestion.
"J. S. P.," Victory.—See our Epitome of News.
"V. A. D."—The poet's home and column shall appear.
"A singular Freak" is not recent enough.
"T. R.," Port Ollerton—One of the sketches shall appear.
"Buffer," Leicester.—The occurrence is not new. The other suggestion shall not be lost sight of.
Ineligible "Lines by Robin," "Sonnet by W. H.," "Winter, &c., by Richard," all better suited for a magazine than a newspaper.
"Poetical Works of the Rev. E. Lloyd."—We have so many pressing subjects that we have not been able to review the above, but will do so anon.
"J. C.," Hyde-street. Bloomsbury.—The subject is not effective.
"A Subscriber and Native."—We shall send an artist.
"G."—"A Constant Reader," Heraldry.—No person under the rank of a Knight of the Bath has a right to supporters, unless by special grant of the Sovereign.
"Q. Major General Sir Charles James Napier, K.C.B., is cousin german of Admiral [illegible], M.P. for Marylebone.
CHESS.—"[illegible] wrong in both instances. See the solutions to the problems. You sometimes always play the best moves for the black. We shall be glad of the proposed contribution.
"[illegible] Jacket."—J. B. T."—See the solution.
"Queen's Knight."—Stalemate is universally allowed by the clubs of England and France to be a drawn game, as you will find if you read the laws of chess, as published by Walker or Lonsdale.
"A Lover of Chess" and "Edward" will find they are mistaken in referring to problem No. 27.
"[illegible] translator."—There is the St. George's Chess Club, and the London Chess Club, the rules of which can be obtained by applying to the honorary secretaries.
"A Gentleman" is desirous of playing a game at chess by correspondence.

We are again compelled, by the imperative pressure of news intelligence, once more to omit the continuation of "England and France."

On the 8th of July will be published, price 13s., the Second Volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, containing the numbers for the half year ending June 24, 1843, splendidly bound in cloth, gilt edges, uniformly with volume one. Subscribers are informed that Covers, made expressly for binding the second volume, may be had by order of all newsmen and booksellers, price 2s. 6d each. Volume one is reprinted, price one guinea.

COMPLETION OF VOLUME II.—TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS. We shall have ready a complete Index for the second Volume, containing the Numbers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for the half year, ending June 24, 1843. It will be published in the Supplement, which will be presented GRATIS with the paper for July 8th.

BOOKS RECEIVED.—"The People's Music Book," Part I.; "Analytical Catalogue of Singleton's Shakspeare Pictures;" "Orion," an epic poem, by R. H. Horne; "Letter to the Earl of Aberdeen, on the Non-Intrusion Question;" "Dr. Henderson's Treatise on Astronomy;" "Graham's Exercises on Etymology;" "Cant," a satire; "Reeds shaken with the Wind;" "Polish Aristocracy and Titles," by Count Krasinski; "Examination of the Medical Regulations of the R.I.C.;" "Parnassian Climbers."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1843.

One serious topic of the public intelligence of the week has arisen in the formidable disturbances which have broken out in Wales; and although we have elsewhere spoken of agitated Ireland as absorbing the public mind away from all other political changes and grievances, yet, since our then writing, the rebellious turbulence of another part of the empire has become so far outrageous and desperate as to demand the proper attention of the Government, and the due consideration of all men interested in the great question of public tranquillity.

Very far indeed does the nature of the Welsh agitation differ from the Irish in its causes, its objects, its organisation, and its extent. Above all, its means of repression are comparatively easy; but the evil itself is yet quite entitled to be contemplated in a proper spirit, and is not to be sneered at with a false contempt, or abandoned to a mischievous growth, simply because it is comparatively small. We cannot, indeed, help holding the Government as greatly to blame for not having suppressed it long ago, when it first made its appearance in the shape of hordes of disguised peasants and labourers ranging themselves under the frantic banner of a man in women's clothing, and committing depredations and demolishing property under the regimental sobriquet of "Rebecca and her daughters."

Rebecca has now been allowed almost time to grow into a heroine—she is the leader of hundreds of men, and, instead of confining her crusade to turnpikes, she has turned her forces to the besiegal of workhouses—defying magistrates and constables as contemptuously as she did erst the guardians of the toll—and pursuing her labour of demolition with a recklessness quite in keeping with the whole spirit and romance of the mischievous adventure in which she and her followers have been engaged.

We have ourselves no love for road-bars. Like the travelling angler, who always made it his business to "carp at a pike," we have ever acknowledged upon a journey the unpleasantness of the Don Juan association—

Onward as we roll,
Sargit amari aliquid—the toll!

And there is a disagreeableness about the jaunty highway sort of impertinence which catches your bridle, and seems to say "Your money or your life!"

We might, therefore, have felt a little disguised pleasure in Rebecca's reform upon Quixote, and her selection of turnpikes rather than windmills, as things to combat, if anything like harmlessness of purpose had been preserved, to have allowed our Christian mercy fair play. We might thus have winked—as the Government has winked—at Rebecca, and have left Wales to settle the question of the majesty of the law after its own fashion, so far as turnpikes were concerned. But, surely, the moment the affair took a new aspect—the moment that daring adventurers grew into numbers, and attacked property—the moment they threatened bloodshed, attacked the law with physical mob-opposition, and went about a discontented country, seeking whom they might convert and what they might destroy—that moment it was surely the duty of the Executive to interpose a strong arm, and to put down the incipient revolt with dignity and decision proportioned to the forbearance which had been hitherto displayed. This we hope and believe they are about to do at last; nay, in a measure the work is well commenced, for the 4th Dragoon Guards have already proved to Rebecca that she is no Maid of Orleans, and, by way of hostages for her future good behaviour, have laid their hands upon one hundred of her daughters, while they were destroying a workhouse with as little compunction as the Trojans would have destroyed the wooden horse of Ulysses if they had known who had been inside. Let us see, however, what was the first adventure which led to the arrival of the soldiers:—"Last Monday week about forty or fifty policemen and old pensioners, sent to execute a distress warrant at a place called Taliog, were surrounded by an organized body of about 400 men, headed as usual by the ever-present 'Becca,' and mustering about 100 guns among them, who overpowered, disarmed, and finally compelled these agents of the law, with their own hands, and for fear of their lives, to break down a wall surrounding the house of the magistrate who endorsed the distress warrant. Even so they thought themselves lucky to get off with whole skins. This final and complete victory over the majesty of Welsh law naturally alarmed the magistrates, and might have been expected to infuse some life into the Government. 'This was represented,' says our correspondent, 'to the Home Secretary, and a military force solicited by the borough and county magistrates, as it was impossible for the civil power to execute any legal process.'"

The military force was no sooner sent than it found a genuine good riot all ready bashed and bubbling over. A force of Rebeccaites—to the number now of thousands—had threatened to parade Carmarthen, and make a demonstration, which the Times thus describes:—

"The mob entered the town, and proclaimed their grievances—comprising, inter alia, turnpike gates, tithes—commuted or uncommuted, the Poor-laws, church-rates, and high rents. They then set to work to fulfil their promise of the 27th ult., by pulling down the workhouse. Happily the magistrates had sent off an express to hurry the soldiers; luckily the express met them on their march about thirty miles from Carmarthen; very luckily indeed—much more luckily than any one had a right to expect—these soldiers arrived in Carmarthen, after their thirty miles gallop (which killed two of their horses), precisely while the mob was engaged in its work of destruction, dispersed with little difficulty those who were outside, and captured with as little about 100 of those who were inside the workhouse enclosure. Nothing could have been more complete. Fortune has played our cards for us better than Sir James Graham. And we hope that this discomfiture, and the presence of the 4th Dragoons, will effectually stop Miss 'Becca's gambols for some time."

With regard to the result we echo the hope of our contemporary, with a similar conviction that these nonsensical and peace-scaring disturbances ought long before to have been put down. The tolerance of the Home-office had clearly gone too far.

But there is still another aspect in which we would have these disturbances, now that they have once grown formidable, viewed; we mean, as strong evidences of popular disaffection, on account of certain oppressions which the people in the South Wales district of country unquestionable feel, and, we fear, feel only in common with the great bulk of our pauper community. Of these oppressions the "Poor-law" is the head and front of the offending. These Rebeccaites, when their numbers formed in groups, began with turnpikes as playthings, but when their numbers gathered in hundreds, and included the destitute and unemployed mob, they flew to demolish the workhouses, the prisons of the pauper, the eye and heart sores of the poorer population, not of Wales only, but of England and of Ireland too. Hundreds of Welsh labourers are thrown out of work by the dreadful failures in the iron trade, and starvation stares them in the face—starvation, or the alternative of that, the workhouse, which they regard with loathing and abhorrence, and for the destruction of which they have desperately defied the civil power, and set at nought the strength and terrors of the law. This sort of excitement upon the subject of the new laws for pauperism carries a forcible moral with it, particularly in districts likely, from sudden and wide-spread cessation from labour, to be afflicted with deep and dire distress. We may justly deprecate open violence, and crush with scorn the doctrine of any efficacy of physical force against the English law and constitution; but neither in England nor Ireland nor Wales can we refuse sympathy to suffering, or uphold the existence of a wrong. It is, therefore, that we so strongly advocate a general conciliation of the people throughout all the empire, by an abandonment of the present poor-law system, which stays no affliction, administers no comfort, raises no hope, but wherever it journeys leaves misery behind it as the hard legacy of the poor. Again and again will we strive to force this great justice upon the Government.

With regard to Ireland, we are glad to find that a most valuable, conciliatory, and wise overture has been made to the loyalty and good temper of the Irish people, by the proposed remission of the Irish Spirits Duties Bill. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced his intention to move the repeal of the act of last year. This is a much greater boon to Ireland than the people of this country can at a glance conceive. May that country know how to appreciate it in the spirit in which it is bestowed!

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Queen, Prince Albert, and the Duchess of Kent, attended Divine service on Sunday morning in the Chapel Royal, Buckingham Palace. The Bishop of Chester preached the sermon, taking his text from Romans, chap. 15, verse 13. The prayers were read by the Hon. and Rev. Charles Leslie Courtenay.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert left Buckingham Palace at ten o'clock on Saturday morning, for Somerset House, and thence proceeded to the East India Docks, to inspect the Victoria and Albert yacht. His Royal Highness afterwards returned on horseback to Buckingham Palace, at two o'clock.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert honoured the Italian Opera with their presence on Saturday evening.

Her Majesty the Queen Dowager visited the Surrey Zoological Gardens on Saturday, attended by her suite.

The King of Hanover went on Saturday afternoon to Kew, and on Sunday morn. g his Majesty, accompanied by their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, Prince George, and the Princesses Augusta and Mary, and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, attended Divine service in Kew Church. After the service, the whole of the illustrious visitors proceeded to his Majesty's residence at Kew. The Royal visitors left Kew in the afternoon, for town.

On Monday the Queen, attended by Lady Portman, and in Mourning, took an airing in an open carouche and four. Prince Albert rode out on horseback at the same time, attended by the Equerries in Waiting.

On Tuesday the Queen held a court at Buckingham Palace. Their Serene Highnesses Prince Peter and the Princess of Oldenburg were presented to her Majesty at an audience in the royal closet. Baron de Brunow, the Russian Minister, attended Divine service in Kew Church. After the service, the whole of the illustrious visitors proceeded to his Majesty's residence at Kew. The Royal visitors left Kew in the afternoon, for town.

The Earl of Jersey, attended by Lady Portman, and in Mourning, took an airing in an open carouche and four. Prince Albert rode out on horseback at the same time, attended by the Equerries in Waiting.

On Tuesday the Queen held a court at Buckingham Palace. Their Serene Highnesses Prince Peter and the Princess of Oldenburg were presented to her Majesty at an audience in the royal closet. Baron de Brunow, the Russian Minister, attended Divine service in Kew Church. After the service, the whole of the illustrious visitors proceeded to his Majesty's residence at Kew. The Royal visitors left Kew in the afternoon, for town.

On Monday the Queen

PORTRAIT OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

Major-General Sewell, Major-General D. Mercier, C.B., Major-General Sir R. Gardner, Major General Reeve, Major-General Sir E. Bowater, Colonel Clive, Colonel Brunton, Major-General H. D'Oyly, Major-General Sir J. May, Major-General Sir H. D. Ross, Colonel Money, Colonel Browne, Colonel Sir C. W. Dance, Hon. Colonel D. Dansé, Hon. Colonel G. Anson, Colonel E. Buckley, Colonel Bentinck, Colonel Kilkson, Colonel Ellis, Col. Gurwood, Colonel Allix, Colonel Egerton, Colonel Rowan, Colonel Drummond, Colonel Smith, Colonel Miller, Colonel H. Blair, Colonel Willman, Colonel H. Webster, Colonel Lord Sandys, Lieutenant-General Lord Harris, &c. &c.

The Duke of Wellington wore his uniform as Colonel of the Grenadier Guards; and his Royal Highness, although a field-marshal in the army, appeared as Colonel of the Scots Fusilier Guards.

Prince Albert, attended by the Marquis of Exeter and Colonel E. Buckley, retired at a quarter past ten o'clock, and the party immediately broke up.

HER MAJESTY'S STATE BARGE.

This superb barge has just been refitted and regilt at the royal dockyard at Woolwich: her length is 64 feet, and her extreme breadth 6 feet 8 inches; the head and stern are elaborately carved and gilt, and with her highly-varnished timbers, have a right royal splendour. The first occasion of this magnificent barge being used since her refitment was on Saturday morning last, on the occasion of his Royal Highness Prince Albert visiting the East India Docks at Blackwall, to inspect the progress made on board the Victoria and Albert steam-vessel, constructing for the use of her Majesty and his Royal Highness. (See engravings of this steamer in No. 53 of our journal.) The Prince embarked at Whitehall-stairs; the barge was rowed by twenty-two watermen in scarlet liveries, and the Admiralty barge, which accompanied it, by ten men in scarlet coats. The only boats accompanying the royal party were two under the control of the Harbour Master, to clear the river, should their services in that way be rendered necessary by any unforeseen obstruction. Such, however, was not the case; and at precisely thirty-five minutes past eleven o'clock the royal barge, containing Prince Albert, attended by Major-General Sir Edward Bowater, and accompanied by the Right Hon. the Earl of Haddington, First Lord of the Admiralty; Vice-Admiral Sir W. H. Gage, G.C.H.; Rear-Admiral Sir G. F. Seymour, G.C.H. and C.B., came alongside the landing-place, disembarked, and immediately proceeded to the south-east entrance to the docks to the Victoria and Albert steam-vessel, where Captain Lord A. Fitzclarence, G.C.B., and Captain Sir W. Symonds, Knt., F.R.S., Surveyor of the Navy, were in waiting to receive his Royal Highness and the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty. Prince Albert remained an hour and ten minutes on board the steam-vessel, examining the whole of her fittings and accommodation, and expressed himself greatly pleased with the arrangements, and the progress which had been made towards her completion. On leaving the docks, Prince Albert, with the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, embarked in the Queen's barge at the Brunswick-pier, and returned to Whitehall-stairs.

Our artist has represented the royal barge reaching Blackwall: the day was unusually bright and sunny, and, although the notice of the royal visit had been very brief, a great number of the respectable inhabitants of Backwall assembled on the pier, and each railway train brought down a number of Londoners. The pier was, accordingly, crowded with spectators, and the reception given to the Prince must have been gratifying to his Royal Highness. The state barge, in its progress to and from Blackwall, attracted many spectators on the river and its banks, and, with the attendant Admiralty barge, formed a splendid piece of water pageantry, such as is but rarely witnessed on London's majestic river.

NEWCASTLE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The example of the parent Horticultural Society of London has done wonders in improving public taste, and exciting the emulation of nurserymen in the country; and, accordingly, our provincial horticultural societies and their exhibitions are entitled to special notice. The society at Newcastle-upon-Tyne appears, from its great summer show, held on Tuesday se'nnight, to be a fair specimen of the above success. The fête was held in the Music Hall, in Nelson-street; and the exhibition, notwithstanding the late unfavourable weather, was much superior to what we have observed on some previous occasions. The visitors were very numerous; and a band of music was stationed in the gallery, which added considerably to the animation of the scene.

The show of pines was very good, and the prize ones, especially, were rich in flavour and of excellent quality. The grapes were large in size, and splendid for the season. The potatoes, grown in the open air, were also good, and, although the prize ones were not the largest, yet they were in a more advanced and perfect state than the others that were shown. The exhibition of Pansies was rather larger than usual, and, generally, they were finely formed, and of good size and colour. Some very excellent Fuchsias were exhibited, and a very rare specimen from the garden of R. J. Lambton, Esq., was much admired, and for which Mr. Laing obtained a prize. The collection of Tulips was decidedly better than could have been expected from the state of the weather; and the majority of them were clean, well-formed, and neatly marked. The Geraniums were extra good; and the Calceolarias, exhibited by Mr. Deans, were in fine bloom, and of good size and form. The prize Alstroemeria, exhibited by Mr. Hedley, was well-grown. There were two large bouquets of flowers, both of which exhibited great taste; and the fine contrast of the numerous flowers used in the formation gave to each a splendid appearance. A fine and rare exotic plant—the Calanthe Veratrifolia—from the collection of Mr. Wailes, was greatly admired. There were in the room a great variety of beautiful plants from the collection of Messrs. Samson and Finney. We have not space for the list of prizes awarded: they are some six-and-thirty in number, and are highly creditable to the skill of the Newcastle horticulturists.

GREAT SUMMER SHOW OF THE NEWCASTLE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

THE MACREADY TESTIMONIAL.

MACREADY AS "MACBETH."

The occasion of the presentation of a testimonial to Mr. Macready, for his services to the national drama, is tl is week a topic of news, and illustrated in our columns. In presenting the following details of the occurrence to our readers we do not find it necessary to add any fresh observations to those which we made last week upon the retirement of Mr. Macready from the management of Drury-lane; but we may, while the subject is fresh with our readers, indicate our perfect concurrence with the spirit of a leading article in the Morning Chronicle, which has the following remarks:—

There has been much conflicting criticism on the merits of Mr. Macready's management; but we do not think it has been denied in any quarter that the regular drama, and especially the drama of Shakspere, has been revived by him with brilliant success. Individual critics, here and there, may complain that their peculiar ideas of perfection have not been realised; but they must acknowledge that a vast improvement has been effected, that large audiences have been drawn to witness the performances of the grandest productions of human genius, freed from the barbarous mutilations and additions of a former age, and that the theatre has been made a place of pure and refined enjoyment, which virtuous women might frequent without being pained or offended by the proximity of the most degraded of their own sex. We say nothing here of Mr. Macready's merits as an actor, and it is not necessary to dwell on the scholar-like acquaintance with the past, the exquisite taste, and the minute, yet judicious, attention to details, as parts of a whole, which were evinced in the representations got up under his direction; because, if his personal claims were far less than they are, the work which he has done, and to which we have referred, would entitle him to public gratitude, and would well deserve the honourable testimonial presented to him on Monday, at the public meeting over which the Duke of Cambridge presided.

THE MACREADY TESTIMONIAL.

To this we add the details of the event:—

On Monday the splendid piece of plate subscribed for by the lovers of the national drama, and manufactured under the direction of the committee, for testifying their high opinion of the merits of Mr. Macready, was presented to that gentleman, in the great room at Willis's, by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. All the seats were occupied and the platform thronged with the patrons of the drama and of literature, the members of the committee, and the members of the theatrical profession. His Royal Highness, accompanied by several gentlemen of the committee, and Mr. Macready, ascended the platform exactly as the clock struck 1, and were received with the most hearty demonstrations of applause and good feeling by the company. The piece of plate, of which a description is subjoined, being placed on the left hand of his Royal Highness, and Mr. Macready having taken his place on the right of the Royal Duke, the latter addressed him and presented the testimonial as a token of the appreciation of his services by the friends and supporters of the national drama, and by the public in general. His Royal Highness having concluded amidst great cheering, bowed to Mr. Macready, who returned the honour done him, and, after a short hesitation, during which he appeared much overcome by his feelings, replied in a speech recapitulating earnestly but modestly his exertions for the restoration of the legitimate drama, and concluding as follows:—"I have only now to return to your Royal Highness my most grateful thanks for this proof of public confidence in my motives. This beautiful memorial of public approbation of my humble efforts in the cause of the drama I must regard as the augury of a brighter era. It encourages me to hope that that cause will yet be efficiently supported in a well regulated theatre. Once more, accept my best thanks—I might vary my phrase, but I will only reiterate the expression of that gratitude which your kindness has inspired, and which will be ever engraven on my heart." Mr. Macready concluded amidst long and vehement applause.

Mr. T. D'Eyncourt, M.P., then came forward, and, after expressing his own acknowledgments and those of the meeting to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge for the part he had taken in the proceedings of that day, called upon the company to testify their gratification at the honour conferred. The company expressed themselves in the most loyal manner by continued cheers. His Royal Highness immediately returned his acknowledgments in a few appropriate words, after which he retired, followed by Mr. Macready and the gentlemen on the platform. The great body of persons in the room then pressed forward to get a view of the "testimonial," so that it was some time before the whole took their departure.

The group, which has been manufactured at the establishment of Mr. Smith, of Duke-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, represents Shakspere standing on a pedestal, at the base of which Mr. Macready, habited in the costume of the early stage, is seated, having in his hands a volume. He is attended by the muse of comedy, Thalia, and the muse of tragedy, Melpomene, and, as connected with the subject on which the actor is supposed to be employed, the restoration of the original text of the plays of Shakspere, the muse Clio is also introduced. On the other side of the pedestal is Apollo, with an attendant group of subordinate figures. Masks, &c., are seen on the ground on which the figures are placed. The whole of this portion of the testimonial stands on a base of triangular form, on one side of which, within a metope, is represented the senate scene in "Othello;" in a metope on another side of the base is a representation of the prologue scene in "Henry V.;" and in the third metope on the remaining side of the base the senate scene in "Coriolanus." At the angles of the base three boys hold tablets, on which are represented the storm scene in "Lear," the meeting of the witches in "Macbeth," and a scene from the "Tempest." The scenes are all in relief in frosted or dull silver, of very delicate and exquisite workmanship. The base itself is highly polished, and forms an admirable contrast and back-ground to the figures and auxiliaries. The whole rests upon a plinth of good form, supported by feet. The composition is remarkably fine and the combination perfect. All the figures accord, harmonize, and concur to carry out the design and sentiment. The execution is equally good, and the likeness of Mr. Macready correct and full of spirit.

The legend affixed is very bold. On one side of the base it is thus:—

"To William Charles Macready,
In commemoration of his Management of the Theatre Royal,
Covent-garden,
In the seasons of 1837-8 and 1838-9,
When his Personal Care of the Decorations, his Restorations of the Text, and his Illustration of the Poet Intellectual Aids of the Historical Painter and Portrait Creations of the Pencil of Shakspere,
Formed an Epoch in Theatrical Annals
Alike honourable to his own Genius, and likely, in its Influence upon Public Taste,
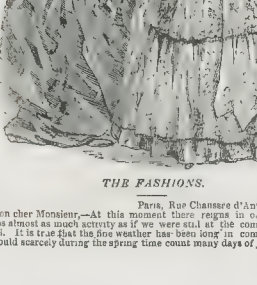
Thus Testimonial is presented by
The Lovers of the National Drama."

On the other side is the following quotation:—

"No man is the lord of anything,
Though in and of him there be much consisting
Till he communicate his parts to others;
Nor doth he of himself know them for aught
Till he behold them form'd in the applause
Where they are extended, which, like an arch, reverberates
The voice again, or, like a gate of steel
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His figure and his heat."—Shakspere.

The arms of Mr. Macready are engraved on one part of the lower base. The height of the group is 31½ inches; dimensions of the base 21 inches; weight about 260 ounces; cost about 500 guineas.



THE FASHIONS.

Paris, Rue Chaussee d'Antin, June 21

Mon cher Monsieur,—At this moment there reigns in our fashionable shops almost as much activity as if we were still at the commencement of April. It is true that the fine weather has been long in coming, and that we could scarcely during the spring time count many days of sunshine, and those only at rare intervals. We have now, however, a brilliant sky, and our mush folks have just thrown away their cloaks, resigning to the improvement of the weather. Thus we see every day no nothing new, either in our town or country costumes; and were I required to name the matter als most frequently employed, I should say they were white batistes, summer barèges, and tartans. Of these robes, some have a very gracefully shaped pe grion opened at the neck, the corsage gathered from the top to the waist; sleeves puffed, and the skirt trimmed with three bands of moderate depth, or with two large undulating bands; others have the corsage plain, the back gathered in piping, or arranged in the form of a fan; the waist has a sash of ribbon with one or two ends; skirt trimmed with bands or with ribbons, surrounded with a ruche of puffed ribbon. For town dresses many are now as redingotes in gros de Tours and Berge taffety, or in ecossaise taffety, shaded or glacé, and also in Grenadia Pekin. The corsages are pointed and with a basq, trimmed with two rows of buttons; the skirt open, trimmed on both sides by a columnade of puffed ribbon. As a general observation, I must re mark that when either draperies or robbans are used, passementerie or needlework is required. Perhaps, however, the most beautiful things seen this season were two dresses which attracted all eyes on Sunday last in the great avenue of the Champs Elysees. There was in the first place a robe of muslin, the skirt trimmed with two broad flounces of silver lace, the corsage plain, open at the neck, with a small pe erine forming a kertle, surrounded with a garniture festooned to a point in the front, and descending bottom the pockey; and in the last place there was a robe in plain taffety, the sash trimmed with two flounces at a distance from each other of half their depth, and crossed with a similar ornament in passementerie: the corsage was en cœur, brought to a rounded point, and with plain sleeves. The taste for low trimmings and ornaments increases every day, which fact we say as a strong proof in favour of the fashionable intellect of our epoch; and certainly the perfection to which some of our houses have brought this particular article, and the moderation at which they afford to sell it, is something marvellous; more especially when it is recollected that these were a long time the exclusive appanage of our aristocracy, or of large fortunes. Be this as it may, there can be no question that lace of a better understood every day, and that good taste can hardly fail to pl de that knowledge. Lace is now to the robe what lace is now employed with great effect than in giving importa ce to those delicious caprices and those right and tasty aids of which our fashionable shops contain so rich a variety. Another fact equally simple, and yet more elegant, than the two or three bands of lace so coquettishly p aced upon the pause of a hat of moderate size, slightly thrown back and a little raised behind. We must also notice the caprices in which we have noticed with a taste beyond all three bands of marabout gauze, and those in crêpe, gathered so elegantly and finished with a sort of panne of sprigs of rice intermix d with flowers of a lively shade, to agree with the colour of the crêpe. I need only say that fals a d veils of lace are still per ect y fashionable, indeed, as may be supposed from what we have before said, they are more worn than ever. I do not know at the present moment of any other fact or circumstance worthy to deserve very part cular attention; I shall therefore reserve my remarks until my next. Adieu! mon ami!

Henriette de B.

Her Majesty's Theatre.—The new ballet of "Oodine" was produced for the benefit of Sig. Fornasari, on Thursday night, with great success. It is most superbly mounted, and is divided into six scenes or tableaux, which run on continuously without an entr'acte.

French Plays, St. James's.—Internationalism is another word for civilisation, and in no way can this desideratum be so effectually produced as by ren dering the drama, or picture of life, of each country familiar to the inhabitants of another, by the works of the portrait-painters of the manners of the times respectively in separated localities. Thanks to the good taste and enterprising industry of Mr. Mitchell, we have been afforded an opportunity of looking into "the mirror that our continental neighbours hold themselves in, and, without any reflection upon them, we are inclined to say that it "holds up to Nature" in as true a manner as anything else philosophic or otherwise in which we have been in the habit of the ing or thinking in our own peculiar sphere. We are indebted to Mr. Mitchell for our further acquaintance with the French drama, and trust that the truth of an old saying, "the accumulation of knowledge is the accumulation of wealth," will be verified on the occasion of his "most worthy" benefit on Wednesday Evening, June 28th.

Queen's Theatre.—This house is going on favourably. We perceive by the bills, that Mr. Wallis takes his annual benefit on Thursday, when an attempte, for the first time, Sir Giles Overreach: we trust he will be successful both ways.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Royal Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce.—On Monday there was a numerous and splendid assemblage of the élite at the chambers of the above society, in Johnstreet, Adelphi, to witness the distribution of prizes by his Royal Highness Prince Albert. At a quarter past two his Royal Highness the president of the society arrived, accompanied by the Duke of the Lords Cabinet and the Marquis of Northampton, and immediately took the chair. The chief object of the society is to promote the manufactures, arts, and commerce of this kingdom, by giving honorary or pecuniary rewards, as may be best adapted to the case, for the communication to the society, and, through the society, to the public, of such discoveries, useful inventions, and improvements as tend to that purpose; and, in pursuance of this plan, it was stated that the society had already expended upwards of £100,000, derived from voluntary subscriptions and donations. At the conclusion of the distribution of the prizes the Duke of Sutherland rose and, in a few sentences, said he only could say what was acceptable to every individual present and every member of this society, by expressing on their behalf their warm acknowledgments for the very kind manner in which his Royal Highness Prince Albert, so soon after becoming president of the society, had come forward to promote and personally distribute the prizes. (Cheers.) The Marquis of Northampton seconded the motion. His Royal Highness bowed, and left the society's house, after passing a warm eulogium upon the proceedings.

Royal Commission of Fine Arts.—Whitehall, 16th June, 1843.—Her Majesty's Commissioners hereby give notice:—1. That whereas carve-work in wood will be required for various parts of the New Palace at Westminster, and in the first instance for the doors of the House of Lords, artists are invited to send specimens in this department of art, to be exhibited for the purpose of assisting the Commissioners in the selection of persons to be employed. 2. The specimens are to be sent in the course of the first week in March, 1844, to a place of exhibition hereafter to be appointed. 3. The specimens are required to be designed in general accordance with the style of decoration adopted in the New Palace. Outlines in lithography, showing the dimensions of the principal door of the house of Lords, may be obtained at the architect's offices in New Palace-yard. 4. Each exhibitor is required to send one and not more than one specimen, of the same colour, drawn to the scale accepted in the outline—viz., two inches to a foot; and one carved panel, or part of a panel and frame-work, not exceeding four feet in the longest dimension, representing a part of such design in the full proportion. The objects forming the details of decoration, in conformity with the conditions above expressed, are left to the choice of each artist. The material of the carved specimen is to be oak. The invitation to send works for the proposed exhibition is confined to British artists, including foreigners who may have resided ten years or upwards in the United King dom. 6. Artists who propose to exhibit are required to signify their intention to the secretary on or be ore the 1st of Jan y, 1844.—By Command of the Commissioners, C. L. Eastlake, Secretary.

Whitehall, 16th June, 1843.—Her Majesty's Commissioners hereby give notice:—1. That whereas various windows in the New Palace at Westminster will be decorated with stained glass, artists are invited to send specimens in this department of art, to be exhibited for the purpose of assisting the Commissioners in the selection of persons to be employed. 2. The specimens are to be sent in the course of the first week in March 1844, to a place of exhibition hereafter to be appointed. 3. The specimens are required to be designed in general accordance with the style of decoration adopted in the New Palace. Outlines in lithography, showing the dimensions of the windows, may be obtained at the architect's offices in New Palace-yard. 4. Each exhibitor is required to send one and not more than one coloured design for an entire window, drawn to the scale accepted in the outline—viz., two inches to a foot; and one specimen of stained glass, to exhibit as part in the largest dimension, representing a part of such design in the full proportion. The objects forming the details of decoration, in conformity with the conditions above expressed, are left to the choice of each artist. The material of the carved specimen is to be oak. The invitation to send works for the proposed exhibition is confined to British artists, including foreigners who may have resided ten years or upwards in the United King dom. 6. Artists who propose to exhibit are required to signify their intention to the secretary on or be ore the 1st of Jan y, 1844.—By Command of the Commissioners, C. L. Eastlake, Secretary.

Court of Common Council.—On Tuesday a court was held for the despatch of public business. Mr. R. L. Jones rose to call the attention of the court to the report which he had printed and laid before them relative to certain improvements it was expedient to make in the public streets and avenues within the City. The report we have already published, together with a map exhibiting the contemplated improvements at one view, in the last number of the Illustrated London News. Mr. Jones then submitted a motion to the effect that the court agree with the report, which stated that a favourable opportunity existed for drawing the attention of the Government and the improvement Commission, as to the best means to be adopted for raising the requisite funds for t ese pur oses, and recommended that the committee should be empowered to confer with them.—Mr. Lawrence seconded the motion, and stated that the sole object of the report was to put the committee in a state of co-operation with the Metropolitan Improvement Commission.—After considerable discussion, Mr. Wilkinson moved, as an amendment to Mr. Jones's motion, that Watling-street and Newgate-street, which were excluded from the plan of suggested improvements, should be marked in.—Mr. Lott seconded the amendment.—After some observations from Mr. Wood it, who expressed his dissatisfaction at the plan, and Mr. Eagleton, who also condemned it as a partial operation, the amendment for the inclusion of Watling-street and Newgate-street in the plan was agreed to, and Mr. Jones's motion, with that addition, was agreed to.—Mr. Anderton moved a resolution of thanks to Sir James Shaw (late City Chamberlain), on his retirement from public life. The resolution was ordered to be written on vellum and emblazoned, and presented to Sir James Shaw.—Mr. Powell (the chairman of the Library Committee), brought up the report on the subject of the recent purchase of Shaxspere's autograph.—[Our readers will remember that we gave a history and fac-simile of this interesting document in our pa er a number a few weeks back].—He moved that the court agree in the report, and that the Chamberlain be instructed to pay the sum.—Mr. Stacy seconded the motion.—Mr. Warton rose to move, as an amendment, that the report should lie on the table. (A laugh, and loud cries of "Hear, hear.") He had, he said, done all he could in the committee to prevent upon its members that the purchase of the autograph was a most wasteful and prodigal expenditure. ("Hear, hear," and "No, no.") The present was a most mischievous one.—A debate ensued, and the court then divided, when there appeared—for the original motion, 41; for the amendment, 31; majority in favour of the report, 10.—The court then adjourned.

EPITOME OF NEWS.

Mr. Cobden has accepted the invitation of the Kentish people, and will address them on Thursday next, on Penenden-heath.—The Standish and Marine Museums at the Louvre are completely arranged. They are to be speedily re-opened.—The art of working in bronze has been brought to such perfection and extent in France, that in 1842 Paris alone produced articles amounting in value to 30,000,000 francs. This art was introduced into the kingdom in 1624.—The electric fluid fell on the 13th inst. at La Ferté, and entered the house of a man named Mestres, through the chimney, which it split down in all its length. It shattered one of the barrels of a double-barrelled gun to go off, whilst the other remained in statu quo. It afterwards carried under the bed the stopper of the oven, and at last got out through the door, which it splintered. Mestres and his wife, who were in bed, received no injury.—E. D. Davenport, Esq., of Capesthorne, has generously returned to his tenants ten per cent. of their rents, adding a promise that, if the continued depression in the prices of agricultural produce should render it necessary, he will make a still greater reduction next audit day.—A small steam-boat has been appointed to ply on Loch Katrine during the summer months. It is only about six tons in weight, engines and all, has no deck, nor any part of it covered in except the engine, which is of six horse power.—On Monday last a meeting of noblemen and gentlemen connected with Ireland, was held at the residence of the Marquis of Downshire for the purpose of inducing the Government to resume the publication of the Ordnance Survey Memoir.—It gratifies us to state that Dr. D. M. Moir, of Musselburgh (the well known poet, Delta), is greatly recovered from a severe illness, and has been able to take a drive.—A crew of the Burnbank fishermen hauled a shark to shore last week, in their great lines, by which it got entangled. It was found to measure the enormous size of fifteen feet and a half long, nine feet round the body, the tail six being three feet across. In its stomach were found two large turbots, also two salmon, one of which was very large—all of which were whole. The liver alone filled a herring barrel, and will produce from thirty to forty pints of oil.—The Queen has just appointed Augustus Murray, brother of the piper of the late Duke of Sussex, to be her Majesty's piper at Buckingham Palace. Highland dresses and ornaments are to be provided for the new functionary.—By the death of the Earl of Cathcart, and of Sir Charles Bagot, two diplomatic pensions have fallen into the Government, amounting together to the sum of £3486; but, by the accession of Lords Beauvale and Ponsonby, pensions of a similar nature, amounting together to £2368 have accrued, so that a saving of £918 only will take place in the diplomatic pension list, which contains 43 members.—The commissioners of the metropolis have issued the usual notice, declaring Fairlop fair to be unlawful beyond the first Friday in July, and that any attempt to hold such fair beyond that day will subject offenders to a penalty not exceeding £10.—His Grace the Duke of Buckingham, while Capt. Boldero, M.P., visited Woolwich on Wednesday, and went over the several departments of the Royal Arsenal.—On Tuesday last, agreeably to annual custom, the whole of that ancient and honourable corps, her Majesty's Yeomen of the Guard, were inspected by their noble Captain the Right Hon. the Earl of Beverley, who was pleased to express himself highly gratified with their excellent appearance.—The second choral meeting was held on Wednesday evening of the upper singing schools assembling at Exeter-hall, under the sanction and approval of the Committee of Council on Education, and instructed by Mr. John Hullah and his assistants, on the method of Wilhem. The chorus consisted of upwards of 1500 members of the upper schools.—A meeting was held in the Queen's Prison on Wednesday, Mr. Oastler in the chair, when it was resolved that a subscription be raised to aid the defence of Mr. Linford, who had escaped from the prison, in order to moot the question of the illegality of imprisonment for debt.—From discoveries made at Liverpool there is now no doubt that the recent conflagrations in that town have been the work of a band of diabolical incendiaries.—A Cornish man, who was called as a witness on a trial which took place in the Court of Queen's Bench on Tuesday last, appeared in the same coat in which he was married 53 years ago. He is said to involve in his description the curious contradiction of being one of the oldest minors alive.—The anniversary dinner of the patrons and supporters of the London Hospital took place at the London Tavern on Wednesday last, when Mr. Cotton, Governor of the Bank of England, presided. The subscriptions amounted to the large sum of £1276.—The improvements and embellishments at Walmer Castle are still being proceeded with notwithstanding the contradictory rumours given to the rumour that it is her Majesty's intention to visit that abode of loyalty and hospitality during the present season.—A grand temperance conference was held on Wednesday evening at the Crown and Anchor Tavern in the Strand, when the delegates now in London from all parts of the world attending the Anti-Slavery and Peace Conventions were present.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE MONOMANIA QUESTION.

The House of Lords met on Monday at eleven o'clock, for the purpose of hearing the answers of the judges to the questions put to them by their lordships, with respect to certain committed by persons supposed to be of unsound mind. At the hour appointed for meeting there was a full attendance both of peers and judges. The King of Hanover and the Duke of Cambridge were present; and among the peers we noticed Lord Brougham, Lord Cottenham, Lord Campbell, Lord Wynford, Lord Melbourne, Lord Kenyon, Lord Redesdale, and many others. Prayers having been read, Mr. Justice Maule, at some length, but in so very low a tone as to be almost inaudible in the gallery, stated that his reasons for differing with his learned brothers on the bench, with respect to the quest ons which had been submitted to their consideration. His lordship was most clearly of opinion that they were questions which the judges of the land ought not to be called upon to answer.—The Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas then proceeded to read the opinion of the judges on the queri es so submitted to them. Those questions the judges had most attentively considered; and with the exception of his learned brother, Mr. Justice Maule, they were unanimous in their opinions. The first question proposed for their consideration was—"What is the law respecting alleged crimes committed by persons afflicted with insane delusion, in respect of one or more particular objects or persons; as, for instance, where at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, the accused knew he was acting contrary to law, but did the act complained of with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some supposed public benefit?" With respect to this question, the opinion of the majority was, that now (standing the party committed a wrong act, when labouring under the idea of redressing a supposed grievance or injury, or under the impression of obtaining some public or private benefit, that he was liable to punishment. With respect to the second question, "What are the proper questions to be submitted to the jury when a person alleged to be afflicted with insane delusion respecting one or more particular subjects, or persons, is charged with the commission of a crime, murder for example, and the insanity is set up for a defence?" the judges wished to state that it was their opinion that the jury ought, in all cases, to presume that every man is sane until he be considered of sane mind unless it was clearly proved to the contrary. That before a plea of insanity was allowed undoubted evidence ought to be adduced, that the party was under the influence of mental delusion at the time he committed the act he was not conscious of right or wrong. Nothing could justify a wrong act but such proof, and it was the duty of the judge to tell the jury so in summing up the evidence. With regard to the third question, "In what terms ought the question to be left to the jury as to the prisoner's state of mind at the time when the act was committed?" the judges did not all agree in opinion. The fourth question was, "If a person under an insane delusion, as to existing facts, commits an offence in consequence thereof, is he thereby excused?" The answer of the judges was, that it was their unanimous opinion that if the delusion was only partial, the party accused was equally liable with a person of sane mind. If the accused killed another in self-defence, he would be entitled to an acquittal, but if committed for an imagined injury, he would then be liable to the punishment awarded by the law to his crime. As to the last question—"Can a medical man, conversant with the disease of insanity, who never saw the prisoner previously to the trial, but who was present during the whole trial, and the examination of all the witnesses, be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, or whether the prisoner was conscious at the time of doing the act, that he was acting contrary to the law? or whether he was labouring under any, and what delusion at the time?" the opinions of the judges was that a medical man who had not seen the prisoner previous to the act charged against him, was not strictly bound to give his opinion on the question of sanity; but it was convenient to put those questions in a general form.—Lord Brougham considered that the house and the country were under great obligation to the learned judges, and he should, therefore, move that those opinions should be entered on the journals. Lord Cottenham thought that the opinions had been submitted to the judges. After a few observations from the Lord Chancellor, Lord Wynford, and Lord Cottenham, the opinion of the judges was ordered to be printed and entered in the journals of the house.

MIXED MARRIAGES (IRELAND)

Lord Brougham wished to take that opportunity of asking the learned judges (if they could) how far it would be competent for them to give an opinion on the law relating to mixed marriages in the north of Ireland, as individuals there did not at the present moment know whether they were married or not. (Hear.) They did not ask for an opinion on the point, but Lord Campbell trusted the judges would be able to pronounce their opinions before going the circuit, as the question was one of momentous importance to Ireland. The Lord Chancellor said he had received a letter from the Chief Justice, stating that the labours of the judges on circuit, and their other avocations in their own courts, were such that they would not be able, with any satisfaction to themselves, to give their opinions upon the important answers to the question submitted to them before the long vacation.—Lord Brougham thought that if the opinion of the judges could not be given in a week it could not be given in a year.—Lord Cottenham thought it was to be amended that another summer was to pass away without the question being decided. The question now was, whether the judges were to be compelled to give their opinion on a number of cases.—The Lord Chancellor said, after what had taken place he hoped the judges would consider whether it was not possible to give their opinion before the circuit, although at some sacrifice to themselves. He had reason to hope, from the conversations he had had with the judges, that that object would be accomplished.—The subject then dropped, and the judges proceeded to answer the questions put to them on certain writs of error, none of which possessed any feature of interest.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

(Middlesex Sittings at Nisi Prius, before the Lord Chief Justice and a Common Jury.)

GREGORY v. THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK AND ANOTHER.

This action was brought by the plaintiff, Mr. Barnard Gregory, the proprietor and editor of the Satirist, to recover damages from the defendants, the Duke of Brunswick and Lieutenant-Colonel Gronow, formerly of the 3rd regiment of foot guards, for the plaintiff off the stage, and prevent him deriving the advantages of following the calling of an actor.—Mr Sergeant Shee (with whom were Mr. Sergeant Wilkins and Mr. M. Chambers) stated the case on the part of the plaintiff, and called a number of witnesses for the purpose of proving that the defendants had hired a multitude of rose characters in the parlieus of the Opera House, and by gaining the affections of the manager of Covent Garden Theatre, for the purpose of causing the plaintiff on the occasion of his appearance in the character of Hamlet some time since, and which must be known to the jury, to be hooted and hissed. Subsequently he was compelled to leave the stage. Lord Gardiner, Lord Belfast, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Lord Beaumont, the Earl of Errol, and several other gentlemen, members of the Shakespearian Club, were deposed to, for the purpose of subsequently seen the plaintiff perform at the dramatic entertainments of that society, and that they considered him one of the best amateur dramatists of the day. Mr. Sergeant Talfourd addressed the jury on the part of the defendants. He did not put in issue upon the record, in which they justified the hissing and hooting on the ground that Mr. Gregory was the proprietor of a scandalous newspaper, and a common libeller. They were not trying such a wicked man for the charge of conspiracy, but he justified the hissing and hooting, because Mr. Gregory had been the proprietor of the Satirist newspaper for years, and had libelled the highest ranks and highest order of men, from the Queen on the throne down to private life, and was a common hobbler and defamer for hire: and that being so, and also using his power to extort money, he presented himself on the stage before a British audience as a candidate for their favour, which, in itself, was an offence against decency, and that in so hissing and hooting him, they had not acted in pursuance of a conspiracy, but from feelings of just indignation at the appearance of such a person on the stage of the theatre.—After a long and eloquent address on the part of the learned Sergeant, the Chief Justice summed up, and the Jury, after half an hour's consultation, returned a verdict for the defendants. The trial lasted the greater part of two days.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

OLD COURT.

(Before the Recorder.)

MONDAY.—Abraham Cunningham alias Thomas M'Gregor, 36, a man who held some appointment in the convict establishment at Woolwich, was charged with having, at Edinburgh, in Scotland, robbed the property of James Campbell. In other counts the note was laid to be the property of her Majesty, and also of Elizabeth Laing Campbell, the wife of Campbell, who is a convict at Woolwich, the prisoner having induced her to receive the money under the idea that by so doing her husband would be able to buy off a portion of his punishment. The evidence was conclusive, and the jury returned a verdict of Guilty.—The Recorder sentenced the prisoner to fifteen years' transportation.

Charlotte Martin, 19, Mary Anne Hill, 19, Henry Matthias, 18, Robert Brown, 23, and Frederick Cox, 19, were indicted for assaulting George Fred Wood, and robbing him of 25s in Bank notes and five sovereigns. The facts of the case have been very recently before the public. The jury found Martin, Hill, and Cox Guilty.—Mr. Clarkson, the counsel for Brown, and the Recorder sentenced Martin and Hill to twelve months' hard labour; and Stacey, who appeared to have been the ringleader in the transaction, was sentenced to be transported for fifteen years.

(Before Mr. Justice Patteson).

TUESDAY.—William Howard, alias Hawkins, was indicted for stealing three sovereigns, of the value of £3 7s, the property of Benjamin Smith, and Henry Turner was indicted for feloniously receiving the same, well knowing them to have been stolen. The facts of this case have already appeared in this paper. The jury convicted Howard, and acquitted Turner.—The prisoner Hawkins was then charged with stealing two watches, value £20, the property of Isaac Terry, under exactly similar circumstances. The jury found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to be transported for fifteen years.

Thomas Eaglefield, aged 34, was charged with misdemeanour in unlawfully obtaining from James Cadow certain sums of money by false pretences. Mr. Payne conducted the prosecution, and the defendant, who came up to the bar with a well-bred brief, conducted his own defence. The prosecutor, who appeared rather a simple body, stated that the prisoner came to him, and asked him some questions relative to a brother who had gone to America, and having ascertained that fact, he told him that he had died worth a good deal of property that he left to his wife, and that he (the prisoner) understood had appeared, calling upon him to come forward and claim the property; but as he had not done so, the money was then locked up in Chancery, but he said he had no doubt he should be able to get it out in time. The prosecutor eagerly listened to the tale of good fortune in store for him; and upon the defendant telling him that the first step would be to raise some affidavits which would require some money, the prosecutor handed him over £6, to enable the defendant to take the necessary proceedings. Under this pretence the money was obtained. The jury found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for twelve months.

(Before Mr. Justice Patteson.)

George Hatton alias St Amore, 22, William Hall alias Hedges, 40, Robert Williams alias Young alias Stone, 40, and James Thompson alias Knight 30, were indicted for a robbery in the dwelling house of Christopher Vitty, and stealing £20, in bank notes and sovereigns. The prosecutor of this information keeps a beer-shop in the New-cut, and the robbery in question was committed on the night of Sunday, the 16th May. The jury, having retired for half an hour, returned into court with a verdict of Guilty against all the prisoners; and the learned judge sentenced them to be transported for 15 years. There were several other indictments against the prisoners for offences of a similar description. The Recorder sat in the evening, but none of the cases disposed of possessed any features of public interest.

Johanna Catling, 42, was indicted for unlawfully causing a false register of death to be inserted in a register book of deaths for the district of St Clement Danes, contrary to the statute, &c. Mr. Ryland appeared for the prosecution, said that the indictment was framed under the act of the 6th and 7th Wm. IV., which enacted that any person causing any false entry to be made in any register book of births, marriages, or deaths, shall be liable to the same punishment as for perjury. The learned counsel went on to say that the prosecution was instituted by the registrar of births, marriages, and deaths for the parish of St Clement Danes, in order to do away with a very gross system of fraud which had been carried out in connection with the act of Parliament in question. The facts were then proved, and the jury returned a verdict of Guilty. Sentence was deferred.

NEW COURT.

(Before the Common Sergeant, and Sir John J. Johnson and T. Wood.)

William Barker Kilpin, a venerable and respectable looking man, described in the calendar as a clerk, was charged upon five separate indictments, that he being authorised by the trustees of the poor of the parish of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, to collect monies, did receive divers large sums for and on their account, and that he afterwards on the days named did feloniously embezzle, secrete, and steal the same. After a short consultation between Mr. Bodkin and Mr. Carkson (who was counsel for the prisoner), the latter gentleman said that both he and his learned friend on the same side had every reason to believe that the charges, &c. Mr. Ryland observed that they had no answer to the charges preferred against the unfortunate gentleman at the bar; hence it would be a waste of time to attempt that which they could not achieve. The court would observe that the prisoner was between 60 and 70 years of age, and although he had fallen, he had for a very long period sustained a uniform good character, and lived respectably, with the esprit de corps of a gentleman.—The Common Sergeant: There are several indictments. What is the amount altogether?—The Solicitor: Upwards of £600.—Mr. Carkson: But I understand £200 has been refunded.—Several highly respectable gentlemen, parishioners of Shoreditch, gave the prisoner an excellent character, ranging from 15 to 25 years. The prisoner was called up for judgment, when the Common Sergeant said he had been extremely well assisted in the present case, for he had been favoured upon two out of the number of charges the court would have felt it a duty to pass a sentence of transportation upon each. The court had been called upon to act with the utmost severity, but what were they to do? A poor man was tortured, perhaps by hunger, to steal a piece of bacon, he was severely punished; but here was a person moving in a respectable station of life, and far above want, who, he had plundered to the large sum of money which had been entrusted to his care. The court had a public duty to perform, and he felt bound to pass the following sentence:—That the prisoner be transported beyond the seas for the term of seven years. The prisoner appeared deeply affected on hearing the sentence.

At four o'clock Mr. Baron Gurney (who was accompanied by the Lord Mayor) took his seat on the bench for the purpose of pronouncing sentence on Azzopardi, the Maltese, convicted of murder at a former session, and other persons who had been found guilty before him during the present sessions.

Mathew Thomas Bloxam, clerk, forgery in various instruments, and who pleaded guilty, on Friday week, at Richard Newry, for stealing a post letter, containing a sovereign, the property of the Postmaster-General, were placed at the bar. The learned Judge sentenced them to be transported beyond the seas for the term of twelve years

Joseph Coles, having been convicted of uttering a forged endorsement to a bank post-bill for money, with intent to defraud John Fannel Ball, was also sentenced to twelve years' transportation.

Azzopardi, the Maltese, who had been convicted before the special commission, before Mr. Baron Gurney and Mr. Justice Coltman, of the murder of Rosa Sleys, at Smyrna, both British subjects the prisoner at the bar, had been sent to England for trial by his own desire—was next brought up for judgment. The learned Judge observed that the jury, in the case, had by no means not sufficient to establish the allegation that both the murderer and murdered were British subjects. An interpreter was sworn, who explained to Azzopardi, as the nature of the proceedings. Mr. Bodkin was then called upon his objection, and Mr. Baron Gurney took a note of it. He said he and his brother Coltman thought it of no avail, yet had determined to refer it to all the judges. The prisoner now asked through the interpreter, that he would to go to see the consul at Smyrna; but that, of course, could not be allowed. Mr. Baron Gurney then put on the black cap. He said, "Prisoner, you stand convicted of the crime of murder; and the victim of your violence was a helpless woman, in your own house you were taken into protection. Yours is a crime without excuse or palliation, and it becomes my painful duty to pass upon you the awful sentence of the law. His lordship then passed sentence of death in the usual form, and ordered the prisoner to be interred within the precincts of the prison. When the nature of what had been declared was explained to the prisoner, he exhibited much anguish. The judge will necessarily decide upon the case formally before execution takes place.

(Before the Common Sergeant, and Sir C. Marshall, Alderman.)

JUDGMENTS.—James Lovell, convicted of stealing 2000 yards of silk, value £600 and upwards, was sentenced to be transported beyond the seas for 14 years. The prisoner, who is stated to be a wealthy man, was much affected.—Thomas Weymouth, convicted of forgery and uttering bank notes and seven sovereigns which had been recently stolen; hard labour in the House of Correction for one year.

Henry William Hyde Hyde and George Frederick Gayther, two young tailors, were indicted for stealing two pieces of broadcloth, the property of Messrs. Winterbottom and Co., at No. 27 Blackman-street, their employers.—Found Guilty. Both the prisoners were then tried separately upon another charge of stealing property belonging to their aforesaid employers. Both were again found Guilty. The Court sentenced them each to sentence upon the second conviction, but upon the first the sentence was seven years' transportation.

THE CRAYON DRAWINGS FROM RAFFAELLE'S CARTOONS, BY THE LATE MR. HOLLOWAY.

These exquisitely-finished drawings, from the cartoons in the Palace at Hampton Court, were taken by the deceased artist for the engraver of the plates of the Cartoons, which were published a few years ago. They combine the extraordinary power of Raffaelle with the elegance of outline in a very imposing manner. Mr. Holloway has produced, perhaps, the most admirable crayon drawings which modern art has witnessed. The fidelity to the originals is perfect. The artist was employed, almost without intermission, upon this, the great work of his life, for seven years. His drawings are now to be viewed in the laboratory of the Polytechnic Institution, in Regent street, where they have been placed by the surviving family of the artist, who were they are offered for sale at a price of £2500: a large sum, but one, when compared with the labour expended upon them, and the genius and knowledge displayed in them, is not more than commensurate with their merits.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

HAMPTON RACES.

The lessees and managers of the Moulsey Hurst, if they do not rival Ascot and Epsom in the number and splendour of their meetings, have turned to advantage to such parts of the account, and made so decided an improvement in the course and in the character of the sport, that the toilet as well as the smart proprietors of racing establishments are glad to attend the Hampton meeting. Little fair ones, and bonnets no less pretty, were plentifully displayed at Hampton.

The meeting commenced on Tuesday, under auspices that will "put money in the pockets" of those who need their last sixpence at Ascot with balances on the wrong side. Speak out of the meeting had a capital week, and the weather was favourable for the purposes of refreshment booths, stables, &c. Beauty and fashion, those indispensables to a perfect racing assemblage, were not wanting on Wednesday.

The races commenced a little before two, and finished about a quarter past six. We subjoin a return with observations.

For Gold Cup, by Subs. of 5 sovs each, with 40 added

Sir G. Heathcote's Aurungzebe, 3 yrs	..	..	..	(R. Brown). 1
Mr. Bowlby's Red Deer Mary, 5 yrs	..	..	..	(Rogers 2

First heat—2 to 1 against Lady Mary, and 7 to 4 aget Aurungzebe.

The Surrey and Middlesex stakes of 20 sovs each. 45 Subs

Lord Lowther's b. c. by Sir Hercules, 3 yrs. 8st 12lb

Sir G. Heathcote's Dark bloom, 4 yrs. 7st. 7lb.	..	..	(Chapple)

Betting—5 to 4 against Sir Hercules, and 2 to 1 each aget Dark bloom and Nore Orion.

The running was made round the first turn by the favourite, Sir Hercules following him at a long jump. It was soon taken up by Sir Hercules for three parts of a heat, when a quarter of a mile it was neck and neck between him and the favourite, the latter however got out to it in time, and coming in a canter by two honest lengths. Dr. Busan had secured the second place.

The Stewards' Cup	..	..	..
Mr. Stanborough's b. c. by Sultan	..	..	(Nat) 1

FOUR-OARED MATCH AMONGST GENTLEMEN OF THE UNIVERSITY OF [illegible]

Notwithstanding the very cloudy and unfavourable state of the weather on Monday last, a great deal of interest was excited amongst the members belonging to the respective Universities, who were anxious to witness the race among the gentlemen forming the four-oared boats belonging to each of the aquatic establishments, which has made of late years a very favourite feature of the season.

Ten boats were selected, as was stated in the evening paper, to contend for the honour.

First crew, colours blue, black cross.—Sir Hayes, bowsman; Mr. Jackson, Cambridge; Mr. Hewson, Trinity; Hon. L. Bromley, Magdalen, and Sir W. Stirling, captain.

Second.—Mr. Brooks, Christ Church; Mr. Pusey, Christ Church; Mr. Lyon, Trinity; Hon. John's, Mr. Henry, Union, steerman.

Third.—Mr. Cooper, Trinity; Mr. Rolfe, [illegible]; Jesus; Mr. H. Jones, Caius; Mr. Ritchie, Trinity; Mr. [illegible], Caius, steerer.

Fourth.—Mr. Bumgarten, Caius; Mr. Sharp, Trinity; Mr. Shadwell, John's; Mr. Marion, Trinity; Mr. A. [illegible], Trinity, steerer.

Fifth.—Mr. Green, Mr. Miller, Trinity; Mr. Childe, Magdalen; Mr. Shakespear, Trinity; Mr. Wilks, Trinity, Mr. Hussey, steerer.

Sixth.—Mr. Cooper, Caius; Mr. Chesterworth, John's; Mr. Selwyn, Trinity; Mr. Watson, Jesus, Mr. Rowland, Trinity steerer.

The start from the place mail, half past six, at which time there were several long boats out to witness the race which was expected, and turned out to be of the very first. The race was, as usual, from Westminster to Putney, and the signal having been given they effected a very beautiful start. They were well together, presenting a very pretty picture, and continued in a cluster until facing the Horseferry, when yellow drew ahead, and passed through Vauxhall-bridge in advance. Blue with a black cross being close on her quarter, which pressed the leading boat regardless of all opposite Chelsea Hospital, where, after a powerful struggle, blue won, a cross succeeded in obtaining the leading place. Yellow, however, were not to say yamok off; they under the most plucky and repeated attempts to regain the advantage they had lost, but ineffectual—also with the cross remained the unvarying position they had entered, and arrived first at Putney-bridge, about two boats' length a-head of green, yellow were third; white fourth

The gentlemen afterwards sat down to a very elegant dinner at Aivia's, the Bell's Tavern Putney, Mr. Ramsey presiding, and Mr. Philips doing the honours facing him. The evening was spent most agreeably.

THE KING'S COLLEGE GENTLEMEN.—On Tuesday evening the King's College gentlemen rowed their annual wager for the season, which is conducted in the usual aquatic course, from Westminster to Putney; and, at about half past six, the following gentlemen started in their shells, to row as well as they understood an aquatics as a pic-nic-ed way:—Mr. Shaw and Mr. Lawrie, blue; Mr. Pollock and Mr. Lockard, white; Mr. Weskett and Mr. Howard, green. It was within an hour of high water, and the tide was a heavy spring. The first pair on the list won the choice of station, and went to the Middlesex side, the last named gentlemen being next to them, and in the middle. It was a level and pretty start. Immediately after the start, Messrs. Shaw and Lawrie took the lead, and maintained it throughout, winning easily. Mr. Howard and his partner were the second pair at starting, and were overtaken at Lambeth Palace. It was a smart race with the two last pairs; but Mr Howard and his partner run over a buoy, and threatened destruction to their wherry. Mr. Pollock (son of the Attorney General) and his partner had the second place the entire distance, although severely pressed throughout by Messrs. Weskett and Howard.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

General Popham died at Bath, on Saturday last, in his 79th year. The gallant officer had been confined to his bed for the last year, and obtained his release as a full general 10th January, 1837

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.—On Tuesday a numerous meeting of the friends of the above institution took place in the large school room at Camberwell, for the purpose of examining the several pieces by the young gentlemen, previous to the Midsummer vacation. Among those present were Admiral Sir C. Ogle, Bart. (chairman), the Lord Bishop of Rochester, Sir Wm. Symonds, Lieut. Lake, R.N., Admiral Young, Sir T. Hastings, M.D., Col. Mackenzie, Captain Roust, Captain Wheeh, and the Rev Mr Chambers. The gallant chairman congratulated the meeting on their increased patronage and support since the last examination, and also that the chair for his seat on the platform, made from the timber of that part of the Victory where Lord Nelson breathed his last, has been presented by Admiral Sir C. Rowley, and in which he trusted a future presidents would feel proud to sit. In conclusion he complimented the children on their zeal, and exhorted them to further exertion. Recitation was then delivered with excellent taste, in Latin and English, by Masters Farquharson and Mackenzie, followed by a scene, in French, from Moliere's "Bourgeois Gentilhomme," a round from "Rising the Sun Surveyed," and from the "Adelphi," of Terence, in Latin, concluding with the representation of an interesting Parliamentary debate, which took place in 1741, in which Sir Robert Walpole bore a conspicuous part. The evening was spent most agreeably. The whole was delivered by eleven young gentlemen. The prizes, consisting of mantels, books, &c. were then delivered to the best scholars in the establishments. Friendly, drawing, &c., with suitable remarks from the chairman. A vote of thanks having been awarded to the chairman, the meeting broke up.

THE LATE ADMIRAL SIR SIDNEY SMITH.—A monument to perpetuate the memory of this brave commander is to be erected in the burial ground of Presle Cause, near Paris. This laudable undertaking originated with some of his countrymen and friends resident in France, on the anniversary of their admiration of his heroic conduct. The requisite amount has now been collected, and it is gratifying to be able to record that many of the subscribers are Frenchmen, who have served in Egypt, and their descendants, who have liberally subscribed according to their means towards this praiseworthy object. It is probable that is the first instance of the national prejudices and animosities of the members of the French nation towards Englishmen officers being entirely forgotten, for the purpose of paying a deserved tribute of respect to the memory of the late Admiral Sir Sydney Smith; but this testimonial of the universally high opinion entertained of the character of that gallant officer, who, although opposed to them when serving his country, saved many hundreds of the lives of the officers and gallant soldiers of the conqueror's army from the merciless dagger of the Turks, when they had them in their power during the memorable French expedition to Egypt. Admiral Sir Sydney Smith died at Paris, his funeral was attended by all the diplomatic officers of the English army and navy then in the capital, to whom his true worth and services were well known.

Two new war steamers have arrived at Cove from Portsmouth, the Mercer, 2 guns, Commander George Butler, and the Myrtle, Her Majesty's ship Tyne, 28 guns, Captain W. N. Glasscock, who added to our strength in the squadron in that harbour, which, if rumour is to be credited, is to be further increased by the addition of several vessels of war, first and second rates. Rear-Admiral Beaumont is also hourly expected in the Shannon river by the Admiralty mail-steamer, for the purpose of inspecting the several forts and batteries in the Lower Shannon, which are to be garrisoned by detachments of the Marine Artillery.

Major Macpherson, brigade Waterloo, Captain Lord John Hay, arrived at Plymouth on Monday morning at 18 days from New York. The body of Sir C. Bagot, the late excellent Governor of Canada, is on board, and his lamented lady and family have also come home in the frigate.

The second division of the 5th (or Northumberland) Fusiliers, under the command of Captain Spence, arrived in Cove, in the Boyne transport, on Friday, after a passage of 18 days, from Gibraltar. They were joined early conveyed to Cork in the Tay steamer. The detachment of this highly distinguished regiment arrived in the Penrose transport, on Friday, the 19th of May, from the same quarters. This division (the 2nd) marched on Sunday for Fermoy, to join the head-quarters.

There was a grand military speech in the Phœnix Park, on Monday last, in commemoration of the glorious battle of Waterloo. His excellency the Lord Lieutenant, on horseback, reviewed the whole of the troops assembled, which were drawn up on the ground. They were first formable for the purpose, as there was a gentle easterly wind, sufficient to keep the air agreeably fresh. The troops were the Royal Artillery, 4th Dragoon Guards, 11th Hussars, 34th Regiment, 1st Battalion 60th Rifles, 61st Regiment, and 72nd Highlanders. After the usual ceremony had been observed by his excellency a blank gun was fired, and a variety of evolutions were performed. The sight was extremely interesting, and attracted an immense number of persons, both in and out of the park, on the scene in action. It is greatly to be wished that all the Irish fights may prove of the same slam description. On Sunday each of the regiments in garrison as attended divine service in their fully equipped uniforms and accoutrements. At the Roman Catholic chapel on Arran quay, and at the Scots Church, Usher's quay, services were passed outside the doors.

The rumour current in military circles that the colonelcy of the 2nd Regiment of Life Guards, vacant by the decease of Earl Cathcart, will be given to the Marquis of Londonderry, whose successor in the command of the 10th Hussars, report adds, will rather be a General Officer of higher standing and Peninsular celebrity than a big position in the administration of military affairs.

THE REVIEW AT THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY'S.—On Fri ay last the anniversary dinner of the 7th Hussars took place at the Clarendon, being the first of the three days commemorative of the battle of Waterloo, not to interfere with the Duke of Wellington's banquet on the 18th. There was a great muster on the occasion of Lieut.-General Sir Edward Kerrison, K.C.B., in the chair, the Earl of Belfast, Vice President. The following officers were over, or are, attached to the regiment:—Lieut.-Colonel Wyndham, Major Brotherton, Captain Stevenson, K.G., Marquis of Anglesey; Earls of Belfast and Uxbridge, Lords Vivian, Glasgow, Combermere, Lake, Hill, Sir Wm. de Lisle, Baron Rolleston, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Arthur Chichester, Bart., Sir Wm. Russell, Bart.; Colonels Wildman, Robins, Keane, Hall, Tunnard, Wm. Verner, Dundas, Wyatt, John Wildman; Major Cumberland, Sir Charles Burley, H. Joyce, Potter, Norbury, Lawrence, Inge, Bann, Huggins, Dalton, W. Carly, Rose, B. Portman, Stone, Stewart, Paget, Phillips, Grissell; Messrs. Preston, Baker, Hanbury, Hoy, Rimedo, &c. The entirety of the entertainment was not a little enhanced by the presence of their late colonel, the Marquis of Anglesey, their guest, who having served in the regiment for a space of forty years, and commanded it for the last seventeen, left his brother officer and fellow soldier, representing a corps of the 7th Hussars engaged with the French cavalry, the modelling and grouping of which are most tastefully wrought, was accompanied with an address to his lordship, to which his lordship was pleased to return a most feeling answer.—Officers of the 7th Queen's own Hussars then addressed the truly gratifying address. I accept this splendid testimonial of your generous attachment, with feelings of the deepest gratitude. During more than forty-six years I have had the good fortune to command this distinguished regiment, and through the whole of that period I have never ceased to experience ample proof of its devoted affection. The cheerful obedience to my orders, the efficient support I have ever received, the zeal of its members, not merely to obey my commands, but to anticipate my wishes, have rendered the task easy of establishing that high character for the most correct discipline and regularity which have obtained for this regiment a just celebrity. Neither officers, this splendid token of your esteem will remain a source of the highest gratification to me, and it will be my pride to mention it as an additional proof of a generous and affectionate regard which I have ever experienced at Cove. On her arrival Admiral Bowles is to transfer his flag to that frigate, and the Malabar, 72 guns, is to sail for the coast of Spain. The Cove Lieutenant-Governor is also expected. Cove, Sunday, Evening" [illegible] an assurance of the very prosperous appearance at that place since the arrival of the vessels of war, and this consols [illegible].—The Tyne, 26 guns, is now in the harbour, and the Calliope, 12, St. Vincent, 50, Vanguard, 80, and Leonidas, 26, are to immediately expected. It is said that this formidable armament is intended for a special service, and that secrecy is not to effect the suppression of preparations to Sacheveren or in Newmarket as a fact which cannot admit of much controversy, when the present position of Spain is regarded.

The Barbadoes, 50, Lieutenant-Commander John Nott, which arrived at Plymouth on Sunday has brought some days later intelligence from the Argentine Republic than that formerly published. At the time of the Barbadoes' departure from Monte Video no land not been any collision between the forces of that republic and those of Buenos Ayres; nor was it at all probable that there would be any. The French Fleets was there in the Alfred, 53, to protect the interests of the numerous British residents

[illegible]

LOSS OF A FRENCH BRIG, AND TWO OF THE CREW.—On Monday last the Rapid, Captain Roberts, belonging to Arvin, put in to Sheerness, from nearly abreast of Boulogne Middle Light, after having on board the crew of the French brig of Dover, Jean Desse, Captain Lucas, bound from Newcastle to Toulon, with a cargo of coals. It was ascertained that a ball passed two of the crew on the morning of the 1st Dec at Arnes, on the Long-sand, causing a heavy gale from about north-east, and immediately after, and about noon, the crew took to the [illegible] boats just as they neared the [illegible] save a particle of clothing or anything [illegible] and were with the wind and north west. On coming the east Barrow Sand the jolly boat unfortunately capsized, and two of the crew, named Jean Desse and Compagnon, were overset, and, owing to the heavy sea, their companions could only succeed, and that with the greatest difficulty and risk, in saving one of the two. The remaining crew, with the ship's boat, got safely on board the vessel Captain Lucas and the remainder of his crew. The Rapid was bound from London to Harwich, and it was about six o'clock in the morning when the vessel took her departure. Reported the long boat of the French brig rising about at the mercy of the waves. Captain Roberts and his crew lost not a moment in rendering assistance, and after great and considerable exertions on their part, the boat at that time running fair, with a heavy cross sea, they succeeded in securing the long boat, and getting Captain Lucas and his surviving crew on board the Rapid, in a greatly exhausted state, where they were treated with the greatest kindness. Captain Roberts administering every comfort which their distressed condition required

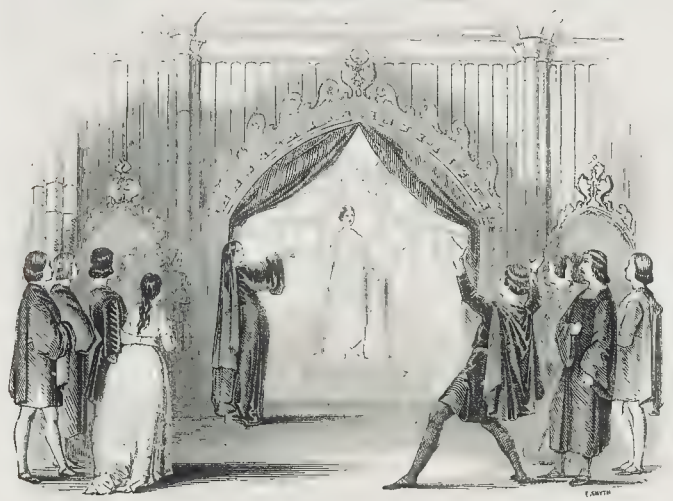
THE PLYMOUTH BREAKWATER LIGHTHOUSE.—The valuable addition to the public works is now fast approaching to completion. During the past week the tiers of the building was completed, so that the oil-room, the store-room, and the living room are now up. The fourth room, which will be the sleeping apartment, is in a forward state, nearly the whole of it being dry as at the Eddystone quarters at Groston.

The steam-ship Hibernia sailed from Liverpool on Tuesday afternoon, taking her Majesty's mails for Canada and the United States, and between eighty and ninety passengers.

AFFRAY AT ASCOT.

It will be recollected that some three or four seasons since a desperate affray took place at Egham races between the privates of the 45th Regiment, then quartered at Windsor, and the hordes of thimbleriggers and other thieves who are the invariable frequenters at gatherings of that character. The thieves, however, at that time, got considerably "the worst of it," and ever since that period the same fraternity, whether at Egham or Ascot, have omitted no opportunity of getting up a row when an opportunity has offered with any of the privates belonging to either of the two regiments in garrison at Windsor, who may be permitted by their respective Colonels to visit the races either on Egham-mead or at Ascot-heath.

On Thursday week several of the privates of the 2nd Regiment of Life Guards, and nearly half of the privates comprising the 2nd battalion of the Grenadier Guards, had leave of absence to proceed to Ascot. In the course of the day several soldiers got robbed and plundered (having only themselves to blame for their folly) by hundreds of thimbleriggers with which the course swarmed in all directions. A considerable number of rows, upon a minor scale, consequently occurred during the day; but, the police being present, these comparatively little emeutes were soon suppressed. In the evening, however, shortly after seven o'clock (the police having been just withdrawn in consequence of the departure of all the respectable portions of the visitors), a quarrel took place between a private in the Life Guards, who was quietly leaving the course, and a Gipsy, which ended in a fight, and in the Gipsy (who was the aggressor) getting a deserved thrashing. This was the signal for the assembling of some 300 or 400 keepers of thimblerig-tables, whose numbers were quickly augmented by a large accession from the hordes of Gipsies "in camp" at that portion of the heath. A desperate conflict then ensued between these parties (who began the affray) and the soldiers belonging to the Coldstream and the few who were on the ground attached to the 2nd Life Guards. The soldiers were all unarmed, while their opponents were well supplied with the sticks used for the snuff boxes and other formidable weapons. A wooden fence or paling, however, being close by, enabled the soldiers to procure some sticks in their defence; and, after conflict, which lasted for nearly an hour (during which time many of the Gipsies and low vagabonds were deprived of their weapons, which were turned against themselves), the red coats came off the victors, but not until the limbs of several on both sides had been fractured. One strong and powerfully-made Gipsy, known as King Jemmy, had his arm broken between the wrist and elbow, and his jaw severely fractured. Several bystanders, who took no part in the affray, got knocked about by the thieves, who managed to effect several robberies in the immediate neighbourhood.



SCENE FROM THE "WINTER'S TALE."

The "Winter's Tale" being one of the six dramatic selections made by Mr. Macready wherewith to conclude his career of management at Drury-lane, so far as the present season is concerned, we have had a scene engraved from that play, which may now, perhaps, be not inappropriately introduced at a time when the public are considerably interested in the whole subject of his administration and farewell. The scene is that wherein Paulina draws the curtain and discovers the statue. She is speaking to Leontes of Hermione.

Paul. As she lived peerless,
So her dead likeness, I do well believe,
Excels whatever yet you look'd upon,
Or hand of man hath done; therefore I keep it
Lonely, apart: But here it is: prepare
To see the life as lively mock'd, as ever
Still sleep mock'd death: behold; and say, 'tis well.
[Paulina undraws a curtain, and discovers a statue.
I like your silence, it the more shows off
Your wonder: But yet speak;—first, you, my liege.
Comes it not something near?

Leon. Her natural posture:—
Chide me, dear stone; that I may say, indeed,
Thou art Hermione; or, rather, thou art she,
In thy not chiding; for she was as tender,
As infancy, and grace.

MADAME PERSIANI.

This amiable lady and most accomplished artiste is an interesting instance of how far the mens divinior transcends all other gifts of mere physical force or charm. Not that we would say her natural powers are inferior or even mediocre (for where ever was vocal organ so tasked by an unbounded fancy, and shown to be so obedient to its wildest dictates), but that in science, grace, powerful portraiture of character, be it grave or gay, romantically sentimental or familiarly cheerful, Persiani stands alone à force d'esprit. Genius-lit, there is no difficulty which presents a gloom to her; no labyrinth "of the hidden soul of song" which she cannot easily explore; nothing which she touches with her magic wand that does not freshen into new beauty,

Like fairest flow'rs of morn, that yet more fair,
'Neath Hebe's dewy kiss expand their bloom.

Many of our first-rate vocalists have risen from comparative nothingness in the art by slow advancements to their present high station; but Mdlle. Tacchinardi blazed forth a musical comet at once, and has been magnifying upon our sense every nearer approach she makes to us. To give a list of the rôles which show her powers off to the best advantage would be as endless as those powers themselves; suffice it to say that whatever is high in the musical art has an additional elevation bestowed upon it by the treatment of this great cantatrice—that she is the bigot of no school—that her style is engendered between head and heart, and that if ever the singing-women of Osiris were celebrated in Thrace by the name of the Muses, Persiani deserves a similar compliment at our hands.

A short sketch of the brilliant career of this extraordinary vocalist will not, we are sure, be uninteresting. Mdlle. Tacchinardi is the daughter of the celebrated tenor of that name, and was born at Rome on the 4th of October, 1812. Not destined by her father for the profession which she has since so adorned, her début was owing to accident rather than design, for it was in consequence of a principal singer's sudden illness at Leghorn that "la jeune Fanny" good-naturedly undertook a part in "Francesca di Rimini," which crowned her with such unequivocal success that it was no longer deemed advisable to withhold her from pursuing une carrière où elle entrait, pour ainsi dire, en souveraine. Shortly afterwards she signed an engagement for the opera at Padua, from which she repaired to Venice, where Pasta was then singing; and in a little time la petite Pasta, as she was surnommée, became not only the rival of that celebrated cantatrice but the favourite of the Venetian public.

MADAME PERSIANI.

In the spring of 1833 she visited Milan, attended by the same brilliant success; thence proceeded to Rome, where, in the winter of 1834, two operas were expressly written for her; subsequently to which, her fame spreading over all Italy, she was hailed with rapture at Florence, Naples, Genoa, Pisa, &c. During her stay at Naples a circumstance occurred which we cannot forbear quoting, in the same language, too, in which the interesting dialogue took place:—"En 1835, un soir qu'elle venait de chanter dans 'Lucia di Lammermoor,' partition écrite exprès pour elle, comme elle était occupée à revêtir son costume du second acte, une femme entra dans sa loge. Après quelques compliments prononcés d'une voix attendrie, 'Ces beaux cheveux sont-ils bien à vous, madame?' dit en souriant l'inconnue à la cantatrice. L'admirable chevelure de Madame Persiani résista à la main curieuse qui s'y jouait; l'inconnue ajouta, 'Eh bien! puisque je n'ai pas ici de couronnes de fleurs à vous offrir, permettez-moi de vous entresser une avec vos cheveux.' Cette inconnue était Madame Malibran." Our space precludes the possibility of relating a hundred similarly interesting anecdotes coupled with this amiable and accomplished artiste; we must, therefore, for the present forego the pleasure, and briefly state that having, despite all her modest fears to the contrary, finally established her fame at Paris, in October 1837, in "La Sonnambula," she has continued since that time to delight all hearers wherever "she wends her tuneful way," on the Continent or here, in public or in private life.

MADAME GRISI.

With the portrait of Persiani we give another of Grisi, good in everything, but par excellence the heroine of "Norma," in which character she here appears before the reader—even as she shone in all the fiery splendour of her genius, on the stage of her Majesty's Theatre a few nights past. Grisi has quite individualised the magnificent part of Norma. The grand priestess—the passionate, abandoned, jealous woman—the agonised mother—the prostrate child of sin—she is each and all by turns; and as she warms up to the poet's creation and moulds her spirit to the changing phases of the beautiful drama, you see with admiration how gloriously versatility may be taught to blend with power in a delineation of the varying passions and creations of the erring human heart. The truth soon breaks upon you that Grisi is a great actress—fiery, impetuous, stormy; or in pathos so appealing, as to spring the fount of tears. You want her history? You know it. It is the wild dramatic story of a passionate life, it resembles her acting. But why follow it beyond the stage—that stage whereon she walks as one fresh from the temple of Genius, with the wand ready to thrall the spirits of her audience; with the voice that might "charm down angels from their spheres," rich, full, voluptuous, rife with soul and melody, and in its beauty and freshness more eloquent than Wisdom's self?—So does Giulia Grisi triumph in her mystic art.

THE MOROCCO ARABS AT THE VICTORIA THEATRE.

EAPING, vaulting, and postaring, and other dangerous exhibitions of this kind, have usurped the regular-built drama at the Victoria Theatre, where a troop of Morocco Arabs are now performing, whose feats are nightly received with shouts of surprised delight. The performers are twelve in number, "chequered in bulk as in brains," from maturity to boyhood: the majority are stoutly framed, but two or three are slightly made; and all have extraordinary suppleness of frame and limb. Their feats include leaps akin to flying, national dances, and evolutions of the "impossible" order. They vault over a line of twelve persons with as much facility as Gulliver cleared the hills of Lilliput; and their double summersets are apparently as easy as those of the shafts of a windmill: indeed, they resemble so many "aerial machines." But, probably, their most surprising feat is that of forming a column or pyramid by four piled up, as in the engraving, the stoutest and tallest occupying the place of the base; besides which, he bears another Arab around his waist, and one upon each shoulder, whilst the topmost figure can touch the proscenium curtain. We assure the reader that their entire performances are worthy the attention of all who woo the wonderful.

Previously to their arrival in this country, this troop performed for some time at the Cirque-Olympique, at Paris; and a French journalist observes of their pyramid feat: "They have built pyramids of stone, of granite, of marble, and I know not what; but it was reserved for our age to build pyramids of human flesh and blood. The base, as you see, consists of feet in flesh and bone; the entresol has the shoulders for its reel; and so on, the second, and the third story; the Cirque-Olympique alone arresting the height of the building."

HANOVER-SQUARE CONCERT ROOMS.

Now, when the Philharmonic and Royal Ancients are fast exhausting the number of their brilliant reunions, when the gay concert season is busily drawing to a close, when "harp and voice" are soon to grow silent in the "halls of Tara," we take the yet lingering opportunity of presenting to our readers two varying aspects of these magnificent salons, the one affording a coup d'œil of some bright assemblage gathered in accordance with the improving musical taste of the times, and the other exhibiting the "full front" of that magnificent orchestra which has made the Philharmonic Society the boast and glory of the musical world.

These same Hanover-square Rooms are the arcana of a mysterious temple, and many and beautiful and powerful have been the worshippers within its walls. Here are held many of the gay subscription assemblies of the London season—and here the stately and aristocratic ball of the Royal Academy holds its fancy court. What a blaze of wondrous loveliness have we seen there—the blood of high nobility coursing through delicate veins, and speaking in the eye—in the cheek—upon the brow—telling of the pure high breeding of a lofty race—a race more lofty and more lovely than any other in the world! But Music is the true genius of these halls—the concert is their lawful revelry, and to an annual round of musical celebration—soirée and matinée—are they devoted as sacredly as was ever patriot to the altar of country. In these rooms enthusiastic assemblies have heard evoked the genius of some of the finest spirits of the age. From that orchestra Paganini, with almost unearthly presence, enthralled hearts and souls with the magician power of an instrument, oracular with strength and beauty, and poetry, at his touch alone! There Liszt flooded the raptured sense with wonder and delight as he opened up the stores of Genius—and in marvellous and gushing harmonies seemed, with an almost hallowed inspiration, to improvise the very music of the spheres. There Malibran and Sontag, Cataiani and Pasta; Persiani, Grisi, Dorus Gras, have again and again given forth melody to the greedy ear, so tuned and modulated, and eloquent with life and passion, as never seemed the human voice before. There reign too—in greater number and variety—the secondary spirits of sound and song—spirits inferior, but still of high influence and far repute. Par exemple—you pause before that orchestra, and presto the soul of buffo parody calls the laugh to your lips. There is John Parry, the modern Mercury of the Comic Muse. Or relapsing back into the "mood serious," you may have clear sonorous Staudig, or Harry Phillips, or Miss Hawes, or Miss Birch, or any of

The dear delightful creatures of the day,
Who charming sing, or exquisitely play.

Who are you dons of the orchestra, who wake those musical interpreter's of the composer's soul, which, in a hundred eccentric forms, make picturesque the raised throne of the musicians? Well, they are all men of note. As conductor you see Tom Cooke, or Bishop, or Moscheles, or Sir George Smart—

That same Sir George Smart O,
Who played the concerto,
With his four-and-twenty fiddlers all of a row—

when Ingoldsby, in ballad metre, celebrated the ceremony of the coronation. Then in the band behold the veterans Linley and Dragonetti, and, behind them, hosts of talent—such talent as our dilletanti are accustomed to hear from the little regiment which Costa musters in such orderly strength in the little pit between the stalls and stage of her Majesty's Theatre.

Now, turn from the orchestra to the company, and see what a graceful assembly you have. Peer curiously among them, and ten to one but you discover people of renown—great critics, or men of literary fame—artists, professionals, and musical amateurs. There is always something bright, cheerful, and exhilarating about the atmosphere of the Hanover-square Rooms, and often are they honoured with the presence of royalty. The Queen and Prince Albert are not unfrequent visitors at the Ancients; and the Duke of Cambridge is often in the royal box, bestowing loud and hearty approval upon the meritorious performances of those who

Woo the flattering favour of the crowd.

Some of the highest personages in the realm, too, are among the conductors of the Ancient Concerts—the heads of the nobility and the Church. The last Philharmonic meeting was held on Monday last, and a notice of the performances will be found in another part of our paper.

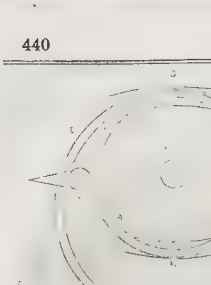
ORCHESTRA OF THE HANOVER-SQUARE CONCERT ROOMS.

THE WEATHER.—Monday and Tuesday were somewhat sombre and cold, the effect of a north-east and east wind, but there was no rain, and vegetation was rapidly recovering the effects of the late excess of moisture. On Saturday and Sunday the thermometer was so high as 69 and 70 in the shade; and on Tuesday it had fallen to 53. Wednesday (the 21st of June) was the longest day in the year. So far we have seen little of summer. Let us console ourselves with the Christian philosophy of the poet:—

"If in the year's advance no genial joy is found,
The year's decline shall compensation bring
If resignation waits, and faith abound."

Sir Edward Sugden (the Irish Lord Chancellor), on coming into court the other morning, remarked that the weather was getting very warm. "Yes," was the reply, "it is almost 98 in the shade!"

DEATH OF EARL CATHCART.—This nobleman expired on Friday last, at his residence, Carlside Cottage, Renfrewshire, in the 88th year of his age. The deceased earl was a General in the army, Colonel of the 2d Life Guards, Vice-Admiral of the Coast of Scotland, Governor of Hull, &c. &c. He has left a family of four sons and three daughters (the youngest of whom is 40 years of age), and is succeeded in his titles by his eldest son, Lieutenant-General Lord Greenock.



PARHELIA, OR MOCK SUNS.

A correspon lent has favoured us with the following account of two parhelia, or mock suns, as seen at Derby, on Friday last June 16.

The morning was very fine and hot; sky clear of clouds, except a few thin linear cirri; barometer gradually falling; at 9 A.M. it was 30·04 inches; thermometer, in shade, 64 deg.; wind, a slight breeze from the E.

P.M. 3h 10m.—Thin linear cirri passed overhead, and met in E. and W.; few cumuli in S.; wind N.E., light. I first noticed a very brilliant ring, AAAA, its colour was pale silver externally; internally it was darker, and rather yellow. The diameter of this ring was about 40 deg.

The mock suns, S and F, touched AAAA on each side. They threw out rays, horizontally, opposite the sun, and were slightly tinged with prismatic colours.

3h 15m.—Another ring, BBBB, appeared, touching AAAA at G. These rings were of the same colour. There were very bright lights at G and H, brighter than the mock suns E and F. These lights had their upper and lower edges nearly straight, and at their sides gradually faded away.

3h. 20m.—The ring AAAA was still very brilliant, though the mock suns had disappeared.

3h. 28m.—Mock sun E again visible, but F did not re-appear.

3h 33m.—I again threw out rays, horizontally, opposite the sun, and was very bright.

3h 36m.—G and H were even brighter than before. Thermometer, in shade, 74 deg.; barometer, 30·03 inches; wind E., light.

3h 37m.—An inverted rainbow, CCDD, appeared; it had all the seven colours, the red inmost. Mock sun K was of a red colour. Linear and crossed cirri overhead, which met in E. and W. Cirri rose in W.

3h 55m.—The same, except that CCDD had vanished.

4h. 5m.—Mock sun E was very red; rings A and B had nearly vanished; the lights G and H were brighter than ever.

4h. 30m.—Nothing was visible except G and H, which were almost as bright as the sun itself, these continued till five o'clock, when they began to grow faint.

5h. 10m.—All had disappeared. Sky, clear of clouds, except few cirri.

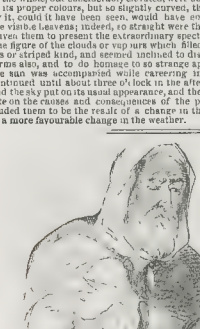
9h.—Very warm evening. Thermometer, in shade, 63 degrees; barometer, 30·03 inches; wind, N.N.E., light.

Throughout, the sun remained unaltered.

The lower part of the ring, BB, and of the rainbow, CD, was fainter than the other parts. The upper parts of the rainbow faded gradually

From another Correspondent.—At Boston, June 16th, 3h. 30m. P.M., was seen a halo round the sun, with prismatic colours on the N.E. and S.W., and a much larger circle, well defined, of a pale white, having the sun in the S.W. of its circumference. The interior of the halo exce t the sun's disc, was of a much darker colour than the surrou nd ng atmosphere. The centre of the larger halo was very near, if not in, the zenith

Another correspon lent thus describes the phenomenon, as seen at Louth. The day was ushered in with a very light breeze from the eastward, and a particularly transparent haze or vapour. About ten o'clock, there was seen a splendid halo, or circle, several degrees in diameter, round the sun, and which shone so brightly, that the space inside of by this concent ic circle appeared darker than any other part of the heavens. To the north of this circle another was formed of an elliptical character, well defined, bright, but not so broad as the original halo; its southern circumference passed through the body of the sun. There was afterwards formed, still further north, considerable area of two other circles, which intersected each other at the north extreme of the second circle, and were of similar breadth. The intersection of these reflected much of the solar light, as to be taken, by some, for a fa nt parhelion, or mock sun. The prevailing colour of the circles was t at of amber. To the east of the whole, but generally within the circumference of a rainbow, were shown in its proper colours, but so slightly curved, that the hemisphere described by it, could it have been seen, would have embraced the largest portion of the visible heavens; indeed, if straight lines were they apparently, that would conceive them to present the extraordinary spectacle of an inverted ra nbow! The figure of the clouds or vapours which filled the sky was that of th stratus or straight kind, and seemed inclined to dispose themselves into circular forms also, and to do homage to so strange appearance as that with which the sun was accompanied while careering in mid heaven. The spectacle continued until about three o'clock in the afternoon, when it was absorbed, and the sky put on its usual appearance, and the spectators were left to speculate on the causes and consequences of the phenomena. the rational conclu ded to be the result of a change in the atmosphere, and indicative of a more favourable change in the weather.



PORTRAIT OF GENERAL MUSIAPHA BEN-ISMAEL.

The death of this distinguished auxiliary of the French in Algeria was briefly recorded in our Paris correspondent's letter of June 6. It appears that, on the 26th of May, at noon, General Thiéry, commanding the division of Oran, received intelligence of the death of General Mustapha-ben-Ismaël, who was killed at four o'clock in the previous afternoon, at twenty-five or thirty leagues within Oran, at El-Biada, near Kerrouchа, in a slight affair of the rear of the army. Mustapha was on his return to Oran, with the booty taken by him in an engagement on the 19th of May, when, in passing through a forest, upon the territory of the Flitas, he was attacked by some Arabs in ambuscade, by one of whom he was shot in the breast, and instantly fell from his horse. A general panic seized the 500 or 600 cavalry who accompanied him; and such was their want of feeling, that they fled and left the body of their old general to the enemy. It is stated that Abd-el-Kader mutilated the corpse of Mustapha, and carried his head in triumph among the tribes who yet remained faithful to him.

Mustapha-ben-Ismaël was eighty years of age; he had been in the French service since 1835, and commanded one of the most active and important divisions. He was appointed field-marshal on July 29, 1837; and commander of the Legion of Honour on Feb. 5, 1842. The loss of this faithful and gallant soldier will, doubtless, be severely felt by the French army.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

A meeting of the inhabitants of the parish of Shoreditch has been convened for the following purposes: "To consider the propriety of petitioning the Bishop of London for the appointing two curates, not Puseyites, to do duty at Shoreditch Church, during the permitted absence of the vicar on account of ill health, so that the payment of a large congregation may be retained, and the noble edifice well filled with the ancient families which have been induced to leave in consequence of the Puseyism lately introduced."

Rumour asserts that a communication of a decided character in reference to the Rubric and Ritual of the church has been made to a right rev. prelate by Government.

The Lord Chancellor has presented the Rev. John Fawcett, M.A., of Jesus College, Cambridge, to the rectory of Washingworth, Lincolnshire.

The Rev. J. L. Harding has been instituted to the rectory of Bisston, St. Michael's, Lincolnshire, vacant by the death of the Rev. Calverly John Bewick.

The Rev. H. Victor has been licensed to the perpetual curacy of Emsworth, Hants.

The Rev. John Meade, B.A., of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, has been instituted to the united rectories of Newton Purcel with Shelsworth, near Bicester, Oxfordshire, vacant by the decease of the Rev. G. Lloyd.

The Rev. John Charles Wharton, M.A., of Christ's College, Cambridge, has been appointed to the vicarage of Gilling, Yorkshire.

The Rev. Wm. A Wright, M.A., curate of Farnworth, has been appointed to the incumbency of the new church at Bleacar, Yorkshire, on the noun nation of the Earl Fitzwilliam.

The Rev Charles Edw. Kennaway, B.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge, Las been licensed to the perpetual curacy of Trinity Chapel, Brighton, va ant by the death of the Rev. Robert Anderson, B.D.

The Rev. J. W Hewitt, M.A., has been appointed to the ministry of Portland Episcopal Chapel, Bath.

The Rev. Edward Whitley, B.A., of Queen's College, Cambridge, has been nominated to t e incumbency of Sommer's Town Episcopal Chapel, Wandsworth, Surrey

The Rev. William Gs dner, M.A., has been licensed to the perpetual curacy of Coniville, Leicestershire.

CHURCH EXTENSION.—A meeting of the Incorporated Society for Promoting the En arge ment, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels was held at their chambers in St. Martin's place on Monday last. Certificates of the comp etion, enlargement, &c., of churches and chapels in 10 parishes were exam ned and a proved, and warrants were issued to the treasurer for the payment of the grant awarded in each case.

THE WELLINGTON STATUE.—A meeting of noblemen and gentlemen interested in the erection of the statue to the Duke of Wellington, and the column in memory of Nelson, took place at the Mansion-house on Saturday last. There were 18 individuals present, amongst whom were the Duke of Rutland, Sir Frederick Trench, Mr. Charles Barclay, Mr. A. K. Barclay, Mr John Henshaw, Mr. Pepper, Mr. Simpson, Alderman Lucas, &c. &c. The Lord Mayor was called to the chair. It was moved that the subject of the appropriation of the surplus metal presented by Government to the city, for the city statue of his Grace, should be postponed; an amendment was proposed that the surplus metal should be handed over to the West-end Wellington Statue Committee, when nine Lords were held up for, and nine against, the amendment. The Lord Mayor would not vote, and the question remains in statu quo.

CHESS.

Solution to problem No. 27.

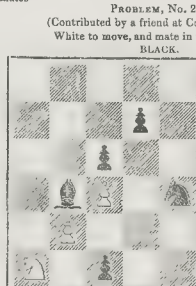
WHITE.	BLACK.
Q takes Kt ch	K to Kt sq
Kt ch	K to Q B sq
Kt to Q Kt 6th ch	K to Kt sq
Q to Q B 8th ch	R takes Q
Kt mates
	or,
Q takes Kt ch	Q interposes
Q takes Q ch	Kt to Kt sq
Kt ch	K to B sq
Kt to K B 8th disc ch	K moves
Q mates

PROBLEM, No. 28.

(Contributed by a friend at Constantinople.)

White to move, and mate in fifteen moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

The solution in our next.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE.—We have to report the arrival of a very moderate supply of wheat of home production to Monday last this week; yet, owing to the improvement in the weather and fine favourable accounts from the growing crops, the demand for that article was not nearly equal to the extensively dull, at a decline of from 1s to 2s per quarter. Foreign was not a slow inquiry, and must be considered 1s per quarter lower. In bonded parcels business has been transacted. Barley and malt have supported their previous value. Good sound oats have sold freely, on full terms; but in other kinds little has been done. Beans, peas, and flour are unaltered.

ARRIVALS.—English: Wheat, 4580; Barley, 680; Oats, 3740; and Malt, 4030 quarters. Foreign, 3580 sacks. Irish Oats, 1720 quarters. Foreign: Wheat, 3400 quarters; Barley, 640 qrs.

AVERAGES.—English: Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 48s to 52s; ditto white, 52s to 56s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 44s to 48s; ditto white, 48s to 52s; rye, 3s to 32s; grinding barley, 22s to 23s; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; Chevalier, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 62s; brown, ditto, 52s to 54s; Kingston and Ware, 55s to 57s; Chevalier, 58s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s to 21s; potato ditto, 19s to 23s; Youghal and Cork, black, 17s to 18s; ditto white, 19s to 20s; tick beans, new, 31s to 32s; ditto, old, 31s to 33s; grey peas, 30s to 32s; maple, 33s to 36s; white, 30s to 32s; beans, 32s to 34s per quarter. Town-made flour, 42s to 46s; Suffolk, 38s to 40s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 36s to 38s per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 50s to 58s. In Bond.—Barley, 30s; oats, new, 14s to 17s, ditto feed, 14s to 16s; beans, 29s to 32s, peas, 33s to 37s per quarter. Flour, America, 22s to 24s; Baltic, 22s per barrel

The Seed Market. In canary seed a steady business has been transacted this week, at full prices; but otherwise the demand has ruled inactive.

The following are the present rates: Linseed, English, sowing 36s to 40s, Baltic, crushing, 32s to 34s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 34s to 36s. Clover seed, 30s to 46s per quarter, coriander, 10s to 12s per cwt; brown mustard seed, 10s to 12s, white ditto, 12s to 16s 6d, tares, 4s to 5s 6d per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £30 to £37 per last of ten quarters; Le seed cakes, English, £10 to £12 10s; ditto foreign, £7 to £7 10s per 1000, rapeseed cakes, £5 5 to £7 per ton; canary, 72s to 84s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 6d to 6½d for the 4lb loaf

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 48s 11d; barley, 27s 3d, oats, 18s 6d; rye, 30s 7d; beans, 28s 4d peas, 33s 7d.

Ia, erial Averages of Six Weeks which govern Duty.—Wheat, 47s 9d; barley, 27s 6d; oats, 17s 1 d; rye, 29s 10d; beans, 27s 7d; peas, 32s 2d per quarter

Prices of Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 35s; Barley, 8s; Oats, 8s; Rye, 11s 6d; Beans, 11s 6d, per 496 lbs 6d

Tea.—On Thursday public sales of about 10,000 chests of tea were held Although the attendance of buyers was rather numerous, the biddings were far from spirited. Green teas supported their value, but blacks were 1d a 2d downward tendency.

Sugar.—There has been a moderate quantity of sugar disposed of this week, yet holders have remaining firm, and full prices have been obtained to-day at Gravesend.

Coffee.—This market has been in a dull state since our last, and the rates of Ceylon have again declined

Rice.—The article is unquired for, and nearly 10,000 bags have sold on full terms.

Wool.—The public sales have been well attended, and the prices obtained have been quite equal to those noted in the previous auctions.

Potatoes.—About 1000 tons of potatoes have arrived in the Pool this week. The demand is rather inactive, at prices varying from 40s to 160s per ton.

Hops The appearance of the bine being on the improvement, the demand for all kinds of hops is brisk, and the quotations have fallen from 2s to 5s per cwt. Present rates vary from £7 to £7 per cwt

Oils This market is unusually heavy, but prices are supported.

Tallow.—The trade are cautious buyers, and the market has a dull appearance. 41s 3d is the value of P.Y.C. on the spot, and 42s for delivery in the last three months.

Smithfield.—We have had a large supply of each kind of fat stock on sale this week, and the general demand has ruled heavy, at a reduction of 2s per 8lb on Beef, from 3s 6d to 4s 10s., mutton 2s 6d to 4s., lamb, 6s 6d to 8s; veal, 3s to 4s; and pork, 3s 6d to 4s per 8lbs., or 5s 4d to 6s 6d.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—There has been very little doing in these markets, and the rates rule as follows:—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 3s 4d; middling, 3s 6d to 4s; prime large, 4s 2d to 4s; prime small, 4s 4d; large pork, 3s 4d to 4s; small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d per 8lbs, by the carcase. ROBERT HERBERT.

COMMERCE AND MONEY.

More confidence has been established in the money market during the week than has for the last forty days been the case, and the attention of capitalists has been again, in some measure, directed towards the purchase of fixed property. The Queen's visit to Scotland, I believe, has exerted a delusive, to a considerable extent generally, as all descriptions of Brazil, Peruvian, and Mexican securities have risen from 1 to 2 per cent, whilst the effect had arisen from a combination of causes. One of these, however, has been removed by the favourable alteration in the state of the weather again giving hopes that the drainage done to the growing crops will be of service, may yet be remedied, and that the question of money in exchange for corn on food may be therefore rendered unnecessary. Of the considerable decline, therefore, which for a few weeks appeared inevitable in the Consols, some portion has been again recovered during this week, and should the first quarterly statement of the public revenue be such as is generally favoured, it is confidently expected, on the English Stock Exchange, that activity will soon be restored in this branch of the money market, and that Consols will again reach the high rates at which they were so lately quoted. The abundance of the money market is, no doubt, a favourable circumstance to all the funds being at a level at present maintained, will soon, to a certain degree, find a channel for investment in our funded property, and a favourable issue to the Spanish loan is anticipated by many persons. Some purchases have likewise been made of Exchequer Bills, by which the premium which they bear has been to certain extent supported.

In the Share market the demand is also again exceeding the supply more part cularly for Railroad Shares, and the value of those of the leading lines is consequently improving. The Northern and Eastern Railway Shares have risen from 1 to 2 per cent, and the Great Western Shares have advanced from 2 to 3 per cent. Those of the Brighton line, which has effected a consolidation with the London and Croydon Railway Company, have also risen from 1 to 2 per cent. The Eastern Counties Railway Shares have likewise been in active demand, and should the Government grant the necessary powers for the completion of the Northern and Eastern Railway, the value of the Eastern Counties Railway Shares will be considerably increased.

On the Foreign Stock Exchange, Spanish Bonds have continued to attract the principal attention of the jobbers, brokers, and speculators. The conflicting information from the Peninsula has created considerable fluctuations in the prices of these Securities during the progress of this week. At one time the Three Per Cent. Bonds had fallen to 23¾. Portuguese converted Bonds are likewise 1 per cent lower, and they attract, in a very slight degree indeed, the public attention. Dutch Stocks continues to command much notice, the Five per cents having sold at par, and the Four per cents at 94¾. Belgian Bonds are not pressed for present sale in the market, and they cannot be purchased, to any extent, under 103, 104. Brazilian Bonds are not readily saleable at 72, the refusal of that Government to enter into a commercial treaty with England not being considered, in the present world, as an act of positive wisdom. Chilian Bonds can be readily disposed of at 103, whilst those of Columbia are at 19. Mexicans are 24, and Mexican are only worth 20. On the Royal Exchange, last foreign post day, the rates of the foreign exchanges were again to her more favourable.

In Consols there have little alteration to notice this week. In the manufacturing districts the workmen are well employed, and fairly paid for the production of goods from the cotton, wool, and silk, already for the completion of orders for China, India, and our colonial possessions in America. To Europe, likewise, some quantity of various descriptions of goods continues to be forwarded, and a speculation was never at a lower ebb than it is just now, all these operations are for legitimate purposes, and consequently manufacturers have not, for several years past, been in a more healthy position than they are at the present time; for, with the exception of the iron trade, they are eminently prosperous.

BRITISH FUNDS.—(CLOSING PRICES.) FRIDAY.

Bank Stock, 180	India Stock, 264
3 per Cent. Reduced, 94¾	Ditto Bonds, 5s
3 per Cent. Consols,	Ditto Old Annuities,
3½ per Cent Reduced, 101¾	Ditto New Annuities,
New 3½ per Cent, 103¾	Exchequer Bills, £1000, 18s. 64 pm.
New 5 per Cent,	Ditto £500, 64 pm.
Long Annuities to expire	Ditto Small, pm.
Jan. 1860, 15	Bank Stock for Opening
Oct. 1885, 12	India Stock for Account,
Jan. 1860,	Consols for Account, 94

FOREIGN FUNDS

Belgian, 5 per cent, 103	Spanish Deferred,
Chilian, 6 per cent,	Dutch, 2½ per cent, 55
Spanish, 3 per cent,	Ditto, 4 per cent, 100¾

SHARES

Bristol and Exeter 70 paid, 55¾	Ditto Loan Notes (paid)
Cheltenham and Great Western (paid),	London and Birmingham ( )
Eastern Counties (paid),	Ditto New Shares paid),
Ditto New (paid),	London and South Western (p)
Ditto Debentures	Manchester and Birmingham (paid),
Great Western (65 paid),	South Eastern and Dover (65 paid), 24¾
Ditto New Shares (50 pa.d),	Ditto Scrip (2s pad),
Ditto Fifths (paid)	York and North Midland (40 paid),
London and Brighton (50 paid 33¾	Ditto New Shares 20 paid),

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JUNE 20.

BANKRUPTS.—J. WATKINS Exmouth-street, Clerkenwell, draper.—C. STATES, Seaman place, Poplar, keeper.—F. MAHERY, Peterborough, common brewer.—C. CLARK, Lower-street, Westminster-road, baker.—S. NAPPER, Upper Stamford-street, Blackfriars, grocer.—J. L. GRAY, Jermyn-street, St. James's, tailor.—E. BURTON, Wood-street, Cheapside, silk warehouseman.—J. ROWE, Blandford street, Marylebone, upholsterer.—A. CAREW, Lower Thames-street, ship and insurance broker.—J. ATKINS, Broadway, Deptford, grocer.—W. COOKE, Bradford, Yorkshire, worsted spinner.—G. W TRAVIS Sheffield, builder.—R. BOLTON, Ellenborn, Yorkshire, innkeeper.—R. WADDINGTON, Boston, Yorkshire, grocer.—T. W. DAVLIS, Sheffield, slop seller.—J. PROST, Bristol, baker.—J. HARFORD and W W DAVIES, Bristol, and Eno Vale and Severn, Monmouthshire, iron manufacturers.—T. HURLEY, Tunstall, Staffordshire, draper and dealer.—J. I. BENNETT, Saffron, near Malton, chemist and druggist.—R. PRICE, Waterloo, Lancashire, dealer in coals.—R. BROWN, Sunderland, butcher

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—W. M'LUCKIE, Leith, Arrander, plasterer.—D. PEACOCK, Dundee, wood merchant and ship keeper.—J PROVAN Brownknowe, Caddier, Lanarkshire, farmer.—W. T., and J MUNNS, Glasgow, grocers and cabinetmakers.

FRIDAY, JUNE 23.

DECLARATION OF INSOLVENCY.—W. TOWNLEY, carriage broker, 5, Church-row, Alcester

BANKRUPTS.—J. NEB. baker, Weedon-beck, Northamptonshire.—T. HOBBS, potter, Nettleben, Oxfordshire.—A. ELAM and H. ELAM, gunsmiths, Oxford street.—J. DAVIES, jun., and J. DAVIES, stage manufacturers Gutter-lane, Cheapside.—G. JAMESON, upholsterer, Hertford.—H. L. BECKER and J. L. BECKER, calico printers, Manchester.—I. WARD, house decorator, Devizes.—J. GARSED, cloth dresser and finisher, Batley.—J. BROWN, broker, Liverpool.

PRICE OF SUGAR.—The Average Price of Brown or Muscovado Sugar for the Week ending June 20 is 35s. 9½d, per cwt., exclusive of the Duties of Customs paid or payable thereon on the importation thereof into Great Britain

BIRTHS

At Cavendish-place, the Lady Mildred Hope, of a daughter.—At Avonhurst, Warwickshire, the Hon. Mrs. Woodhouse, of a son.

MARRIAGES

At Edinburgh, Henry Davenport, Esq., son of Rear-Admiral Sir Salusbury Davenport, C.B., and K.C.H., to Catherine, eldest daughter of the late J. Dunn, Esq., of Astley Hall, county of Lancaster.—At Highwood, Theophilus Leverett, Esq., to Henrietta, daughter of Rev. J. Tremayne, Rector of Tangley.—At Lincoln's-inn-fields, R. Firth, Esq., of Bombay, to Mary Anne, daughter of the late T. Rashleigh, Esq., of the E. I. Service.—At Kensington, the Rev. Pelham Maitland, of St. Peter's, Walworth, to Ellen, daughter of the late J. Wood, Esq., of Harleyford place, Kennington.—At St. George's, Hanover-square, the Rev. Rees Rogers, chaplain to Lord Hope, to Eleanor the Duchess of Cleveland, eldest son of Edward Edwards, Esq., of Woburn square, to Mary Augusta, only child of the late William Gold, Esq., of her Majesty's Customs.—By the Rev. James Veitch, minister of St. Cuthbert's parish, according to the Presbyterian form, Sir James Coquelum, of Lees, Bart., Lord-Lieutenant of Dumbartonshire, to Jane, second daughter of Sir Robert Hamilton, Bart.—At Kensington, on the 16th inst., by the Rev. M'Culloch, Sir James John Reid, Member of the Supreme Council of Justice of the Ionian Islands, to Mary Dalzell, daughter of the late Robert Thomson, Esq., of Berdmore.—At Ickford, Bucks, by the Rev. Reginald Courtenay, the Rev A. Hammond, to Harriet Charlotte, eldest daughter of Admiral Sir John P Beresford, Bart., K. C. B.—At Worcester, the Rev. Thomas Anthony L. Maynard, Rector of Ashwell, Rutland, eldest son of J. C. Maynard, of Hatherton Hall and Skeabarrow, York, Esq., to Elizabeth Jane, eldest daughter of George Hinton Williamson, of Harperley Park, Durham, Esq.

DEATHS.

In Manchester square, after a few hours' illness, Captain A. J. Caldwell, only son of Sir James Colquhoun, K.L.S.—At Chelsea, Surrey, on the 14th instant, Mrs. Hester Johnson at the advance age of 102 years.—At Waterstock, Oxford, William, eldest son of W. H Ashurst, Esq., in his 26th year.—At Monzie, Joseph, Esq., of South-street Finsbury square, in her 76th year.—At Sunning House, Berkshire, Mary, the wife of W. Stone, Esq., in the 77th year of her age.—At the house of Alan Maxwell, Esq., Hoxton Forester, wife of the Rev John Henderson, minister of Canonbie, Dumfriesshire, and of Belmre, Aberdeenshire, the Rev. J. A. Pugh, LL.D., minister of that parish.—At the house of Mr. Handley, surgeon, Daventry, June, only surviving sister of the late Rev Richard Solomon Skillern, vicar of Chipping Norton, Oxon.—At Ilfracombe, in the 81st year of her age, Mary, relict of the late Rev. J. Blackmore, rector of Lincombe.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements cannot be received after 7 o'clock on Thursday evening.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER.—The Nobility, Patrons of the Opera, and the Public are respectfully informed, that, in consequence of the great success attending its first representation, ONE MORE GRAND PERFORMANCE of this celebrated Work will take place at HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, on Monday Evening, June 26, 1848, supported by the following eminent artistes: Mdme Grisi, Medlle. Brambilla, Mdlle. Moulin, Sgrs. Mario, Lablache, F. Lablache, and Formasari. In order to give the fullest effect to this great Work, the CHORUSES will be supported by the united talent of the principal Vocalists of her Majesty's Theatre, and will be increased to above ONE HUNDRED VOICES. Arrangements have been made to secure the celebrated Overture composed expressly by Mercadante on the occasion of the performance of it at the Royal Palace of Naples, in honour of the birthday of the King of Naples and comprising all the Themes of this beautiful Work, and which will be executed by the Full Orchestra, including Messrs. Dragonetti, Lindley, Alvarez, Tolbecque, Nadaud, Baumann, Barret, Harper, Platt, Rilus, and the rest of the Orchestra of her Majesty's Theatre.—The whole under the direction of Sign. Costa.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Sign. LABLACHE respectfully informs the Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public, that his BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY evening, June 29th, when will be performed, Donizetti's New Opera of DON PASQUALE, as performed with the greatest success at the Italian Opera at Paris. Dr. Malatesta, Sgr. Grisi; Ernesto, Sgr. Mario; Don Pasquale, Sgr. Formasari; Notary, Sgr. Gasli.; Don Pasquale, Sgr. Lablache. After which will be repeated, the new Grand Ballet (in Six Tableaux), by M. Perrot, the Music by Sgr. Pugni, with new Scenery, Dresses, Decorations, &c. entitled ONDINE, or Le Naiade. The Scenery by Mr. W. Grieve, Principal characters Ondine, Mdlle. Cerito; Hydrus, Mdme Copere, (Matter (a young betrothed to Matteo) Mdlle Guy Stephan; Villagers, Peasant Girls, Ondines, Naiades, &c. Dancers—Mesdames Cerito, Cornelie, Schefler, Fanny st, Bernard, &c.—Mr. Gouffler, Derby, and Guy Stephan, M. St. Leon, and M. Perrot.—Applications for Boxes Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven the Opera commences at half-past Seven o'clock.

THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The NINTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of this Society is NOW OPEN at their Gallery, Fifty-three, Pall-mall, next the British Institution.—Admittance, One Shilling; Catalogue, Sixpence. Open from Nine till Dusk. JAMES FAHEY, Sec.

EXHIBITION of Sir GEORGE HAYTER'S GREAT PICTURE of the HOUSE of LORDS, containing upwards of 100 Portraits of the Members of Parliament, also a Portrait of her Majesty Queen Victoria, and various her works, form up a collection of more than eight hundred portraits of eminent personages of the present day. OPEN from Ten till Dusk. At the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.—Admission, 1s.

AERIAL NAVIGATION.—ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A LECTURE on this subject, illustrated by Models of several kinds which elevate themselves by mechanical force alone, is delivered at Two o'clock daily, and on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings, at Eight o'clock, by the Inventor of the Colossal Electrical Machine, the Diver, Diving Bell, New Dissolving Views, &c. The Original Model of the Invention, and the Original Drawings from the Cartoons at Hampton Court by the late Mr. Hollow-ay, with numerous other Works of Art, have recently been placed in the Gallery.—Admission, One Shilling. Schools, Half-price. Open Mornings and Evenings, except Saturday Evening.

ROSHERVILLE BOTANICAL GARDENS near GRAVESEND.—These newly-enclosed Gardens are duly open to the Public. Admission 6d. A fu.- Mustary Band is in constant attendance, and the noble avenue of arches forms a part of the day's amusements. Hot Dinners and refreshments of every kind are served a-la-carte in the Pavilion Grounds, and Supper Parties may command the Orchestra. Private Balls and Concerts conducted by Mr. Baker, Master of the Ceremonies. The Fete on Wednesday, Thursday, Sunday, Saturday, and Saturdays, when the entertainments conclude with a Grand Display of Fireworks. The Star, Diamond, and other steam packets call at the Rosherville Pier close to the Gardens.

THE NEW CATHOLIC CHURCH of ST. JOHN the EVANGELIST, DUNCAN TERRACE, ISLINGTON, will be solemnly OPENED on Monday, June 26th, by the Right Rev. Dr. GRIFFITHS, Bishop of Oren, V.A.D. The SERMON will be preached by the Right Rev. Dr. WISEMAN, Bishop of Melipotamus and Coad, V.A.M.D. During Service will commence at Eleven o'clock precisely, to be sung by the Catholic Chapels, viz. the Catholic Boarding-school, at the Old Jews' Hall and Mavila, Catholic Chapel, Dunean-street, Islington. Reserved seats, 7s. 6d.; second seats, 5s.; and back seats, 2s. 6d.

BIBLICAL LITERATURE!

Just published, twenty numbers, at 3d., or two parts at 7d. 6d. each, of

BARTON'S BIBLICAL DICTIONARY.

W. Strange, Paternoster-row, London.

On the 8th of July will be published, price 18s., the SECOND VOLUME of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, containing the Numbers for the Half Year ending June 24, 1848, splendidly bound in cloth, gilt edges, uniformly with Volume I. Subscribers are informed that COVERS, made expressly for binding the Second Volume, may be had by order of all Newsmen and Booksellers, price 2s. 6d. each. Volume I. is reprinted, price One Guinea.

In 12mo, Fifth Edition, much improved, price 9s.,

THE BEST METHODS OF IMPROVING HEALTH AND INVIGORATING LIFE, by regulating the Diet and Regimen, exhibiting all the most approved principles of Health and Longevity, &c. By T. J. Graham, M.D.

"We are delighted to think it has reached a fourth edition, for it is the best book we have met with. It is altogether an admirable code of health."—Atlas.

"That man who, habitually, follows every direction here given, calculates to increase their comfort and extend their days, is fraught with conviction."—Edinburgh Observer.

London: Published by Simkin and Co., Paternoster-row; and Hanchard, 187, Piccadilly.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW of the RUDIMENTS of MUSIC, adapting it to more generally interesting and popular light the preparatory matter to all Musical Instruction published or printed, or the study of the Science," for the use of those who are totally ignorant of Music. By J. Green. Price One Shilling.

A CONCISE HISTORY OF MUSICAL NOTATION; the progress of its invention from the earliest times to its present state as a universal language, with a notice of some proposed improvements. By J. Green. Price One Shilling.

N.B Part III. of the New Edition of Logier's System of the Science of Music. 2s. 6d.

Royal Area, 38, Soho-square.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE for LADIES, GLASGOW.—This Institution will re-open on TUESDAY, 1st August, for the PREPARATORY COURSE; and on TUESDAY, 3rd October, for the WINTER SESSION. Pupils are now ready, and may be had at the Institution, or by letter, post-paid, addressed to the Secretary.—The Directors are happy to recommend several Ladies with whom Pupils from a distance may be placed as Boarders.

By order of the Directors,

DAVID PRINGLE, Secretary.

GLANDULAR INSTITUTION, to which the public attention is directed to the Cases and Certificates of Cures, from the use of the Glandular Compound, daily for the prevention of patients. Established in 1825, since which upwards of 3,250 afflicted poor have been cured or relieved by the use of this easy and effectual cure for the knife, as also for those who suffer from the too frequent use of mercury. Supported by voluntary contributions. A subscription of two guineas constitutes a Life Governor, and one guinea, an Annual Governor, who are entitled to have patients according to the bye-laws. Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Thomas Hawkins, Secretary, at the Institution, 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly.

Contributions are thankfully received by the following bankers:—Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie, and Co., Pall-mall; Messrs. Drummond, Charing-cross; Messrs. Hoare, Fleet-street; Messrs. Barnett, Hoare, and Co., Lombard-street; Messrs. Glyn, Mills, and Co., Lombard-street; Messrs. Williams, Deacon, and Co., Birchin-lane; Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smiths, Lombard-street; Messrs. Child and Co., Temple-bar; Messrs. Herries, Farquhar, and Co., St. James's-street; Messrs. Hankey, Fenchurch-street; Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, and Co., Lombard-street; Messrs. Prescott, Grote, and Co., Cornhill; Messrs. Masterman, Peters, and Co., Bartholomew-lane; Messrs. Robarts, Curtis, and Co., Lombard-street; Messrs. Jones, Loyd, and Co., Lombard-street; Messrs. Esdaile, Hunter, and Co., Lombard-street; Messrs. Cocks, Biddulph, and Co., Charing-cross; Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie, and Co., Temple-bar; Messrs. Sir C. Forbes, Bart., and Co., Lombard-street

NORMAL SCHOOL, AT BATTERSEA.

This establishment was formed about three years since, by two private gentlemen; and, aided by some small contributions, it has been supported by them at their own expense till the present time. It is to this establishment, in conjunction with two others, that Government has appropriated a part of the funds devoted to education; the which, in addition to other causes, has made it just now especially an object of attention. The building is of the time of Queen Anne, and is a roomy red brick house, on the banks of the Thames, in the town of Battersea. It is placed in the midst of a spacious garden of about five or six acres in extent, which serves for the agricultural instruction of the pupils. The number of teachers which can be accommodated in the establishment at one time is between 40 and 50, who are trained for the purpose of becoming masters of village and workhouse schools. The course of study includes history, grammar, composition, geography, writing, drawing, mechanics, chemistry (especially agricultural), music, and a complete and accurate knowledge of the Bible and the general history of the church, and of the doctrines of the Church of England especially. The whole period desirable to spend in the establishment is about three years; though from various causes few of the teachers have been able to remain so long a time. The different professors of the establishment have been selected with discrimination; and the head of the literary department is a clergyman of the Scotch Episcopal Church. The Honourable and Rev. R. Eden, the vicar of the parish, has also constantly concurred in and assisted the views of the founders of the institution, and afforded them the use of the village school, to enable the teachers in training to obtain a practical knowledge of their duties. The number of masters who have already been sent out from this establishment is considerable. The small room on the ground floor to the left of the engraving, will be regarded with some interest as being that in which in February 1840, Mr. Hullah first delivered a lecture on his system of teaching music. In this room also was first taught in England the system of drawing designed by Dupins, from models; and which is now almost as much followed in Exeter Hall as the system of music. One portion of the school grounds is laid out as a small botanical garden; and another is devoted to a gymnastic apparatus. The pupils also are regularly drilled by the gymnastic teacher of the Duke of York's Asylum. The school has been exceedingly healthy ever since its establishment. Most of the pupils have been supported gratuitously, but a portion have paid for themselves at the rate of £32 12s. per annum, which includes all expenses. It is right to say, that neither of the gentlemen who have so much assisted in the forming and in continuing this establishment have the slightest pecuniary interest in upholding it; on the contrary, we know that, through their philanthropic and unwearied exertions, they have incurred considerable pecuniary loss.

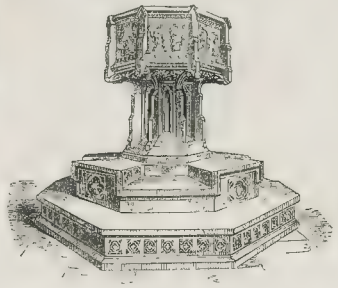
NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

THE OLD LONDON WALL, TOWER HILL.

Above is represented the only considerable portion of the old City Wall which now remains; it is behind the houses in Trinity-square, Tower-hill, and bounds the western side of a plot of vacant ground in George-street, on which it is proposed to build a church and schools. The length of the extant wall is about 50 feet, and its height from 20 to 25 feet. It is faced with masonry in regular courses, and shows, occasionally, layers of Roman bricks, especially in the lower part on the east side (recently exposed to view by the removal of some vaults and sheds), where they are seen to occur at regular intervals. At the north angle, the wall has been strengthened and coped with brick, and is, consequently, in tolerable repair. The proposed removal of this interesting memorial of antiquity has occasioned a correspondent of the Times to remark, that "monuments of this description become historical evidences, nationally important; they are continually found to be of the greatest service when tracing those changes in our state and manners which time is constantly effecting; they are links in a great chain which, once lost, can never, by any means, be replaced; and they serve to connect forcibly the present and the past."

The City Wall may be distinctly traced on the southern boundary of the churchyard of St. Botolph, at the back of Bald-and-Mouth-street. Hence it proceeded due east across Aldersgate-street to Aldersgate, whence it continued, in the same direction, perhaps, about 200 feet, where it formed an angle, and had a curious bastion. It then went rather to the north-east of Falcon-square, eastward of Castle-street, where it is now, or was lately, standing, externally incorporated with the walls of the houses, in the cellars of which it is still to be traced the stone being very smooth, massive, and perfect, thence it proceeds, and exhibits remains in the churchyard of St. Giles, Cripplegate. This course of the wall is shown in a plan drawn by order of the Corporation of London, to ascertain the extent of the Great Fire of 1666, and now preserved in the Comptroller's Office at Guildhall. The ancient metropolis, surrounded by the wall, appears to have included only an area which forms not a tithe of the present whole.

At a recent meeting of the Institute of British Architects, Mr. G. Godwin at the request of several members of the Society of Antiquaries, drew the attention of the Institute to the threatened demolition of the above portions of the London Wall; when the Marquis of Northampton, who was in the chair, suggested that the two societies should confer on the subject, and by presenting a joint memorial attempt to save this fragment of olden time from destruction.



FONT, ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, KNIGHTSBRIDGE.

In the account of the consecration of this beautiful church we omitted to state that the fittings and appointments of the interior are of a handsome and costly description. Thus: the communion-plate of silver gilt is very massive; the flagon is surrounded by the eleven Apostles, with their names, and appropriate Scripture texts, in old characters; the lid is surmounted by a figure of St. Paul; the handle is a branch of vine; and the spout a pelican feeding her young with her own blood. The offertory dish is very large and beautiful, and is covered with appropriate devices; and the chalices and patines are in equally fit taste.

The font, of which we annex an engraving, is of Caen stone, and is of beautiful design, its entire height being 5 feet 8½ inches. The font is of octagonal form, the panels, or exterior sides, being divided by buttresses, the upper and projecting portion of each of which rests upon an angel, and each angel either has its hands clasped, or holds a shield or book, bearing some symbolical device corresponding with the subject of the panel immediately preceding. Under each panel there is a boss, representing some plant answering to the subject on the panel. The supporting shaft consists of eight mullioned arches and as many buttresses, placed upon two steps, decorated with mullions.

This beautiful font was sculptured by Mr. Charles Physick, 10, Gower-street North, Euston-square; it cost £100, and it has most liberally been presented to the church of St. Paul by the Rev. D. A. Beaufort, of Portman Chapel.

POST-OFFICE, BOSTON, U.S.

We this week give our readers a pictorial view of the American agency of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, which is situated in State-street, Boston, opposite the Post-office, where Brother Jonathan counts newspapers for the royal mail steamers by the "cartload," and letters by the "bushel," as the Boston Bulletin expresses it.

We have been furnished with a few statistics of the number of copies of English reprints sold in Boston, the "modern Athens" of America, by a single house, and they will show our readers the value of an international copyright law. It will be perceived that the works which have commanded the most extensive circulation are by English writers, who have not received a penny from these transatlantic pirates. Could we look into two or three of the largest publishing houses in New York and Philadelphia, the fountain heads from whence flow tens of thousands of every important English work, at unprecedentedly low rates, the result of our observation would astound every Englishman. But we must be content to give the following information, which we received from a friend now residing in Boston. He is a gentleman connected with the press, and is well informed on the subject of which he speaks. He states that at the principal periodical depôt in Boston the following works, among numerous others, have been sold by the single copy to the extent given, as follows—of Dickens's "English Notes" twelve thousand copies were sold in three days—the best edition at one shilling, another at sixpence, and the cheapest at threepence sterling! "Martin Chuzzlewit" is republished by several houses in different styles, one edition is sold at sixpence sterling per part, another at threepence, and the cheapest, in a newspaper, at one penny halfpenny, and many thousands have been sold of each edition, in fact it is now reprinted in nearly all the American newspapers. Sheridan Knowles's "Secretary" was reprinted at New York in twelve hours after the steamer Great Western arrived at that port with the first copy, and it was sold at threepence sterling. Alison's "History of Europe" is republished in sixteen parts, in a good style, at one shilling each part; as also "Brand's Encyclopedia," in the same style and at the same price. These valuable works have an extensive sale. "Zanoni," by Bulwer, was the first English work reprinted in the United States in a cheap form, and ten thousand copies were sold in a few days in New York, and Messrs. Redding and Co., at Boston, sold seven thousand in one week at sixpence sterling each! "Morley Ernstein," by James, followed at the same price, but was not so extensively sold. Borrow's "The Bible in Spain" was republished complete for one and threepence sterling, and had a very large sale. All the most popular English works are reprinted at the same low rates. The "Edinburgh Review" is reprinted and sold for one shilling, and "Blackwood's Magazine" for ninepence sterling, and thousands of copies are sold. The whole of the "Family Library," which contains valuable copyrights, has been reprinted and sold for one shilling per volume. It is said that at least fifty thousand copies of every volume have been sold in the United States. Our own journal, the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, is got up in such an expensive form that the Yankees cannot reprint it, and the American artists would not attempt to copy our fine engravings: we are, therefore, secure against a reprint. A few copies only of the first numbers were sold in the States, merely because they were not ordered, but recently agents at Boston have taken a regular weekly supply of three hundred copies, or fifteen thousand copies per annum, which is a large circulation for what is there considered an expensive journal; and it may be well so called, when we compare the price here of a standard English work with that of the American sixpenny reprint! These statistics will show our Government the importance of an international copyright law with the United States. If one house at Boston, a city containing only about one hundred thousand inhabitants, can dispose of from five to ten thousand copies of every English work, it is easy to make a general estimate of the total number of copies sold throughout the United States. Probably the sales would average, on different works, ten, twenty, thirty, and even fifty thousand copies!

THE "GIANT" OPHICLEIDE, WITH A NOTICE OF MONS. PROSPERE.

"Bring me a hundred reeds for my capacious mouth," might have been appropriate enough in the days of Polyphemus, but, rely on it, a love-sick giant of our times would give vent to his complaints by the aid of a "monster ophicleide."

Let not our readers imagine that the instrument our artist has placed in the hands of M. Prospere is exaggerated in size, such being in truth about the relative proportions of himself and the gigantic ophicleide manufactured expressly for the purposes of the Birmingham Music Hall. When seen the other day by the audience at the Hanover-square Rooms slowly ascending, as it were from out of the floor, among the gentlemen of the orchestra, considerable consternation arose, some imagining that, as steam is now made to do everything, they were about to witness a novel application of its powers to the manufacture of "sweet sounds," by means of some machine of which the funnel was the first part introduced to their notice. But when Prospere stepped forward, and, boldly grasping the brazen pillar, proved that one small mouth could bring out its mighty tones, merriment and delight took the place of surprise, and perhaps dismay.

The powers of the ophicleide have been so fully illustrated in the metropolis and the principal cities of our country by the subject of this notice that we will now quit the instrument and address ourselves to the man. Though still young his life has been mixed up, however humbly, with various stirring events in the history of his country. Jean Prospere Guivier was born at Wilna on the 19th of March, 1814. His father was one of the numerous prisoners taken by the Russians in the disastrous retreat from Moscow, and did not recover his liberty till the final conclusion of peace, when he returned to France, bringing with him the young Prospere, then about five months old. At a very early age the lad joined the band of the 44th Regiment of the line, and as there were five brothers of there, all in the same corps, and all musicians—the identity of name leading to some awkwardness—he adopted one of his christian names for surname, and, dropping the Guivier, has since been known as M. Prospere. He accompanied the French corps d'armée, which was to act, if need be, in conjunction with the allied fleets, against the Turkish and Egyptian forces in that struggle for the independence of Greece which was settled by the battle of Navarino; and Prospere was present at that action on board the Scipion, as the troops had not then disembarked. He afterwards formed one of a small suite attached to the person of General Trezel, and in that capacity travelled over the greater portion of the Morea. He was then too young to be enthusiastic about temples and statues, but entertains a most perfect recollection that all that related to the commissariat was most detestable. On his return to France he studied for two years at the Conservatory at Paris, his instrument then being the horn, no class having been formed for that on which he has since been so successful. He has now been about two years and a half in England, and those who have the pleasure of knowing him would be loath that he should quit us. Few would imagine, on seeing that grave face in the full blow of its seriousness, when just about to commence a solo, what a mass of mirth, and "quips and cranks," and all sorts of bedevilment lies beneath. As composers shall hereafter enable him to unfold the powers of the ophicleide, so greater popularity will be in store for him as an artist; as a man, his popularity is only bounded by the limit of his acquaintance.

A journal of Auch states, that, on the journey of the Princess Clementine and Prince Augustus of Saxe Cobourg through the department of Côtes du Nord, the axletree of their carriage broke at Jugon. A delay of some hours was found to be necessary, and, unfortunately, the accommodation of the place was but indifferent. In this dilemma a poor Government employé offered the royal pair an asylum, which was gladly accepted. On leaving the town they graciously expressed their satisfaction at his hospitality, and left a sum of money for the poor

LONDON: Printed by ROBERT PALMER (at the office of Palmer and Clayton), 10, Crane-court, Fleet-street: and published by WILLIAM LITTON, at 198, Strand, where all communications are requested to be addressed.—SATURDAY, June 24 1843.

CHRONOLOGY OF REMARKABLE EVENTS IN 1843.

JANUARY 1 TO JUNE 24.

JANUARY.

1.—The British Navy consisted of 234 vessels of all sorts, mounting 3890 guns; or 670 guns, and about 7000 seamen, fewer in employ than last New Year's Day.—New potatoes grown in the open air at Bentham, Lancashire.—Intelligence received of the arrival of free immigrants in Jamaica and Demerara, and their satisfactory employment.

2.—The Cortes opened at Lisbon by the Queen in person.

3.—Riots at Nantes, in consequence of the high price of provisions.

4.—The Regent dissolved the Cortes of Spain.—The French government sent troops and stores to their new colony, the Marquesas Islands.—Intelligence received of the continued eruption of Mount Etna.

5.—Continued falling off in the Revenue: decrease on the quarter £940,063.—Extensive fire in Lawton-street, Liverpool.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert and suite, arrived at Claremont from Windsor Castle, and returned to Windsor on the 16th.—Terrific thunder storm at Macclesfield, which partly destroyed several houses.

6.—George Ibbeson, brother to Sir Bey, elected Prince of Wallachia.—Publication of the "Colosseum View of London" with the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS; the largest wood engraving ever executed.—Intelligence received of the destruction of the bazaar at Cabul, and the final retreat of the British troops through the Khyber Pass, under General Pollock and Nott; Shah Pooza, son of Shah Soojah, recognised as sovereign of Cabul, and a treaty concluded with the Ameers of Hyderabad for the free navigation of the Indus.—News arrived of the payment of the first instalment of the Chinese ransom of 21,000,000 dollars.

9.—Opening of the adjourned session of the French Chambers by Louis Philippe.

11.—Destructive whirlwind at Coutances, in France.—Intelligence received of continued war between the Mexicans and Yucatecos, and the fortification of Campeachy.—The extensive silk-mills of Messrs. Harding and Co., near Shepton Mallet, destroyed by fire.—The head of a passenger cut off in a catastrophe on the North Midland Railway.—Halifax, Nova Scotia, first lit with gas.

12.—Intelligence received of an American commodore having taken possession of Monterey, in Upper California, through a false report; but in three days the town was ceded again to the Mexicans.—Dreadful hurricane off Lorient, on the French coast, and loss of the Conqueror East Indiaman, and all on board, 96 souls, except one boy. The hurricane extended throughout the British coasts, and the calamities were truly appalling.

13.—A Greek vessel wrecked near the Lizard—nine lives, when 99 persons perished.—Death of Hylton Jolliffe, Esq., at his residence, in Pall Mall.—Dreadful storm on the coast of Donegal, in which upwards of 30 persons were lost.—Wreck of the Lily, of Liverpool (insured at £20,000) on the Taunton Sands, in the Bristol Channel.—Eighty poor fishermen lost their lives off the Morne coast, in the county of Down.

14 The steamer Monk, for Liverpool, struck off North Bank, when 34 lives were lost.—Alderman Hudson, near Reading, destroyed by fire.—The barque Santon, of Liverpool, wrecked at Ballytearque, and 4 lives lost.—Affray between the smugglers and the revenue police, on an island in the Shannon, near Lanesborough, when one of the police was shot.

15.—The Britannia steam-ship arrived at Liverpool, from Halifax, having made the passage in less than 12 days.—Loss of the Jessie Logan Indiaman off the Cornish coast: crew saved.—Terrific storm in the Bay of Biscay.

16. The first British merchant ship sailed from the Bream-slaw for Hong Kong, one of the ports lately opened in China.

17.—A laden schooner and a brig coming into collision, were both sunk off East Greenwich.

18.—Between 1200 and 1300 British sojourners or visitors at Paris, present at the ball of the British Embassy.—Sir Charles Metcalfe appointed Governor-General of Canada.

19.—Fog in the river Thames was so dense that nearly all the steamers were laid up.—Sir E. Sugden, late in the Irish Court of Chancery, pronounced judgment in the case of the citizens of Cashel v. the Pennefather family, in favour of the former, the property involved being £3000 a year.—An iron tug steamer first introduced on the canal at Alexandria.—Important discussions in the French Chambers on the right of search treaties, in which the war party were defeated.—The special commission of the Assembly of the Church of Scotland claimed exclusive jurisdiction in ecclesiastical matters, redress of grievances, &c.—Abd el-Kader reappeared in Algeria at the head of troops, to oppose the French.

20.—Assassination of Mr. E. Drummond by Daniel M'Naughton, in the afternoon, between the Admiralty and the Horse Guards; the assassin having mistaken his victim for Sir Robert Peel. Mr. Drummond died on the 25th.

21.—The Greek Government notified to the allies its inability to pay the interest of the guaranteed loan.

22.—The extensive floor-cloth manufactory of Messrs. Rolls, Old Kent-road, destroyed by fire.—Outrages at Carmarthen, by "Rebecca and her Daughters."—Intelligence received of the loss of the New Times off the coast of Africa, by a terrific explosion of gunpowder on the 18th of October last.

24.—The same day, that beans were sown in the open fields at Seaham-hall Farm, Northumberland.—Daniel M'Naughton committed to Newgate for the murder of Mr. Drummond.—Intelligence received from the Cape of Good Hope of the rebellious intentions of the Boers towards the Colonial Government.

25.—An extensive steam-line distillery at Rotherhithe destroyed by fire.—The war-party in the French chamber of peers defeated by 117 to 33.—The great mercantile house of Parish, Milan, and Son, of Gottenburg, declared insolvent.

26.—Great blast of eight tons and a half of gunpowder, fired by Voltaic battery, at Round-down Cliff, on the works of the London and Dover railway, when 2 million tons of chalk were dis odged, and settled gently into the sea below, at a saving of £10,000 to the railway company.

28. The splendid mansion of Lord Hillsborough, in Upper Grosvenor-street, destroyed by fire.—An extensive pile of warehouses filled with goods, in Norton-street, Manchester, consumed by fire.

29.—The packet-ship Stephen Whitney, arrived at Liverpool from New York, after an extraordinary passage of 15 days!—The mutilated and scorched corpse of a female found in a canal at Paddington.

30.—Intelligence received of the total loss of the E.I.C. war-steamer Ariadne, near Chusan harbour.—The thermometer at Greenwich stood at 74 deg. in the sun, and 56 deg. in the shade.

31 —The French Ministry defeated on its Syrian policy.

FEBRUARY.

1.—The Rev. Mr. Baily tried at the Central Criminal Court, and found guilty of uttering a false promissory note, and sentenced to transportation for life.—Dr. Olivant elected Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. —In the Court of Bankruptcy, the granting certificate of a bankrupt, adjourned for three years, in consequence of irregular conduct. The Druse Kamaican, Ahmed Beslan, released from prison, and reinstated by Assad Pasha.

2.—Great free-trade banquet at Manchester, at which 3800 persons were present.—The session of Parliament opened by commission, the Lord Chancellor reading her Majesty's speech. The address in the House of Lords was moved by the Earl of Powis, and seconded by the Earl of Egmont. In the Commons the address was moved by Lord Courtenay, and seconded by Mr. W. P. S. Miles. In neither house was an amendment proposed.

3.—Terrific storm and hurricane in London, which blew off the works at the new Royal Exchange a truck of nearly three tons weight.

4. News arrived that Oporto was bordering on rebellion.

6.—The Xanthian Marbles opened at the British Museum.—Intelligence received from Mexico of another movement under Santa Anna, when the garrison of the city declared against the Congress, and took possession of the public arms.—The Duke of Wellington stated in Parliament that the government would propose a Poor-law Bill for Ireland.—The Regent, Espartero, addressed the Spanish nation on the impending elections.

7.—Intelligence received from India of the return of the British troops from Jellalabad, and of the restoration of the gates of Somnauth to the priests of India.

8.—A farmer at Woodbridge, in Suffolk, convicted in the penalty of £3 9s. for having killed a hare upon land in his own occupation.—Tremendous earthquake at Guadaloupe, and destruction of the town of Pointe-à-Pitre.—The Tiber overflowed its banks, and invaded a third of the city of Rome, so that in the Corso provisions were taken in boats to the inhabitants.

9.—A wretch at Pendleton, upon his destitute, confessed himself to have perpetrated a murder, for which four men were executed in 1817.

10.—Death of the venerable Sir J. Newport, Bart., M.P. —Mr. Braham, the celebrated singer, reappeared in London, after his return from America.

11.—Dreyschock, an extraordinary pianist, appeared in Paris.—Rebecca outrages extended to Yorkshire.

13.—A Mr. Gregory attempted to perform the part of "Hamlet," but the spectators would not hear him.

14.—The thanks of both Houses of Parliament voted to the officers and army engaged in the recent war in China.

15.—Intense cold; the thermometer in London at 5 a.m. being 16 degrees.—Intelligence received from Captain Ross, who had penetrated the Antarctic Circle to 71 deg.—Rebecca outrages extended to Yorkshire.

16.—A bill for the encouragement and navigation concluded by Great Britain with the Emperor of Russia, providing reciprocal entry of ports, duties, &c.—The dispute between Spain and Spain satisfactorily settled.

18. Death of the celebrated Colocotron, at Athens.—Grand Temperance Festival held in the Corn Exchange, Cork.

17.—Her Majesty and the Court left Windsor Castle for Buckingham Palace.

18.—A gale of wind displaced a mountain of sand, near Brest, and exposed to view a village and church.

19.—Marriage of the Crown Prince of Hanover with the Princess Mary of Altenberg. The fifth of a series of incendiary fires, within a few months, broke out at Lutworth.

20.—A grand concert given in the Hall of Commerce, Threadneedle-street, for the benefit of the families of the seamen who perished in the wrecks of the Reliance and Conqueror, Indiamen.—A vote of thanks passed by both Houses of Parliament to the Governor-General of India, and to the army lately employed in Affghanistan.

21.—Mr. T. Duncombe's motion in the House of Commons for enquiring into the conduct of Lord Chief Justice Denman, negatived by a majority of 135.—The heaviest of a life-boat, and a person who had assisted in saving a wrecked crew, at North Shields, fined 10s. for allowing nothing but ballast on shore in the life-boat, the rule being that life alone is in such cases to be saved.

23.—Tranquility restored at Oporto, but such was the danger, that the taxes could not be collected.—Funeral of Lord Abercrombie, at Tullibody.—The Marquis of Douglas married to the Princess Maria of Baden, at Manheim.—Great sailing match at Eglinton Castle, between Lord Eglinton and Sir James Boswell and their rivals, which his lordship won by nine shots.

23.—Mr. Walter's motion in the House of Commons for the revision of the New Poor-law, negatived by a majority of 68.—The largest bar of iron ever made, rolled at the Cyfarth-fa works, near Merthyr Tydvil; it is a cable bolt, weighing 2400lb.

26.—The Prince Napoleon, son of the ex-King of Westphalia, presented to the Regent at Madrid.

27.—The cathedral of Aix-la-Chapelle robbed of two gold crowns, and other valuables.—Intelligence received of the death of Captain Hobson, the first governor of New Zealand.—Opening of the Eastern Counties Railway.—A superb piece of plate presented to Sir Moses Montefiore, for his defence of the Jews of Damascus and Rhodes.—The Regent's party gained ground in Madrid, but failed in the provinces.

28.—The Earl of Aberdeen stated in the House of Lords, that, owing to the exertions of this country, the slave trade had been greatly reduced in extent.—On the motion of Lord Ashley, in the House of Commons, an address was voted to her Majesty for the moral and religious education of the working classes.—The Rev. Joseph Dockey, a Presbyterian minister, at Rathfriland, shot in his pulpit, and the miscreant escaped.

MARCH.

1.—The tariff convention with Portugal concluded.—Intelligence received of the malignity of the yellow fever at Guayaquil, in October last. Also of the removal of the ashes of Bolivar from Santa Martha to Caracas.—Extraordinary excitement at Boston, Lincolnshire, on the introduction of mesmerism.—Dr. Candlish, the non-intrusionist, lectured at the Scotch Church, London-wall, amidst great confusion.—The East India Company passed a vote of thanks to the Governor-General of India and the army for their late services; and appointed Sir Hugh Gough Commander-in-Chief of the Company's forces.—Annotated discussion in the House of Commons on Mr. Roebuck's motion for inquiry into the Affghan war, which was emphatically disapproved of.—Grand national steeple-chase at Liverpool, brilliantly attended. William Cannell, a waiter, sentenced at the Central Criminal Court to 15 years' transportation, for abusing Mrs. Maguire.—Commencement of the trial of O'Connor and other Chartists at Lancaster.—The clear profits of the London and Westminster Bank for the previous year were £94,843 18s. 11d.

6.—Lord Brougham in the House of Lords, brought forward his motion for the reform of the corporations of the City of London, but withdrew the same.—Sir C. Metcalfe the new Governor-General of the Canadas, embarked for that country.—The Modeste landed at Portsmouth 1,000,000 dollars from China, which were conveyed thence by railway to London.—The Marquis of Breadalbane elected Lord Rector of Marischal College, Aberdeen.

3.—The Soult and Guizot ministry of France obtained but a majority of 45 in a chamber of 440, upon a vote of want of confidence. Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Court, visited Claremont.—A great number of petitions presented to the House of Commons against the corn-laws.—Trial at the Central Criminal Court of Daniel M'Naughten for assassinating Mr. E. Drummond; and on the following day the prisoner found "not guilty, on the ground of insanity."

4.—Lord Montesqie's motion in the House of Lords for a committee on the corn-laws negatived by a majority of 122.

6.—Silk robberies to the extent of £10,000 detected at Manchester.—J. J. Ashley, a member of several London clubs, found guilty at the Central Criminal Court of stealing club plate, and sentenced to seven years' transportation.—News from Portugal of the vast destruction of property by the raising of the river at Lisbon and Oporto, 16 feet above the usual mark.

7. News received from the United States of the passing of the bill for the occupation of the Oregon territory. The court of inquiry on the Somers' mutiny approved of the conduct of Commander M'Kenzie.—Also, of the defeat of the Texians by the Mexicans.—Lord Teynham moved in the House of Lords for the abrogation of the poor-laws clause, separating man and wife in workhouses: opposed by the Ministry, and lost. Message from her Majesty approving of the reply to the address of the House of Commons on education.—Fawcett's vast foundry at Liverpool destroyed by fire.

8.—News of terrific earthquakes in the West Indies:—Port-au-Prince, Jan. 11; St. Kitt's, 20th; Vera Cruz, 25th; Dominica, 28th; Trinidad and Antigua, 31st: Barbadoes, Feb. 1; St. Lucia and St. Vincent's, 2nd; Demerara, 4th; Jamaica, 5th; Cape de Cuba, 8th; Cape Haytien and Havannah, 5th; St Thomas's, 8th; Nassau, 9th; and Bermuda, 16th. Destructive fire at Port-au-Prince, on Jan. 9th.—Emigration to Trinidad successful.—Mr. Fox Maule's motion in the House of Commons for a committee on the General Assembly of Scotland petition: lost by a majority of 135.

9.—Debate in the House of Lords on the gates of Somnauth and the conduct of the Governor-General of India, when its condemnation was negatived by a majority of 58.

10.—Slight shock of an earthquake at Manchester.—News of a riot at Canton, the partial destruction of the British factories by fire, and massacre of British seamen.

11 —Opening of the Italian Opera with Donizetti's opera of "Adelia."

14.—News of the repeal of the American Bankrupt Law.—M'Naughten, the assassin, removed to Bethlem Hospital.

15. First weekly meeting of the Anti-Corn-law League in Drury-lane Theatre.

16.—A supposed comet, of considerable magnitude, seen at Paris; and, on the 19th, in Kent.

17.—A man executed for murder at Lincoln, in the presence of thousands of spectators.

18.—Death of the Duke of Manchester, at Rome.

20.—News of the advance of the Buenos Ayreans on Monte Video.

21.—Death of Robert Southey, the poet-laureate of England, at Greta Hall.—The English bark, Jessie, from Bristo to Palermo, lost off Cape St. Vincent, with the master and five of the crew.

23.—Intelligence received of the death of General O'Higgins, one of the original founders of Chilian independence.—The Thames Tunnel opened, with a professional ceremony.

23.—Death of the Earl of Abergavenny, in his 59th year.

29.—His Royal Highness Prince Albert held his first levee on behalf of her Majesty.

30.—Wreck of the splendid packet-ship Great Britain, on her outward passage to New York.

APRIL.

1.—Intelligence received from the United States of the Presidential declaration against foreign powers visiting vessels sailing under the American flag.—The Campechano had been repulsed by the Mexicans with great slaughter.—Her Majesty, in a despatch to Heidleberg Castle, made declared a British territory, and Colonel Napier appointed governor: a million sterling found at Heidleberg.—The copyright in the Customs act, prohibiting the importation of foreign editions of English works, came into operation.

3.—Eighty slaves shot at Havannah, for being concerned in a late insurrection.

5.—The English and French Governments declined to make any advance to Greece beyond the dividend of the loan due in March.—Great rejoicings on the return of Chevalier Petrizopulo, and his re-election to the presidency of the Ionian States.—The President's message received from the United States; it was chiefly remarkable for its declaration on the right of search.—The Spanish Cortes opened: the Regent issued an important decree guaranteeing the payment of the interest on Spanish bonds.—Public curiosity excited by the announcement that an aerial steam-carriage had been invented by a Mr. Henson.

5.—News received of the total defeat of the Ameers of Scinde, near Hyderabad, by the British troops under Gen. Napier.—Lord Ellenborough had arrived at Delhi in great state, whither the gates of Somnauth were conveyed.—The Copyright Act commenced with the corresponding quarter of the previous year, showed an increase of £1,748,945.—Mr. Wordsworth appointed Poet Laureate on the promotion of the Earl of Aberdeen.

6.—Great distress continued in the Douro wine district of Portugal.

7.—Loss of the Solway West India mail-steamer, on a reef, off Corunna, sinking with forty-one persons, the mails, &c., on board.—Intelligence received of the satisfactory settlement of the Affghan question beyond the north-eastern boundary of the Cape of Good Hope settlement.

8.—The public executioner of Orenas, in Spain, assassinated, and his head nailed to the door of his house.

9.—News of the eruption of a volcano near Koenigsbatte, in the coal district of Silesia.—Extensive forgeries on the Turkish government detected at Constantinople.

10.—A mail-boat upset off Kirkwall, Orkney, and five lives lost.—Dreadful colliery explosion at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in which 27 men and boys were killed.—Count Ribbing Leven, one of the assassins of Gustavus III., died at Paris.

11.—A new Transit Company established at Cairo, for passengers to and from India, through Egypt.

12.—Lord Huntingtower obtained his certificate from the Court of Bankruptcy.—The Servian question settled at Constantinople, by the dictum of the Russian Cabinet, seconded by Austria, stipulating for a new sovereign.—The Count de Montemolin's claims to the Spanish throne, on a plan of systematic colonization; the merchants of London having previously addressed Sir Robert Peel upon the same subject.

13.—Treaty signed between England and France, allowing French fishing-vessels within three miles of the British coast.—Terrific explosion of Waltham Abbey powder-mills: seven persons killed.

15.—Twenty-eight Newfoundland vessels wrecked by the drifting of the ice from the Gulf of St Lawrence.

16.—Consecration of a new English Protestant Church at Athens, by the Bishop of Gibraltar.

17.—The Easter hunt at Windsor discontinued.—Great bull fight at Madrid: seventeen horses killed.—Easter-Monday: 18,452 persons visited the British Museum.—Six waggon-loads, or a million and a quarter's worth of specie, silver, an instalment of the Chinese ransom, received at the Royal Mint.—An infamous conspiracy attempted against the Jews at Smyrna, and one of them beaten to death.—A fine American ship, the Hercs, lost on the Goodwin sands: crew saved.

18.—Intelligence received of a second shock of earthquake at Guadaloupe, on March 3. The comet was seen on the 2nd, at St. Thomas, and was so brilliant as to cause great alarm.—Another great explosion on the South Eastern Railway, with 19,000lbs. of powder, fired with the voltaic battery.

21.—Marriage of the Princess Clementine (daughter of Louis Philippe) with the Prince of Saxe Coburg.—Death of his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, at a quarter past twelve at noon, at Kensington Palace.

22.—Abd-el-Kader re-appeared in Algeria with a large body of cavalry.—The Jessie' College, one of the finest buildings in Lisbon, destroyed by fire.

23.—A powder magazine within the castle of Gaeta ignited by lightning, and blown up, with upwards of 200 houses.

24. The wood-built town of the Dobarwa desolated by fire, and 2000 persons thus unhoused.

25.—Her Majesty safely delivered of a daughter, at Buckingham Palace.—The spire of Eaton church, Rutland, destroyed by lightning; the roof torn off, and windows shattered.—The prizes of the Art-Union of London, to the amount of £8000, drawn in Drury-lane Theatre.—Eleven assassinations committed in Barcelona since the 20th.

26.—Launch of her Majesty's steam yacht Victoria and Albert, at Pembroke.—Opening of the Lancashire Independence College at Manchester.

27.—Canada suffered from heavy freshets, consequent on the breaking up of the ice, carrying with it houses, bridges, &c.

29. Destructive fire at Cherbourg; several houses destroyed.

MAY.

1.—Government, in the House of Commons, conceded alterations in the educational clauses of the Factory Bill as to the choice of schools, &c.—Mr. J. Grey Newton Alleyn elected warden of Dulwich College.—A molar tooth extracted from a person during mesmeric sleep, at Edinburgh.

3.—Opening of the Paris and Rouen Railway.—Lying in State of the remains of H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex, at Kensington Palace; witnessed by 20,000 persons.

4.—Funeral of H.R.H. the late Duke of Sussex, at the Kensal Green Cemetery, Harrow-road; the procession reaching nearly a mile, and the body being deposited in the catacombs beneath the Cemetery chapel.—The Servian Government submitted to the Porte

5.—50,000 labourers employed upon the St. Petersburg and Moscow Railway, nearly 500 miles in length.

7.—Great Repeal Meeting on the Curragh of Kildare, addressed by O'Connell.

8.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer made his financial statement in Parliament, but did not contemplate reduction of taxation, or alteration in the sugar duties.

9.—In the Houses of parliament Government declared their determination to maintain the Union with Ireland.

11.—Camilo Sivori, a pupil of Paganini, performed at her Majesty's Theatre with great success.—A new Cabinet formed in Spain, with ultra liberal professions.—Sir W. Heygate, bart., elected Chamberlain of the city of London in the room of Sir James Shaw, bart., resigned.

14.—The steam-ship Britannia arrived at Liverpool, having made the run from Halifax in 10¼ days.

15.—M. Villere's motion in the House of Commons, for the repeal of the Corn Laws, negatived by a majority of 381 to 125.—Messrs. Candy and Co., silk-importers, fined £2500 at the suit of the Customs, for non-payment of full duties.

16. Great portion of the stone pier at Greenwich gave way, and was shot in an attack upon a brick croft, near Manchester.

17. Grand musical festival in the old castle at Heidelberg.

18.—The long-threatened disruption of the church of Scotland took place; and the assembly of the Free Presbyterian church formed by the protesting seceders, joined by 300 ministers, Dr. Chalmers being appointed Moderator.

19.—Another destructive fire at Liverpool.

20 —Resignation of the Lopez Cabinet of Spain.

22.—Opening of the first free Presbyterian Church, by Dr. Candlish, at Edinburgh.

23.—Attempted insurrection at Malaga in opposition to Espartero's Government. Col. Prim marched with 3000 troops on Tarragona.

25.—A Board of Heresy appointed at the University of Oxford to examine a sermon preached by Professor Pusey, at Christchurch, on the 22nd, professing transubstantiation.

29.—Great Repeal meeting in Dublin: "rent" for the week, £7365. 35,000 stand of arms dispatched from the Tower and at Woolwich to Ireland.

30.—Outrage between Repealers and Orangemen near Dungannon.

31.—The second reading of the Irish Arms Bill, in the House of Commons, carried by a majority of 165.

JUNE.

1.—Postage Treaty between France and Great Britain, reducing the charge one half, came into operation. The first stone of the Royal Naval School, Deptford, laid by H.R.H. Prince Albert.—Lord Ffrench, Mr. O'Connell, and others, dismissed from the Irish magistracy, for having attended Repeal meetings. Several resignations took place in consequence.

2.—News of an insurrection at Manilla, and the execution of more than eighty of the rebels.—News of the decisive battle of Dubbo, and total defeat of the Scindians. —The King of Hanover arrived in London.—Christening of the infant princess, Alice Maud Mary, at Buckingham Palace.

6.—Revolution at Barcelona; Prim master of South Catalonia.

7.—Feargus O'Connor and other chartists acquitted through an informality in the indictment.

12.—News of the retirement of Mr. Webster from the United States government.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert went in state to Drury-lane Theatre.

13.—Alarming insurrection at Valencia.—Lord John Russell's motion in the House of Commons for a committee on the Corn-laws lost by 344 to 145.—Anti-slavery Convention in London.—The great rivers of France overflowed, with much devastation.

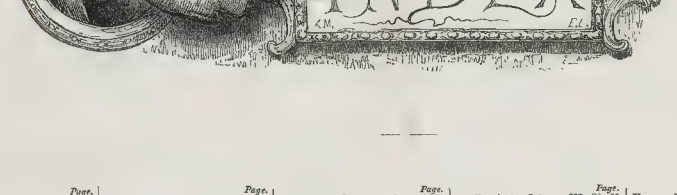
14. Drury-lane Theatre closed, and Mr. Macready retired from the management.

16.—Death of the Earl Cathcart, the oldest English general.

18.—Opening of a monument to the patriot Hampden on Chalgrove-field, Bucks.

19.—The Judges replied to the questions of the House of Lords on monomania.—Riots at Carmarthen by the Rebeccaites and chartists.

24.—Alderman Musgrove and Mr. Moon chosen sheriffs of London and Middlesex.—Opening of the South-eastern Railway; the journey from London to Boulogne and back, performed by railway and steam-boat, in six-teen hours.



Page.

ABBEVILLE, Rue des Changes . 176
Addison, Lord . . . 374
Abinger, Lord . . . 151
Absence of a Day; song, by J. A. Wade . . . 36
Acre, see Tatar
Acrostic Apostrophe to the "Illustrated London News" . . 364
Address to our Readers on the commencement of a New Year . 10
"Adelia," Scene from the Opera of. 194
Adelphi Theatre, The Lancashire Bell Ringers at . . . 336
Aerial Locomotion, Project of, refuted . . . 344
Aerial Machine Humbug . . 260
Aerial Steam Carriage . 233—254
Afghan Bear . . . 237
Akbbar Khan, Mahomed . . 359
Albertazzi in "L'Elisir d'Amore" 338
Aldermanbury House . . 28
Algoa Bay . . . 374
Alice and Lucrece . . . 408
Almack's . . . 273, 374
Ambassadors at Levee . . 343
Amcers, see Scinde
Amcers, Surrender of . . 256
Amusements of the People . 307
Ancient Greece, History of Manners and Customs of . . 26
Anderson, Mr., as Mare Antony . 310
Anderson, Mr., as Othello . 214
Anglesey, The Marquis of, Testimonial to 437
Anniversaries . . 185—431
Anniversary of the Establishment of the "Illustrated London News" 288
Anniversary, Our First . . 342
Antigua, &c., Earthquake at . 104
Apperley, Esq., C. J., "Nimrod" . 758
Arabian Gipsy Woman's Toilette . 167
Arch Fiend, The (Milton) . 116
Arabs at the Victoria Theatre . 429
Ariadne, Total Loss of, E. I. C. War Steamer . . . 75
Army and Navy in China . . 105
Arts, Royal Society of . . 436
Art-Union of London — Drawing Prizes 287
Arundel Yacht, Total Loss of the . 75
Ascot, Affray at . . . 438
Ascot Heath Races.—Ascot Grand Stand—the Race—Ascot Plate—Royal Hunt Cup Ascot Cup—Plan of Race Course—The Royal Stand — Jockeys — The Aërial Couriers . . . 418, 419
Ashburton Treaty . . . 240
Asmodeus, Madame Vestris as . 423
Assassination, The Crime of . 49
Assassination of Mr. Drummond . 49
Assassination, the late Trial for . 163
Assassination, Threatened, of the Chancellor of the Exchequer . 173
Astley's 343
Astley's New Amphitheatre . . 222
Astoria, Oregon Country . . 121
"As you like it," Wrestling Scene in 423
"Athelwold," The new Tragedy of . 506
Athens, New English Protestant Church at 311
Athlone Election Committee . . 368
Auricula, The (Floriculture) . . 378
Aurora of Gudo . . . 294
Awful Calculation . . . 231
Ayrshire Colliers, Trial, &c., of . 16

BADEN, Princes of . . . 109
Bagot, Death of the late Sir Charles 401
Bailey, Rev. Mr., Case of . . 67
Barnes Church . . . 378
Battersea Normal School . . 442
Bedford, Paul, in "L'Elisir d'Amore" 338
Behaviour of Gerard . . . 256
Bell-Rock Lighthouse . . . 191
Belooche Chief 264
Belooche War Arms . . . 264
Berkshire Lady, The . . . 372
Besson Jacques, Trial of, &c. . 5
Bethlem Hospital . . 207, 208
Birmingham Town Hall . . . 60
Blasphemous and Indecent Publications 3
Police Arrangements . . . 3
Blind Asylum, Indigent . . . 256
Blind Boy at one of his Pranks . 167
Blind to Read, London Society for Teaching the . . . 159
Boat Gras, Procession of the . 154
Bombay, Harbour of . . . 318
Bond Street 366
Borthwick, Mr. Peter, M.P. . . 8
Boston, U. S., Post office at . 442
Botanic Gardens, Regent's Park —Rock Garden . . . 347
Boulogne Harbour . . . 57
Boundary, Bending the, of the Tower 363
Boundary Question . . . 266
Boundary Question, Ancient Mode of Settling it. Hints to Mr. Linn 278
Boyer, ex-President of Hayti . 341
Brambuil House . . . 373
Brazils, Emperor of (see Wedding Carriage, &c.) 58
Brighton Life Boat . . . 262

Page.

British and Foreign Schools, Borough Road 342
British Guiana 165
British Hollands Distillery Company 417
British Institution, Exhibition of the 167
British Life Contrivances for Saving Shipwrecked and Drowning Persons (see Shipwrecks, &c.) 367
British Yeoman 367
Brount, Captain, Governor of the Marquesas Islands . . . 326
Broughan Hall and Castle . . 326
Broughan, Lord . . . 133
Bruce, his act of the Crowning of . 211
Brunel, Sir Isambert . . 225, 247
Buckingham Palace, Birth of a Princess at 293
Buckingham Palace, New Royal Chapel 235
Burdett, Bart., Sir Francis . . 374
Burgfield New Church, Berks. 382—62
Busfield, B.F., Esq., Fatal Accident to 245
Butterfly Orchis (Floriculture) . 109

CABINET Ministry at the Levee . 242
Cabul Captivity . . . 360
Cabul, Prince at . . . 359
Calais Harbour 171
Calcutta, Palace of the Governor General at 112
Caledonian School, Dinner of the 379
Cambridge from the Castle Hill . 218
Cambridge Election . . . 218
Cambridge Election Petition, &c 337 52
Cambridge New Assize Courts . 223
Canada Mail, singular Preservation of 6
Canon Mills, Great Hall at the . 382
Canterbury, The Archbishop of . 374
Canterbury and Bishops, Archbishop of 242
Canton, British Factory at . . 182
Cape of Good Hope . . . 49
Carisbrooke Castle, Keep, &c. . 56
Carmarthen, Murder at . . 35
Carnival at Paris . . . 154
Carnival at Rome . . . 154
Caspar, Herr Standigl as . . 423
Catholic Bazaar, Manchester . 206
Central America, Extinct Cities of 257
Central Criminal Court 14 78—103—56—178—201—221—240—417
Chalmers, Dr. . . . 410
Chamberlain, The New . . 341
Chambers of Peers and Deputies, Opening of, &c. . . . 22
Chancery, Court of . . . 25
Charity Dinner . . . 383
Charles the First, Execution of . 56
Charlton Church . . . 109
Chartist Trials 157—169—178—213
Chase, The—The Turf and the Road 100
Chess, 9—78—101—131—157 201—218—232 260—298—310—319—341 —377—405—440
China, Army and Navy in . . 105
China, Massacre of British Seamen 188
China, Treaty with . . . 238
China, Afghanistan, and India 188—237 360
Chinese Dollars . . . 174
Chinese Mandarins . . . 174
Chinese, Temples of the . . 20
Chinese Treaty, Great Seal recently affixed to 21
Chinese Tribute 174
Chiswick Gardens, Conservatory and Iron Tent at . . . 334
Chiswick Horticultural Fête . 366
Chiswick Horticultural Fête, Dialogue at the 368
Choosing a Profession . . . 292
Christ's Hospital . . . 179
Christening of the Infant Princess 383—409
Chrysanthemum 44
Church of Scotland 357—382—410
Church of Scotland, First Free Presbyterian 410
Church of Scotland, Meeting of First Free Assembly . . 382
Clarkia 8
Clergyman Shot by his Stepson . 114
Clubs, Robbery at the . . . 173
Colpitts and Colleries . . . 205
Colocotroni The late General . 246
Cologne Cathedral, Completion of . 371—372
Colonization 224
Colonization and Emigration . 273
Colosseum Print 38
Colosseum Print -- After Words about our last Number . . 17
Colville, Lady, Melancholy Death of 332
Comet, The . . . 211—40
Comet, The, Lines to . . . 278
Commercia. Treaties . . . 89
Confirmation at St. Andrew's, Holborn 392
Conqueror, Loss of The . . 58
See also Wrecks, &c.

Page.

Convict Ships, Sea-unworthiness of 184
Copan, Idols of . . . 236
Copan, Head of supposed Royal Personage of . . . 238
Cork Total Abstinence Society's Annual Procession . . 265
Correspondents, Notices to 6—22 38—54—70—93—110 126—152—168—184 198—224 240—256 272—288 304—320—336—352—384—400—416—432
Corunna, Anniversary of Death of Sir John Moore . . . 28
Coursing 133
Coventry Churches and Pageants 202
Cowper's Summer House at Olney 218
Crawford Peerage . . . 433
Crimond Code 384
Crowquill's, Alfred, Sketches 41—62—101—170
Curling Match 59
Curtius (Hayden's) . . . 250
Custom House Frauds . . 221
Cutting a Dash . . . 156

DALE Abbey, Derbyshire . . 108
Dandy Lion, in Flower and Seedy 170
Darnley Jewel, The . . . 220
Daw, otherwise Dawes, v. De Feuchieres, Romance of Real Life . 43
Death of a Gentleman . . 262
De Grey, Lord . . . 146
Derby, The 321
Derby, the Winner of The . . 388
Design, School of . 375—75—76
Dickens, Charles . . . 259
Dieulacres Abbey . . . 101
Diving at Blackwall . . . 238
Dog Bill, The 244
Donegal Coast, Loss of Life on the 424
Don Ottavio, Signor Mario as . 8
Dover Coach, Accident to the . 8
Dover Railway, Great Blast at the (Roundabout Cliff) . . 52
Dover Railway, Explosions on . 268
Drama, &c. See Theatres, &c.
Dramatic and Musical Chit Chat, See Theatres, &c.
Dramatic Melody, or Recitative . 10
Drawing Room, The . . . 368
Drummond, Mr. E., Assassination of, &c. . 32—49—54—55
Drummond, Funeral of the late Mr. 80
Drury Lane Theatre, Her Majesty's Visit to 421
Drury Lane Theatre, The Queen's Box, Lighting the Queen to her Box 422
Dubbs, Battle of, Plan, &c., of . 367
Dublin Castle Courtyard, and Sackville-street . . . 186
Duchess of Leinster, Launch of the, at Kingstown . . . 230
Duchy of Cornwall, Prince Albert presiding at Court of the . 331
Duchy of Cornwall, Office of the, Somerset House . . . 332
Duelling and Anti-Duelling Association 320
Dulwich, College . . . 315
Dumbarton Castle . . . 170
Dundrum, Loss of Life at . . 35
Dungeness Lighthouse . . . 92
Dunstable Priory Church . . 287
Dwarkanath Tagore . . . 359

EARTHQUAKES at Guadaloupe 268
East India House . . . 113
East India Museum . . . 113
Education of the Working Classes 140
Eglinton Testimonial, The . . 404
Egyptian Hall, Mansion House, Banquet at 579
Electric Telegraph . . . 344
Elephant at the English Opera House 132
Elizabeth, Queen . . . 327
Ellenborough, Lord . . . 92
Ellenborough, Lord, Proclamation (Gates of Somnauth) . 62
Elsler, Fanny 124
Elphinstone, Howard, Esq., M.P. 208
Eltham Palace, Bridge at . . 125
Emigration, Articles of . . 38
England and France, or the Sisters (Novel of), 187—215—31—47—63—272 93—96—227—23—43—77—228—408—409
English Opera House . . . 132
Ennin, John, Request on Body of, &c. 261
Envelopes, Letter . . . 320
Epidemic at Newcastle . . 273
Epsom Races 386
Epsom Race-course . . . 386
Epsom Races 386
Leaving Town, The Swell Drags, Horse Van, Ringing to Saddle . 386—63
The Start, Jockeys Mounted, after the Race, Returning Home, Kennington Gate . 387—88—89
Winner of the Derby . . 388
Eruption of Mount Etna . . 22
Estimates, Public . . . 214
Etheron Viaduct on the Sheffield and Manchester Railway . 62
Every Body a Column 75—115—205—33—333
Exchequer, Chancellor of the, Threatened Assassination of the . 173
Execution of Charles I, &c. . 56
Exeter Bishop of . . . 191
Exeter Hall 333
Exton Church, partially Destroyed by Lightning . . . 310

FACTS and Scraps . . 79—322
Fair on the Thames . . . 132
Farmyard, The 357
Fashions 32—44 64—80—101—16 51 71 92—212—31—44—61—73 93 —314—24—342 56—90—404—24 —56.
Father's Grave, The, by Horsley 354
Faucit, Miss Helen, as Elinda . 260
Finding of Moses . . . 196
Fine Arts . . . 8—98—193
Fine Arts, Royal Commission of 406-36
Fire, Numerous Deaths by . . 329
Firework Manufactory, Awful Explosion at 300
Floriculture 8—32—44—100—33—78—378
Fly Fishing . . . 191—92
Foreign Art, Painting . . 196
Foreign Intelligence and Politics 2—6—26 34—50—54—54 66—90—98 —106 10 1—27—48 164 98—80 204—20—36 52—68—84—368—18—32—48—80 90—412—28.
Forest Days (Song), by Loder 1 . 365
Formosa, Island of . . 181 182
Forrasari 223
Forrasari as Don Giovanni . 237
Fox Hunting 109
Freemasons, Anniversary Dinner of, School for Female Children . 391
Freemasons' School . . . 391
Free Trade Banquet at Manchester . . . 95—96
French Chambers, Opening of the 24
French Coast, Loss of Life on the 39
French, How to Use a . . . 288
Friends, Meeting of the Society of 407
Fulham Church 9

GABRIELLE of De la Roche (engraving) 8
Gadshill 171
Gaming House, Attack on, and Dreadful Accident . . 127
Gazette, The London, 16—32—64 80—102—23 34 160 78—216—29 48—54 77—223—312 29—45—61 —93—405—24—440.
General Post Office, St. Martin's le Grand 219
General Post Office, Interior of the, Posting the "Illustrated London News" 146
Geneva 102
Giotto and Francesca, and other Poems 45
Giraffes, &c., at the Surrey Zoological Gardens . . . 322
Glaucus 132
Glorians, Launch of the . . 294
Golden Island 174
Gottingen, Church of the University of 220
Gough, Sir Hugh . . . 117
Gouldsion's Manufactory, Fire at . 68
Grange, Lady 215
Great Britain, Shipwreck of The 403
Great Northern Steamer . 29—39
Great Seal, The, of England, recently affixed to the Chinese Treaty 21
Greenwich Fair . . . 269
Greenwich Park Telescope. One Tree Hill—Greenwich Pensioner Fortune telling . . . 370
Greenwich Hospital, Grand Fête, &c., at . . . 403—406
Greenwich Literary Institution . 125
Greenwich Pier, Extensive Damage to 397
Gregory v. The Duke of Brunswick 437
Gregory v. The Queen (Queen's Bench) 421
Gresham College . . . 427
Grete Hall, Sudbey's House . 225
Grevile 215
Grinding Act, Important Flaw in the 352
Grisi, Madame 438
Grosvenor House, New Façade . 426
Guadaloupe 286
Guadaloupe, Earthquakes at . 286
Guard Room, St. James's . . 242
Guiana, British . . . 165—166
Guido's Aurora 294
Guizot, M. 104
Gymnasia, &c., Gray's Inn-lane . 323

HADEN, The Rev., Attempt to Assassinate 245

Page.

Hagar and Ishmael . . . 339
Hampden Memorial . 431—433
Hampton Court Gardens—Holiday Group 402
Hampton Court Palace . . 402
Hampton Races 393
Hanging Committee, not on the . 416
Hanover, The King of . . . 410
Hanover's Marriage, Prince of . 155
Hanover-square Concert Rooms . 439
Hanwell, Asylum and Fancy Fair at 335
Hanwell, Extraordinary Suicide at 353
Hanwell Church 335
Hardinge, Sir Henry . . . 311
Hare Hunting 61
Hatfield House, the seat of the Marquis of Salisbury . 353—394
Havre 310
Hayden's Curtius . . . 183
Haymarket Theatre, Scene from "The Little Devil" . . . 493
Haydon's Great Picture . 373—374
Heaths Hall 39
Heygate, Bart., Sir William, the new Chamberlain . . . 341
H ghgate New Church . . 120
Highland Cesruick defending a Pass 415
Highland Dress . . . 169
Highland Mary, Monument to . 190
Hill, Mr. Rowland . . . 322
Holiday Group, Hampton Court Gardens 402
Holloway's Crayon Drawings from the Cartoons 437
Honey, Mrs., Sudden Death of . 243
Hong Kong, First Ship to . . 327
Horses painted by E. Landseer . 355
Horse Guards' Band in their Levee Dresses 243
Horticultural Fête, Chiswick . 366
Horticultural Man of Business . 175
Horticultural Society, Exhibition of the 334
House of Commons, Interior of . 72
Hull, Great Thornton street Chapel 378
Hume, Mr. Joseph, M.P. . . 108
Huntingtower's, Lord, Insolvency 3
Hurricane, The late . . . 42
Hyde-park Corner . . . 396
Hyderabad 253
Hyderabad, Surrender of Ameers 255
Hyderabad, British Residency at 254

ILLUMINATED Magazine . . 327
Illuminations from the Testimonee, &c., in the Library of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex 303
"Illustrated London News," Across the Apostrophe to . . 364
"Illustrated London News," Anniversary of 288
"Illustrated London News," Our First Anniversary . . . 347
"Illustrated London News," The Circulation of, &c. . . . 416
"Illustrated London News," Publishing Office of the . . 218
Improvements proposed in the City of London 426
Incendiary Fires 59
Income Tax 22 51
Independent College, Lancashire . 295
India, Military Decorations of the Native Troops of . . . 65
India, Procession of the Governor General of . . . 112—113
India, Palace of the Governor General 112
India, Affghanistan and China, 7—18—93 96—109—116 96
Indigent Blind Asylum . . . 350
Indigent Blind Visiting Society . 350
Indus Boat under Sail . . . 319
Indus, Navigation of the . . 19
Insanity, Legislation upon . . 179
Insurance and Disinterment . . 116
Ireland, State of, 330—31—62—53—85 —427—33
Ireland, Repeal Meetings 321—397
Irwin, G. O Malley, v. Mayor General O Mal ey . . . 114
Isleworth Charity Schools . . 351
Italian Opera, see Theatres

JACK in the Green . . . 367
Jackson, General, Pen and Ink Sketch of 233
Jessie Regan, East Indiaman, Wreck of 42
Jester, The . . . . .
Johnson's Cliff Crane . . . 124
Joinville, Marriage of the Prince de 414
Jolliffe, Hylton, Esq., Portrait of 62
Judges at the Levee . . . 242
"Julius Cæsar," Scene from the Play of 310
Justice giving Short Weight . 262

KEAN, Tablet to the Memory of . 25
Kenilworth, The Mock Bridal Procession 222
Kensall Green Cemetery . 301 306
Kensington Palace . . . 290

Page.

Kensington Palace, Library of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex 303
Kidd, The Rev. Samuel, Melancholy Death of . . . 424
King's College, Opening of the Museum of George III. at . 438
Kite, Captain, and Master Pigeon 233

LABLACHE 275
"Lady of the Lake," Tableaux from, and Mrs. Alfred Shaw as Malcolm Graeme . . . 317
Lancashire Independent College . 295
Lancashire Opiate . . . 35
Lancaster Castle 176
Lash, Horrors of the, at Woolwich 335
Laurie, Sir Peter . . . 60
Law Courts, New . . . 99
Law Courts, New, in Lincoln's Inn Fields 114
Leeds, Murder and Mutilation at 63—91
Lefevre, The Right Hon. Charles Shaw, Speaker of the House of Commons . . . 73—83
Legislature, Discussions in the . 121
Levoux, Mdlle. Carolle . . 61
Levee, Prince Albert's . 242—43—316
Lex Talionis, painted by A. Cooper 355
Libel, Law of 395
Life Buoy 124
Life Laidler, Prince Albert's . 134
Lincoln's Inn Fields, New Hall and Library at . . . 190
Lily of Liverpool, Loss of the; and Affray with the Cornish Wreckers 61
Literature, 45 56—58 74—99—115—19 139—50 72—201—12 43—69—240—60—72—73
Liverpool Collegiate Institution . 17
Liverpool, Fires at . . . 337
Liverpool Great Steeple Chase . 147
Lobia, Two Edged (Floriculture) . 133
London and Dover Railway, Destruction of Roundedown Cliff . 76
London and Westminster Bank . 169
London Wall, The Old . . . 422
Lord Mayor, The Right Hon. the . 379
Love, Mr., The Polyphonist 214—315
Love makes labour pleasure . 280
Luxembourg, or Chamber of Peers 24
Lyndhurst, Lord . . . 223—347

MACIAN'S Highland Feud. 197—199
Mc Kenzie, Alexander, Trial of . 16
M'Naughten, Daniel (Portrait) . 89
M'Naughten, Daniel . 171—189
M'Naughten, Daniel, Trial of 151—360
Macready, Mr., as Brutus . . 310
Macready, Mr., as Coloncl Green, in "The Secretary" . . . 295
Macready Testimonial . . 435
Madonna of Dela Roche. . . 102
Madras, Cathedral, Bishop of 192—196
Magazines, a Few Words about the 389
Magazines and other Periodical Publications, Notices of . 10—11
Magna Charta, Signing of . . 431
Mahmoud, Tomb of the Sultan 112, 113
Maida, Capture, F.R.S. . . 251—62
Manby's, Captain, Mortar Life Line 134
Manchester, Outrage at Affray between the Military and Police 357
Manchester, Sheriff's Procession . 151
Manners Sutton, the Speaker in 1833 374
Mano, Signor 423
Mario, Signor, as Don Ottavio . 134
Marquesas Islands . . . 6—48
Marquesas Islands, Resolution Bay, &c. 33
Marquesas Islands, The Governor of the, Captain Brount . 326
Marseilles Harbour . . . 170
Mathew, Father 63
Mathews, Mr. Charles, as Viennois D'Estella 433
Maunday Money . . . 251—252
May Day 364
May Day in the Metropolis . . 364
May Garland, A . . . 363 to 370
May, Invocation to . . . 363
May, the Merest Mouth of the Metropolis 367
May Meetings 323—324—341 343—383
May Poles . . . . 367—368
May Song for the Queen of Hearts, Victoria 364
Metropolis, Churches of the 69—120 146—196—395—351
Middlesex Quarter Sessions . 14
Milton, Monument to, Allhallows Church 417
Milton's Poetical Works . . 116
Mines and Collieries, Employment in 336
Mines and Collieries, Employment of Children in . . . 199
Mines and Collieries, Explosions in 308
Minster, A, Shot in his Pulpit . 149
Minting, Lincolnshire, Stone at . 98
Minuet de la Cour . . . 287
Miserable Weather, The . . 420

Page.
Missionary Museum . 342
Mitford's, Miss, Cottage . 136
Mixed Marriages (Ireland) . 437
Model Prisons, New (see also Pentonville Prison)
Molé, Count . 286
Monk Steamer, Wreck of the . 37
Monomania Question, The . 457
Montcagle, Lord, Extraordinary Attempt to Bribe . 260
Montefiore, F.R.S., Sir Moses, Testimonial to . 150
Monte Video, Execution of Two Spaniards at . 32
Montreuil, Entrance to . 170
Mont St. Bernard, Convent, &c. 407
Moore, Thomas . 372
Moore's Cottage . 282
Moore, Sir John, Death of, &c. . 28
Moore's Sporting Almanack . 16
Morocco Arabs . 439
Morlaix Church . 160
Moses, Finding of . 199–201
"Mothers and Daughters," (a Comedy) . 51
Mount Etna . 702
"Much Ado About Nothing," Scene from, Macready as Benedick . 102
Murder twenty six years ago . 132
Murder and Parricide . 18
Murder at Cambridge . 114
Murder and Colliery Riots . 420
Murray, Sir George, G.C.B., G.C.H. 57
Music, New . 135–213–341
Muskett v. Lawson, Court of Queen's Bench . 30
Mustapha, Ben Ismael, General . 440

NAMING of the Beasts (Milton) . 116
Narkin and its Porcelain Tower . 20
Napier, Sir Charles . 175
Napier, General . 265
Natal, Port, and the Rebel Boers . 109
National and Colonial Infant School Society . 393
National Education Resolutions . 252
National Society's Training College for Schoolmasters, &c. . 168
National Sports . 401–429
Native Troops of India, Military Decorations of the . 65
Naval and Military Intelligence–2 27–42–65–78–118–121 150–369 294–353–393–396–399–345–361 393–424–437
Naval Royal School . 391
Nelcrunah and the Sabbath Breakers of Judah . 201–302
Nelson, Lord, Statue of . 150–196
Nelson Monument . 267
Newcastle Horticultural Society . 435
Newell Suicide, Case of . 175
Newmarket Craven Meeting . 277
Newmarket First Spring Meeting —Grand Stand . 314
New Poor Law . 126–168
New Poor Law (Ireland) . 208
Newport Gate, Lincoln . 9
Newport Town Hall . 89
Newspaper Circulation . 294
Newspaper History . 348
New Zealand . 246
New Zealand, Provision House . 247
New Zealand, Epeni, a Chief of . 247
New Zealand, Port Wellington . 206
New Times, Loss of the Ship . 20
Nigella, the Spanish (Floriculture). 32
"Nimrod," the late Charles James Apperley, Esq. . 328
Nightingale, Address of the, to other Song Birds of the Month . 364
Nooks and Corners of Old England—60 —104—108—120—201 215—442
"Norma," Scene from the Opera of 267
Normal School at Battersea . 442
Norman Woman's Head . 107
Normandy, The Duke of . 261
North American Boundary Question . 208
Northleach Gaol, Case of Jones . 356
Nottingham Election Committee . 385

Page.
Nottingham Election, and View of the Castle . 426
Novello, Clara, as Sappho . 239

OBITUARY of High Life during 1842 . 3
O'Connell and Charles Dickens . 221
O'Connor, Feargus, The Queen v. (Queen's Bench) . 405
Oldest Man in London, Death of the . 146
Onslaught of the Tiger on the Unwary Bull (Milton) . 116
Ophicleide, The Giant . 442
Opium Fugue . 335
Oporto, Insurrection at . 105
Oregon Country, Astoria . 121
Orleans and her Son, The Duchess of . 375
Orme's Letters to his Son . 262
Pusey, Dr. . 410

QUEEN, Her Majesty the, Portrait of, at the Royal Academy 339
Queen, State Barge of her Majesty the . 434
Queen, The, and Sir Robert Peel, Threatening to Shoot . 169
Queen's Bench, Court of . 25

RABEE, Portrait of . 323
Racing . 229–260
Raeburn, Thomas . 378
Railway Speed . 350
Rattler, Launch of her Majesty's Steam Frigate . 274
Reading, Environs of . 372
Reading, Temperance Festival at 351
Reading, Tea Tent . 361
Rebecca and her Daughters 35—51—93 —434
Reformed Parliament, First Assembling of the First, in 1833 . 374
Regent's-park, Open Preaching in the . 288
Reliance and Conqueror, Indiamen, Wrecks of, &c. . 57
Relics of Washington and Franklin . 413—14
Renfrewshire, Embankment of Glandersion Dam . 13
Repeal of the Union . 411
Repeal Movements, Progress of the . 433
Reporters' Gallery . 71—72
Restoration of King Charles II. 369
Restoration Dinner at Grocers' Hall . 390
Revenue . 7 248
Rhine Wine, Lay of the . 108
Richard and Saladin, Combat between, at Ashby's . 343
Ricketts, Lady, Case of . 421
Robinson Church . 26
Ripon, The Earl of . 439
Road and Street Cleansing Machine Patent . 226
Robin Hood, The Grave of . 60
Rochester, Riot at . 3
Rollo's, Lord, Will . 16
Rome, Carnival at . 159
Rouen and Paris Railroad, Opening of the . 370
Round Down Cliff, &c. . 76—77
Roundtown Cliff, see Dover Railway.
Royal Academy 338—38—54—98—415 —16.
Royal Academy, Exhibition of the —Great Room, Staircase, and Sculpture Gallery . 338
Royal Christening . 401
Royal Naval School . 391
Russell, Lord John . 73

SABBATH Breaking, Liverpool, Prosecution for . 35
Sacred Harmonic Society — Miss Clara Novello . 260
Sailors' Floating Church . 300 50

Page.
St. Andrew's, Holborn, Confirmation at . 328
St. Bernard, Mont, Convent, &c. . 407
St. Bernard, and the Avalanches, Convent of . 407
St. Catherine Cree Church . 60
St. George's Church, Hanover-square, Interior of . 311
St. James's Palace, Levee at, &c. . 242 —243
St. John's Church, Waterloo-road . 206
St. Mary's Church, Southwark . 315
St. Patrick, Benevolent Society of . 186
St. Patrick's Day . 165
St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, Consecration of, and Organ in . 392
St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, Font at . 443
St. Paul's School—The Apposition 388
St. Sepulchre's Church . 146
Sale, Lady . 339
Salutation of Eve by the Angel (Milton) . 116
Sandwich Islands . 67—68
"Sappho," Scene from Opera of, &c. 239
Scinde, Amears of . 93—182—89
Scinde, British Conquests in . 402
Scinde, Conquest of . 315
Scinde, Map of . 317
Scinde and the River Indus . 317
Scindian Beloochee . 254
Scindian Letter Carrier . 318
Scotland, Kirk of 43—357—89—93— 410
Scott, Sir Walter, Monument to . 197
Screws . 264
Sculpture . 196
Sea Parachute, or Life Umbrella . 163
Season, The Present . 245
"Secretary, The," Scene from . 294
Sepoys, The . 113—13
Session, Prospects of the . 85
Setting Day, The . 404
Shap Abbey, Westmorland . 44
Shaw, Mrs. Alfred, as Malcolm Graeme . 117
Sheriff's Procession, Manchester . 151
Shipwrecks, &c. . 67
Shipwrecks and Loss of Life . 345
Shipwrecks of Convict Ships, &c. 184
Shipwrecked and Drowning Persons, British Life Contrivances for Saving . 134
Shipwrecked Seamen, Suggestions for some Mode of Relief for . 54
Sidebotham . 373
Sintern, The . 247
Sivori, Camillo . 391—91
Shakspere's Autograph . 249
Slave Trade, Abolition of the, and the Right of Search . 33
Sloperton Cottage, Moore's . 213
Smith, Beaumont . 34
Smith, Sir Lionel, Monument to the late . 269
So many Drinker and his Genius . 283
Solomon's Picture of the "Widow Fair" . 313
Solomon Eagle preaching Repentance during the Plague, 1665 . 200
Solway Steamer, Loss of the . 269
Somers Mutiny of and Position at the Time of the Mutiny . 292
Somnauth Gates, Proclamation respecting . 95
Somnauth, Temple of . 183
Sons of the Clergy, Festival of the, Choir of St. Paul's . 323
Soutter, Robert . 210—11 24
Spain, Condition of . 417
Speaker, The . 73
Speaker, The, Portrait of . 83
Speaker, The, Manners Sutton . 374
Spirits Song of Invitation . 240
Spitfire, H.M Steamer . 7
Sports of England 41—61—69—133 —61
Spread, a Lunatic, Case of . 35
Spring in the Olden Time—The Maypole . 367
Spring Life in Town and Country . 386
Stag Hunting . 41

Page.
Staircase, St. James's . 243
Staple Inn, New Chambers . 368
State Barge of her Majesty . 434
Staudigl, Herr, as Caspar . 433
Staudigl, Herr, as Orsoveo 423
Steeple Chase at Liverpool . 117
Strasburg, Great Clock at . 53
Stratford Church, Ancient Font in 202
Streets of the Metropolis, State of the . 385
Strickland, Mr., in "The Little Devil" . 423
Stuart, James . 293
Suez . 439
Suffolk Street Exhibition 229—230— 244
Sugden, Sir Edward, LL.D., &c. . 48
Sukkur, or "Victoria," on the Indus . 254
Surrey Seasons, &c. . 14
Surrey Zoological Gardens, Temples of Elora at . 395—396
Surrey Zoological Gardens, New Picture Model at . 396
Sussex, His late Royal Highness the Duke of . 282
Portraits of . 290—291
Autograph of . 291
Death of . 282—283
Coffin of . 303
Library of . 303
Lying in State . 296—300
Funeral of . 292—300—301
Funeral Procession, and Burial of, in Kensall Green Cemetery . 305—307
His Piper, Mackay . 302
His Jager . 302
His Chief Page, Mr. Denis . 302
His Burmese Page . 302
Spree Silver . 174

TAHITI . 206
Tahiti, Occupation of, by the French . 232
Takhi, Rewun . 318
Tamborine Boy . 167
Tarentule, La . 125
Tatar relating the News of the Fall of Acre . 198
Tattersall's, Interior of, &c. . 214
Temperance Festival at Reading . 351
Tea Tent . 351
Temperance Festival, Store-street Hall . 350
Temperance Soirée at Cork 128—130
Temples of Elora, Surrey Zoological Gardens . 395—396
Temptation of Eve by the Serpent (Milton) . 116
Thames Royal Yacht Club, Sailing Match off Greenwich . 359
Thames Tunnel, Entrance to the . 214
Thames Tunnel, Opening of the . 209 —26—27
Theatres, Theatrical Notices, &c. 3— 27 42 51 75—99—115 141—172 —191—194 229 – 257—287 — 294 296—310—322—332 340—350— 435—421 423
Theatrical Row in Italy . 131
Thompson's House at Hampstead. 207
Three-mile Cross . 373
Thugs, Chief of the . 113
Thugs, The . 114
Tiger Story . 2–5
"Times" Printing Office . 171
Tippoo's Tiger . 113
Tocqueville, M. De . 144
Total Abstinence Society, Cork . 293
Tower of London . 12
Tower, Beating the Boundary of the . 383
Town, A Man on the . 41
Tramway Horses . 319
Trinity Monday, Procession of the "Trinity Board" . 411
Tuckett, Harvey Garnett Phipps (Co. Bankruptcy) . 43
Turf, The . 173—200—335—361
Turkish Sultan's Umbrella . 190

Page.
Tweed Bank . 18
Tyler, Mr., The American President 246

UXMAL, see Yucatan

VAGROM Ram . 239
Valentines, by Crowquill . 101
Van Amburgh and his Lions at the English Opera House . 84
Van Eyck's Picture in the National Gallery . 257—328
Vestris, Madame, as Asmodeus . 423
Vicenta D Estella, Mr. Charles Mathews as . 423
Victoria, Her Majesty the Queen . 337
Victoria and Albert, Launch, &c., of her Majesty's Steam Yacht . 314
Victoria Park . 426
Village Fair . 367
Volcano in Sicsia . 258

WADE, J. A., Song of "Absence of a Day," by . 36
Water Eaton Manor House . 326
Wales, State of . 432
Waterloo Cup, Scene from . 393
Waterloo Anniversary . 433
Walker Bey . 199
Waltham Abbey, Explosion at . 275
Waltham Abbey—Funeral of the Unfortunate Workmen . 275
Washington and Franklin, Relics of . 413—414
Wassail Bowl, The, by Albert Smith . 45
Weather, The Miserable . 420
Webster, Mr. Daniel . 415—416
Wedding Carriage of the Emperor of Brazils . 178
Wellington, His Grace the Duke of 374 —434
Wellington's Statue . 440
Wellington, Fort, New Zealand . 206
Wells Cathedral, Restoration of . 89
Welsh Routes . 93
Wesleyan Centenary Hall . 305
Westminster Bridge, Repair of Coffer Dam . 4—14
Westminster New Church, Broadway . 69
Wharncliffe, Lord . 379
Whitecross Street Prison, Death of a Prisoner in, under melancholy circumstances . 305
Whitehall Chapel . 251
Wellcombe, Mr. . 345
"Widow Fair, Picture of the . 344
Wild Duck Shooting . 69
Wilhelm's New Church, Statues of 195—99
Windsor, Keeper's New Lodge and Dog-Kennel . 426
Winterhalter's Vendemmia, or Vintage of Naples . 198—199
"Winter's Tale, The, Scene from 438
Wood's (James) House at Gloucester . 45
Wood Pavement . 42 130
Woolwich, Artillery Barracks, New Military Academy, and Review of the 7th Hussars . 319
Woolsthorpe Manor House . 104
Wordsworth, The New Poet Laureate . 259
Wreckers and Coast Guard . 61
Wrecks of the Reliance and the Conqueror Indiamen . 57
Wrestling in Cumberland . 278
Wrestling Scene in "As you like it" . 423

XANTHIAN Marbles . 97—98

YORKSHIRE Bank . 15
Yucatan, General View of the Ruins of Lamal . 238

ZOOLOGICAL Society's Gardens, Regent's Park . 278
Zoological Gardens, Surrey, Giraffes, &c., at . 222

INDEX TO THE ENGRAVINGS.

Page.

ABBEVILLE, Rue des Changes . 170
Aberdeen, Lord . . . 374
Abinger, Lord . . . 151
Absence of a Day . . . 30
Afghan Bear . . . 207
Akbar Khan, Mahommed . 359
Albertazzi and Paul Bedford in "L'Elisir d'Amore" . . 326
Alexander, Mr., Philips, at . 339
Alderman's Honour, Reading . 98
Algoa Bay . . . 430
Alice and Lucrece . . 408
Almack's, Opening the Season . 271
Amazement . . . 248
Ambassadors at the Levee . 211
Ameers, Surrender of the . 255
American President, The . 246
Anderson, Mr., as Mare Antony . 310
Anderson, Mr., as Othello . 214
Arasian Gipsy Woman's Toilet . 107
Arch Fiend (Milton) . . 116
Aérial Steam Carriage . . 234
Art-Union of London, Drawing of Prizes . . . 287
Ascot, Affray at . . . 438
Ascot Heath Races.—Grand Stand —The Race.—Ascot Plate—Royal Hunt Cup—Ascot Cup—Plan of Race Course—Royal Stand—Jockeys—The Artful Couriers 418—419
Asmodeus, Madame Vestris as . 403
Astley's Amphitheatre, Interior of . 223
Astley's Amphitheatre . . 222
Asvavi, Gregori Country . . 131
"As you like it," Wrestling Scene in 423
Athens, New English Protestant Church at . . . 311
Auricula, The, (Floriculture) . 378
Aurora of Guido . . . 391

BADEN, Princes of . . 199
Barnes Church . . . 278
Battersea Normal School . 412
Bedford, Paul, in "L'Elisir d'Amore" . . . 326
Belisarius of Gerard . . 240
Bell-ringers, The Lancashire, at the Adelphi Theatre . . 330
Bell Rock Lighthouse . . 191
Belooche Chief . . . 254
Belooche (Semilian) . . 254
Belooches War Arms . . 254
Benedict, Mr. Macready as, advancing from the Arbour . 102
Berkshire Lady, The . . 372
Bethlem Hospital . . 227
Bethlem Hospital, Plan of . 208
Birmingham Town Hall (two) . 90
Blackwall, Divine at . . 247
Blind Boy at one of his Pranks . 107
Blind Chinese Children, &c., Reading 129
Blind, The London Society's Modes for Teaching to Read and Cipher 129
Boeuf Gras, Procession of the (Carnival at Paris) . . . 141
Bombay, Harbour of . . 318
Bombay, Tablet Rowan . . 318
Bond street 329
Boodwick, Peter, M.P. . . 6
Boston, U.S., Presidence, &c. . 442
Botanic Gardens, Regent's park, Rock Garden . . . 17
Boulogne Harbour . . . 57
Boyer, ex-President of Hayti . 341
Brambill House . . . 137
Brazils, Wedding Carriage of the Emperor of . . . 170
Brentford, Lafe Post . . 203
British and Foreign Schools, Borough-road . . . 349
British Guiana, View of, Map of, and Ship in . . . 166
British Institution (six engravings from pictures in) . . 107
British Yeoman, The . . 367
Brougham Castle, Ruins of . 338
Brougham Hall . . . 32
Broughara, Lord . . . 143
Brust, Captain . . . 330
Bruce, Crowning of . . 211
Brunel, Sir Isambert . 226 227
Buckingham Palace . . 228
Buckingham Palace, The New Royal Chapel . . . 235
Burdett, Bart., Sir Francis . 376
Burghfield New Church, Berks, 382—82
Butterfly Orchis (Floriculture) . 106
Byron's Bay, Sandwich Islands . 68

CABINET Ministers at the Levee 242
Cabul, Prison at . . . 359
Calais Harbour, after Stanfield . 231
Calcutta, Palace of the Governor-General's 112
Calehouse School, Dinner of the Cambrians from the Castle Hill . 193
Cambridge New Assize Courts . 241
Canon Mills, Great Hall at the . 382
Canterbury, The Archbishop of . 174
Canterbury, The Archbishop of, and Bishops at Levee . . 2
Canton, British Factory at . . 182
Cape of Good Hope . . . 49
Carisbrook Castle, Keep of, &c. . 90
Carnival at Paris . . . 154
Carmelite Home . . . 175
Caspar, Herr Stanfield as . . 423
Central Criminal Court—M'Naughton's Trial 171
Chalmers, Dr. 410
Chancery, Court of . . . 25
Charity Dinner . . . 383
Charles I., Execution of . . 56
Charlton Church . . . 80
Chase, The, Turf, and the Road . (Four illustrations) . . . 100
Chess—9—78—16.—17 218 33 —16—93—310—19 41—77—406 —440
China—The British Factory at Canton 182
China—Golden Island . . 174
Chinese Mandarins . . . 174
Chinese Sycee Silver, and Dollars 174
Chinese, Temples of the . . 20
Chinese Tribute Money entering the Mint, &c. . . . 174

Chiswick Gardens, Conservatory at 334
Chiswick Gardens, Iron Tent at 331
Choosing a Profession . . 242
Christening, The Royal . . 403
Christ's Hospital, Public Supper of the Scholars at . . 179
Chrysanthemum (Floriculture) . 44
Clarkes 8
Coalgate 266
Coal pits, Bottom of a Shaft . 266
Coal pits, Newcastle Men playing at Quoits 266
Colosseum, The late General . 246
Colonne Catherdral . 371—77
Colt, The . . . 211
Confirmation at St Andrew's, Holborn 322
Copan, Idols of, and Head of supposed Royal Personage of . 218
Cork Temperance Soirée . . 123
Cork Total Abstinence Society, Procession of the . . 391
Cornish Wreckers and Coast Guard, Affray between . . . 61
Corrie, Bishop of Madras, Statue of 195
Coursing 133
Coventry Churches and Pageants . 302
Cowper's Summer-house at Olney 215
Cows 1—3 Saxtons, 41—32—83—101—75.
Cupid's Heart-warmer . . 191
Curzane Match . . . 82
Curtius (Haydn) . . . 250
Cutting a Dash . . . 150

DALE Abbey, Derbyshire . 168
Dandy Inn at Flower, and Seedy . 175
Death, A Gentleman . . 262
De Grey, Lord . . . 146
De la Warr's, Lord, Signature 242
Derby, The Winner of the Design, School of . 375 7.
Dickens, Charles . . 229
Dissidence Abbey . . 201
Diving at Blackwall . . 208
Dog Bill, The . . . 244
Don Giovanni, Signor Mario as . 242
Dover Railway . . 75 77
Drawing-room, The . . 70
Drury Lane Theatre—Her Majesty's Box, &c. Lighting the Queen Out B x . . . 422
Dubba, Plan of the Battle of . 257
Dublin Castle Courtyard, and Sackville-street . . . 130
Duchess of Lanster, Launch of the, at Kingstown . . 24
Duke of Cornwall Office, Somerset House . . . 331 332
Dulwich College . . . 314
Dunsford Castle . . . 175
Dungeness Lighthouse . . 42
Dunstable Priory Church . 287
Dwarkanath Tagore . . 130

EAST India House . . 113
Ede, Mr. . . . 101
Edinton Testimonial . . 404
Egyptian Hall, Mansion House—Lord Mayor's Banquet . 270
Elephant, The, as the English Opera House . . . 8
Elfrida, Helen Faucit as . 360
Elizabeth, Queen . . 327
Ellenborough, Lord . . 92
Elsler, Fanny . . . 135
Elphinstone, Esq., Howard, M P . 223
Elsdon Place, Bridge at . 137
England and France, or the Sisters 187 215 2.0—221 232—247—247 —263 264 277—276—276 —327 328—343—377—377 392 393 408 —409.
Envelope's Letter . . 320
Epping Hunt . . . 271
Epping Hunt, Unearthing the Stag 271
Epping Hunt, Stag at Bay . 271
Epsom Races—Leaving Town—Hand Draws Horse Van—Ringing to Saddle . . . 386
Epsom Races.—The Start Jockeys Mounted—After the Race—Returning Home . . . 387
Epsom Races — Winner of the Derby 387
Epsom Races Race Course . 388
Emerson Vincent on the Manchester and Sheffield Railway . 52
Execution of Charles I. . 56
Exeter, The Bishop of . . 191
Exeter Hall . . . 323
Exton Church . . . 310

FAIR on the Thames . . 132
Farringford, The . . 367
Fashions, The 9 32—44—64—80—101 —75—71 212 231—44 61 —78 93—314—21—342—50—90 104—24 —46
Father's Grave, The, after Horsley 354
Faust, Helen, as Elfrida . 360
Finding of Moses . . 109
Fire Annihilator . . 191
Forest Days, Song of the . 305
Formosa, Island of . . 182
Fossasa 282
—— as Don Giovanni . 327
Fortune telling . . . 370
For Hunting . . . 109
Freemasons' Hall, Anniversary Dinner of School for Female Children 391
Freemasons' School for Female Children . . . 391
Free Trade Banquet at Manchester 96
French Chambers, Opening of the . 24
Friend, How to Use a . . 263
Frost, Meetings of the Society of 407
Frugal Pair, "Corner Memory Thompson's" House at Hampstead 207
Fulham Church . . . 9

GABRIELLE of De la Roche . 8
Gadsmill, Revd . . . 143
General Post Office, Interior of the, Posting the "Illustrated News . 148
General Post Office, St. Martin's-le-Grand . . . 318

Geneva, View of . . 102
Giraffes and their Nubian Attendants, Surrey Zoological Gardens 322
Glaucarium . . . 132
Gloriana, Launch of the . 291
Goldman, Church of University of 209
Gough, Sir Hugh . . 117
Goulston's Manufactory, Fire at . 48
Granges, Lady . . . 215
Great Britain, Shipwreck of the . 209
Great Northern Steamer . . 10
Great Seal of England recently affixed to the Chinese Treaty 21—21
Greenwich Fair . 270 -70
—One Tree Hill . . 270
Greenwich Hospital, Fancy Fair, Punted Hall . . . 401
Greenwich Literary Institution . 195
Grenville, Mr. . . . 270
Gresham College, The New . 427
Greta Hall, Southey's House . 321
Grenville, Mr. . . . 215
Grisi Madame . . . 438
Grosvenor House, New Façade . 426
Guadalupe 286
— Earthquake at Pointe-à-Pitre 286
Guard Room, St. James's, Levee, 1 Guest, Mr. . . . 104
Gymnasia and Playground, Gray's Inn-lane 333

HAGAR and Ishmael . . 339
Hampden Memorial . . 431
Hampton Court Gardens—Holiday Group 402
Hampton Court Palace . . 402
Hampton Races . . . 393
Hanging Committee room in the Hanover, His Majesty the King of 110
Hanover's Marriage Dance of . 110
Hanover Square Concert Rooms . 43
Hanwell Asylum . . . 385
Hanwell Church . . . 385
Hardinge, Sir Henry . . 311
Hare Hunting . . . 141
Harford House . . . 295
Havre, View of . . . 153
Hayden's Curtius . . . 28
Hemlip Hall . . . 29
Heygate, Bart., Sir William, the new Chamberlain . . . 311
Highgate, New Church . . 149
Highland Cearnach defending a Pass 150
Highland Dress . . . 149
Highland Mary, Monument to . 159
Hill, Mr. Rowland . . 322
Home and Colonial Infant School Society, Gray's Inn-lane, Gymnasia, &c., of . . . 333
Horse Guards, Band at the Levee 241
Horse, Haydon's Curtius . 194
Horses (after Ed. Landseer, R.A.) 350
Horticultural Fête, Chiswick . 366
Horticultural Mas of Business . 366
Horticultural Society at Newcastle 445
House of Commons . . 72
Hull, Great Thornton Street Chapel 378
Hume, Mr. Joseph (M.P.) . 108
Hyde Park Corner . . 360
Hymenal 20
Hyderabad, British Residency at 254
—Surrender of the Ameers . 255

"ILLUSTRATED London News," Publishing Office of the . . . 218
Improvements proposed in the City of London 426
Independent College, The Lancashire 294
India, Military Decorations of Native Troops of . . . 66
India, Palace of the Governor General at Calcutta . . 112
India, Procession of Governor General of . . . 112
Indigent Blind Asylum . . 401
Indus Boat under Sail . . 318
Isleworth Charity Schools . 331
Jack in the Green . . 367
Jester, The (Will Somers) . 199
Jewel Room, The . . 14
Johnstone's Cliff Crane . 124
Jolliffe, Hylton, Esq. . . 62
Judges at the Levee . . 242
"Julius Cæsar," Scene from the Historical Play of . . 310
Justice giving Short Weight . 322

KEAN, Tablet to the Memory of . 25
Kean, Edmund, The Monk Bridal Procession . . . 202
Kensall Green Cemetery . 361
Kensall Green Cemetery, Procession in, on occasion of the Funeral of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex . 306
Kensington Palace . . 306
Kite, Captain, and Master-Pigeon 262
Knightsbridge, Church of St. Paul, Organ at . . . 392

LABLACHE . . . 175
"Lady of the Lake," Tableau from 117
Lancashire Bell-ringers . . 330
Lancashire Independent College 254
Lancaster Castle . . . 176
Laure, Sir Peter . . . 91
Law Courts, The New . . 56
Leclerc, The Right Hon. Charles Shaw, Speaker of the House of Commons 93
Lecoux, Madlle Camille . . 14
Levee at St. James's, Prince Albert's 242
Lex Talionis (the Maid of the River, after Cooper, R.A.) 355
Life Boat, The Brighton . 382
Life Buoy 174
Life Ladder, Prince Albert's . 28
Lincoln's Inn Fields, New Hall and Library at . . . 190
"Little Devil," Scene from . 423
"Little Devil," Mr. Strickland in the 423
Liverpool Collegiate Institution . 17

Liverpool Great Steeple Chase . 147
Lodia Two-Edged (Floriculture) 153
London and Westminster Bank . 149
London Wall, The Old . . 442
Long Countenance . . 52
Lord Mayor, The Right Hon. the 270
Love makes labour pleasure . 280
Love, Mr., the Polyphonist . 315
Lovegall, Miss . . . 101
Luxembourg, The, or Chamber of Peers 24
Lyndhurst, Lord . . . 224

M'IANS Highland Feud . . 199
M'Naughten, Daniel . . 80
M'Naughten's Trial . . 141
Macready, Mr., as Cardinal . 435
Macready, Mr., as Hamlet . 310
Macready, Mr., as Colonel Green . 291
Macready, Mr., as Macduff . 425
Madonna of Desola Roche . 292
Magna Charta, Signing of . 441
Mahmud, Khan of the Sultan . 112
Malcolm Graeme, Mrs. Shaw as . 117
Malby, Captain . . . 202
Manby's Captain, Mortar Life Line 231
Manners Sutton, the Speaker . 374
Manoel, Signor, as Don Ottavio . 424
Marguesas Island, Resolution Bay 33
Marquesas Islanders . . 68
Marseilles Harbour . . 159
Mather, Rebecca . . 52
Mathews, Charles, as Vincentina D'Lasti 413
May Garland . 333 366—367—370
May day Money Distribution of 241 250
Military Decorations of the Native Troops of India . . 66
Milton's Pastoral Works — Arch Friend—Satan's Address to the Sun—Onslaught of the Tiger on the Infant—Bridal Salutation of Eve by the Angel—Temptation of Eve by the Serpent . . . 116
Mirfield, Lieutenant, Stone at . 32
Mitchell Island . . . 287
Monkey Museum . . . 344
Monkeys, Cuba, Mrs. . . 128
Model Prison, or Clerkenwell Prison 5
Monk's Cell . . . 280
Monteith, Sir Moses, Testimonial to (six illustrations) 150
Montreal, Entrance to . . 150
Moore, Sir Graham . . 180
Mont St Bernard Avalanche . 437
Moore, Sir John, Death of, &c. . 286
Moore, Thomas . . . 372
Moore's Sporting Almanack . 5
Morocco Arabs at the Victoria Theatre 430
Mortlake Church . . . 153
Mount Etna, Eruption of . 153
Mount St. Bernard Convent . 180
Mount

GETTY CENTER LIBRARY
3 3125 00600 7575